[Answer] The Israelis have now been on our territory for over 30 years, and they have occupied our land. This is a fact. Up to now, the Russians have been our friends. They have not fought against us.

[Question] Thus, Israel is more dangerous than the Soviet Union?

[Answer] For the Arab countries there is only one danger at the moment, and that is Israel. What you believe might become a danger is not a topical problem for us.

[Question] Can it be said that Israel is an immediate danger to the Arab countries while the Soviet Union is not?

[Answer] Every country has its priorities, and we cannot give hypothetical assumptions priority over facts.

[Question] In that case, the invasion in Afghanistan is not expansionism?

[Answer] This is no problem for the Arabs. This is not the issue at stake. That would be as if we were to fight against windmills, but we are not Don Quixotes. We do not struggle against an imaginary enemy but against a real danger: and that is Israel, which has occupied our country. Do you actually ask us to abandon this struggle, and together with you and with the Americans to struggle against something imaginary? I do not understand that. If you expect us to deal with your problems, then you must in turn concern yourself with our problems.

SCHMIDT TO MEET WITH HONECKER IN GDR 'NEXT MONTH'

LD231906 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1800 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Text] It has been learned in Bonn that Federal Chancellor Schmidt is expected to meet with Chairman of the GDR State Council Erich Honecker in the GDR at the end of next month. The places mentioned for the meeting are Leipzig or the Rostock area. Following support for the meeting with Honecker from the Berlin CDU politician Von Weizsaecker, the CDU leadership has also adopted this line. Like Weizsaecker, CDU Chairman Kohl recommended that Schmidt should first have a discussion with President Carter in the United States.

APEL: BUNDESWEHR WILL NOT INCREASE FORCES IN WAKE OF AFGHAN EVENTS

LD232052 Hamburg DPA in German 1925 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Essen--Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel has told NEUE RHEIN-RUHR-ZEITUNG (NRZ) (Thursday edition) in an interview that the Bundeswehr sees no need to react to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan by increasing its numerical strength or extending the conscription period.

Asked whether a Soviet military intervention in Yugoslavia would present NATO with a state of defense, Apel said that there are no indications of such a development. But everyone knows that involvement in this region would create a very dangerous situation in Europe.

Asked about a possible extension of the area covered by NATO, along the lines of "Bundeswehr to the Hindu Kush," he said that such a notion is worse than fantasy. "Along with our allies, we are firmly resolved not to redefine NATO's mission or the geographical area covered by the alliance."

Increased military aid for Turkey, which Bonn has decided upon, will not be paid from the defense budget but will be counted by NATO as a defense item. Regarding this year's Bundeswehr budget, the minister said that additional funds may have to be provided for fuel procurement. The sum involved is about DM250 million.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON WASHINGTON VISIT, OLYMPICS

DW231245 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0547 GMT 23 Jan 80 DW

[Text] [Question] Following your talks with President Carter you told newsmen in Washington today--or rather yesterday--that you had succeeded in explaining, and selling, the European ideas concerning a common Western strategy. The way you put it, even though these ideas do not claim to be exclusive, they did not encounter any objections in Washington. Could you expound on this some more with respect to the tasks which the Europeans ought to assume?

[Answer] I agreed with the U.S. Government that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan constitutes a challenge to the Third World, to Europe and to the United States, and therefore the Europeans and the United States cannot define their interests in a divergent manner. A common interest exists which requires common action; this in turn demands a joint strategy. As far as we are concerned, it is important, for example, that our ally Turkey be supported in its efforts toward economic and political stabilization of the country. It is just as important to help Pakistan. The idea which we had advanced to the European Community, namely to offer economic and political cooperation to the Gulf states, has fallen on fertile soil here in the United States.

Thus it turns out that our side is advancing proposals which the Americans consider important. My suggestion that this should not preclude any other proposals is intended to show that we naturally expect suggestions from other Europeans and from the United States, too, pertaining to an overall concept.

As for the reaction as a whole, there was agreement that our efforts toward arms control and disarmament must be continued, meaning that the proposals adopted by the West in the Western alliance in Brussels in December must remain on the agenda: namely proposals concerning negotiations on medium-range missiles, proposals concerning the Vienna troop reduction negotiations and also our proposals, above all, concerning confidence-building measures to be dealt with at the CSCE followup conference in Madrid.

[Question] Listening to this catalog one might get the idea that it really does not contain a lot of new things with respect to the reaction to the Soviet Union's provocation.

[Answer] Naturally all these suggestions have been considered in the past. But the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan makes it clear to every country that wants to preserve the independence of the states of the Third World that aid measures are most necessary now for those states of the Third World that want to preserve their independence. We--the Western states--do not want to extend our influence. We do not want to establish zones of predominance. We are interested in seeing that the nonalined states are able to really safeguard and develop their nonalined positions. This is why we want to have a partnership of equal rights with these countries. But we do not want to establish areas of predominance, as does the Soviet Union.

I think that developments in past months--the vote in the United Nations as well--show that the Third World realizes more and more that the states of Europe and our allies in America are prepared to engage in honest partnership without predominance.

[Question] After reading the U.S. press, one gets the impression that the Americans--in their process of forming an opinion--are trying to react more rationally now and in a more coordinated way. One measure, however, seems to me to be somewhat more emotional, namely the Olympic boycott. Do you have any reservation in this matter concerning the American approach?

[Answer] Everybody knows that the U.S. Government has not made a rash decision with regard to its approach to the Olympic games. This has been discussed for a very long time by the U.S. Government. It is understandable that we are not expected to show an immediate reaction. It is realized that the Federal Government and its European partners will have to discuss this difficult problem most thoroughly and that they will try to achieve a joint European position.

[Question] Do you think this boycott will occupy an important position in the general concept?

[Answer] I would consider it wrong to create the impression that this measure--whether one views it positively or not--would be the central answer of the West, so to speak, to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. I think this would limit the problem.

[Question] Is it possible that the Europeans, the community of nine states, would face problems in finding a joint platform if France were not to take part in such a measure?

[Answer] We have always been open in discussions of the European Community with the aim of achieving a common position. I assume that our French friends will do the same.

BONN TO AID TURKEY, PAKISTAN, COOPERATE WITH GULF

LD231532 Hamburg DPA in German 1451 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government today took its first specific steps in response to the crisis in the Middle East. The Federal Cabinet, presided over by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, decided to introduce within the OECD framework a single, exceptional financial aid grant for NATO partner Turkey. In addition, Bonn will participate in consolidated international financial aid for Pakistan, which borders on Soviet-occupied Afghanistan. Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher was also asked to prepare, within the EEC framework, for the Federal Republic's participation in political and economic cooperation with the Gulf States, including Iraq.

The federal foreign minister, who returned from Washington just this morning, briefed the cabinet on the outcome of his talks with U.S. President Jimmy Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. Government spokesman Armin Gruenewald told the press after the meeting that the Federal Government sees possible dangers of escalating the international situation. Gruenewald's remarks indicated that this referred to the situation in the Middle East with the underlying fears of a Soviet invasion of Iran as well.

According to Gruenewald, the Federal Government will utilize its opportunities to help work out, together with its allies and partners, shared concepts for overcoming the crisis. To this end, it is in close contact with the governments of the United States; Italy, in its capacity as president of the EEC; France; and Great Britain.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Commentary

DW231255 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 23 Jan 80 p 3 DW

[Article signed GRO.: "Turkey, the Godchild"]

[Text] The Federal Republic plans to give considerably more aid to Turkey in the future. That is the upshot of the talks Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher had in Washington with the Turkish ambassador, among others. If one views the contents of the talks more closely, Bonn will play the decisive role for the country located between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean, particularly because the United States will need more money for arms in the Indian Ocean in the new world political crisis.

This indicates two aims of Bonn's foreign policy: More commitment for states of the Third World that lean toward the Western camp, and cooperation with the United States under the banner of "Atlantic Solidarity." The first could result in partnership with developing countries. If development policy can be defined that way, it must be welcomed. But in Turkey, with its unstable political conditions, the growing tensions between the state people and the minorities (Kurds and Armenians) and its almost hopeless social and economic situations, containing only the economic aspects will certainly not suffice. Bonn must insure that the democratic forces between Ararat and the Bosporus are strengthened and that a reformist policy is pursued as well. Otherwise all efforts will be in vain.

Whether a political linkage to the U.S. global strategy will make sense, can only be seen when the present world crisis has ended. At present hardly anything else will be possible in view of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan: but if the result should be intensification instead of mitigation of international tensions, this enterprise can become dangerous.

GOVERNMENT REFRAINING FROM TAKING STAND ON OLYMPICS

Gruenewald did not mention a date for this. He said that it is up to the Italians, who currently hold the presidency in the EC Council, to issue invitations for a discussion of the boycott. It is possible that it will be discussed today and tomorrow at a conference of the political directors of the EC foreign ministries in preparations for the foreign ministers conference on 19 February.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Comment

DW221055 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 22 Jan 80 p 3 DW

[Karl-Heinz Kruma editorial: "Boycott--Political Only"]

[Text] No matter what one's stand on the issue may be, never before, even if the Olympic games have often been plunged into political shallows, has an influential statesman used sports as a political weapon so openly and rigorously as has the U.S. President through his demand that the Olympic games in Moscow be canceled relocated or, if this cannot be done, that at least the dispatch of a team to the "capital of the aggressor" be waived. Granted, with a firm view toward the forthcoming presidential elections and toward those 69 percent of his compatriots who, according to a public opinion poll, recommend Moscow be punished by withdrawing the games, Carter did not mention a boycott; yet, what else would his demand boil down to when he expressly expects the solidarity of the Western allies and that of as many other countries as possible?

Surely crisis situations in the world are conceivable which would forbid the holding of Olympic games. But following the Soviet military action in Afghanistan, the United States, its partners and an outraged world public were determined to counteract Moscow's impairment of world peace above all with political instruments. What offered a remarkable example for the success of a political offensive was the devastating defeat of the Soviet Union in the UN General Assembly vote.

Yet it may be predicted without any plaintiveness that a boycott of the Moscow games would have devastating consequences with respect to both sports and politics. Quite apart from the fact that the expectation that Moscow, worrying about the games which are being prepared with such great expenditure, would immediately withdraw its divisions from Afghanistan appears to be rather starry-eyed, Carter's attempt to make sports the "scapegoat," as many of his representatives say in astonishment, would definitely spell the death of the Olympics.

Olympic games, however, and sports as a whole have always been a small, though importance chance for contacts and talks beyond borders in a world shaken by crises, despite all hypocrisy and irritations that have occurred. The Germans especially will have to recall at present, when solidarity at any cost is demanded of them, how the first gestures of reconciliation after 1945, after all these terrible things done in the German name, came as a result of sports contacts with citizens of other countries. So what could be the sense of severing the thin, connecting elements of sports, too, in a world political phase in which peace is more endangered than in previous years?

It is also necessary to draw attention to the "fact" that the democracies of the West so far have always been very proud of letting sports in their countries be free and independent of the state, unlike the socialist countries. Quite obviously Carter has called this principle into question and thus given Moscow a chance to launch a worldwide counter-offensive, climaxing in the charge that the United States and the West have abolished the Olympic laws for political reasons.

We may assume that a boycott of the games will provoke the spontaneous solidarity of a Soviet people disappointed with its leadership. Conversely, Moscow would need to fear the holding of the games, for 12,000 athletes and several hundred thousand Western Olympic guests, more visitors than the Soviet Union has ever received in such a short period of time, would have the marvelous chance to develop, in talks with Soviet citizens in Moscow, Kiev, Tallin and elsewhere, an individual political offensive in which many people in the USSR could be told what really happened in Afghanistan.

Such an offensive would serve Western ideas of freedom and peace in the world more than would Carter's demand to remain sitting in the locker rooms at home in the summer of 1980, feeling insulted or full of glee. Olympic games proceed in accordance with the rules of the International Olympic Committee, which Moscow respects and guarantees in the preparation, and certainly also in the implementation, of the games. Hence, as IOC President Lord Killanin says, the participation by athletes from the United States or from Western Europe cannot be misinterpreted as an approval of the Soviet aggression. Contrary to 1936, when many people perhaps had no, or all too naive, ideas about the real objectives of the National Socialist system, the broad world public, as shown by the UN vote, does have a very precise opinion on Afghanistan.

It is an incontestable fact that any country hosting Olympic games is also using these games as a chance to represent itself. It is in this very sphere, too, where the chance for political protest lies for the politicians. Nobody and nothing, neither Olympic rules nor any contractual agreements, can induce kings or heads of state, government chiefs or ministers to provide the games with additional solemnity and dignity by their presence in Moscow as usual. So anyone talking of boycott ought to talk only of political boycott, but let sports do what sports are intended to do in keeping with their mission and rules.

BRANDT URGED TO HELP SEEK SAKHAROV'S RELEASE

LD231450 Hamburg DPA in German 1353 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Frankfurt--Five friends and close colleagues of Prof Andrey Sakharov today appealed to the SPD chairman and Nobel Peace Prize winner, Willy Brandt, to "make efforts without delay for Sakharov's release." This was announced in Frankfurt by the Society for Human Rights.

The telegram, signed by Aleksandr Ginzburg, Dr Kronid Lyubarskiy, Dr Valentin Turchin, Gelina Salova and Yuriy Belov, states that Sakharov's arrest represents a dangerous attempt "to reintroduce the terror of the Stalin era". With the present fight for Sakharov, all decent people would be working for the peace and human rights, to which he had devoted his life. The signatories expressed the hope that Willy Brandt would also join this fight.

GOVERNMENT CRITICIZES PUNISHMENT OF SAKHAROV, OLYMPICS BOYCOTT

LD231308 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Text] In Paris, the government, in its regular Wednesday meeting, has expressed its sense of shock over the Sakharov affair. But in connection with the Moscow games, Paris still refuses to interfere in the sports area. Here is the declaration, the double declaration just made by Elysee spokesman Pierre Hunt:

[Begin recording] The government expresses its sense of shock over the placing under forced residence of Andrey Sakharov, holder of the Nobel Peace Prize, recalling his courageous action in defense of human rights and respect for the Helsinki principles. The government emphasizes that such a measure is inconsistent with the spirit of the Final Act of Helsinki and is a disturbing indication amid present developments in the international situation.

The status of the Olympics rules adopted at the initiative of France, whose role had been decisive in reestablishing the Olympic tradition, makes the International Committee the sole authority entitled to choose the venue of the games, and entrusts national Olympic committees exclusively with the task of organizing the participation of the athletes of their respective countries. Consequently, the government has no intention of interfering in the decisions of the French National Olympic and Sports Committee.

As it has indicated, the government views as unacceptable the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, and believes that an end should be put ot it in order to restore a situation consistent with the rights of the Afghan people and the requirements of international peace. It believes that calling the games into question does not constitute the appropriate means of achieving this objective. [end recording]

USSR'S KORNIYENKO DENIES SAKHAROV ARRESTED, EXILED

LD232216 Paris Domestic Service in French 2200 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Sakharov has neither been arrested nor sent into exile: At least, this is what is stated by Mr Korniyenko, the Soviet deputy minister of foreign affairs, who arrived in Paris this evening on board the same plane as Jacques Chaban-Delmas. The Soviet minister, who is due to meet French leaders tomorrow, declined to provide further explanations about the Sakharov affair.

CHABAN-DELMAS EXPLAINS REASONS FOR SHORTENED USSR VISIT

[Summary] Jacques Chaban-Delmas arrived at Roissy Airport at about 2030 after cutting short his visit to Moscow. "Jacques Chaban-Delmas believes that his presence in the Soviet Union would in some way have sanctioned the arrest and exile of Andrey Sakharov, leader of the Soviet dissidents. He explained his actions to journalists when he got off the plane.

[Begin Chaban-Delmas recording] "Having come to Moscow bringing with me the hopes of some of the families of political prisoners, a sudden and reverberating event demonstrated to me that it was not the appropriate time for such hopes. As a guest of the Soviet leaders, I could not intervene in this public case without interfering in the internal affairs of the USSR. Nor could I--by keeping silent--appear to be satisfied with this striking effect of a system which is certainly not our own. For the present, then, it was no longer appropriate for me to remain there. That is why I returned.

I regret that I had to leave. Leaving Moscow in these conditions--3 months after a visit to Washington--I note that once again, France--faithful to its alliances and a messenger of peace--has a proper role to play in averting war and safeguarding the essential factors. [end recording]

"The entire world condemns the arrest of Sakharov; the French Government has expressed its shock. The French Communist Party itself has deplored and disapproved of this affair. This evening about 500 people demonstrated outside the Soviet Embassy in Paris; another demonstration is planned for next Wednesday at the same place to call for the release of Academician Andrey Sakharov."

MARCHAIS INTERVIEWED ON STAND ON AFGHANISTAN, SOVIET VISIT

LD212356 Paris Domestic Television Service in French 1930 GMT 21 Jan 80 LD

["Cards on the Table" program interview with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais conducted by correspondents Jean-Pierre Elkabach and Lain Duhamel--live]

[Excerpts] [Marchais] What would we look like if we stood around with arms folded every time a people takes up the battle for social progress, democracy and socialism, and every time imperialism intervenes, if we said: Go ahead, dear imperialists, feel free. We are for the principle of noninterference in internal affairs, after all, and we remain firmly attached to this principle. Go on slaughtering democrats, patriots, workers and intellectuals who want to win their independence and their sovereignty and who want to stop dying of hunger, to stop being illiterate. If we had this passive attitude, this negative attitude, we would be a funny kind of revolutionary. You see, gentlemen, we are a revolutionary party, and that is why we have resolutely (supported) all the forces struggling against imperialism, for the aims I have just mentioned. And every time there are interventions like that, we shall stand at the side of the democratic forces who are struggling for progress.

[Question] Why is it that all these reasons you have just been outlining at great length--why is it that Enrico Berlinguer and Santiago Carrillo, secretaries general of the Italian and Spanish Communist parties, think just the opposite of you?

[Answer] For a simple reason [words indistinct]. I cannot understand how it is that you still haven't understood that my name is Marchais, that one of their names is Berlinguer, and the other's Carrillo. [passage indistinct] You still don't understand that the PCF, (on all questions), whatever they may be, determines its policy completely independently and that we do so without consulting either my friend Enrico Berlinguer, or Leonid Brezhnev, or Santiago Carrillo, or anyone else. We do it by asking first of all our Central Committee [word indistinct] determines our orientation, and that is how we work. But you seem to find it difficult [passage indistinct].

I sometimes hear on the radio or television or read in the papers that a kind of doctrine has been worked out. They talk about the partitioning at Yalta, that at Yalta the world's affairs were sorted out. There you are: It was cut in half, with socialism on one side and capitalism on the other. That's it; nothing must be upset. And some people go even further on this basis. They say: This is what peaceful coexistence means. Oh, no; if peaceful coexistence is that, I'm not playing. I'm not playing for a very important reason, namely, that that would mean for French workers that they are condemned forever to remain exploited, that there will always be exploiters and the exploited. For us, peaceful coexistence means that (the huge) problems which may arise in relations between states must not be solved by means of war. But peaceful coexistence is the class struggle in all its forms.

On Afghanistan, I asked questions, and I posed the following fundamental question to Leonid Brezhnev: I said to him, you are the head of a great state [words indistinct] and it is important for we French Communists to know whether the policy of the Soviet Union is really still a policy of peace, a policy of detente, a policy of disarmament. It is important for us to know whether the objectives which you set yourselves are the same as ours, that is to say, the inalienable right of every people to its independence and sovereignty, whether all that remains the policy of the CPSU. I said to him: I am putting the question to you--and the comrades in my delegation can bear me out--I am putting the question to you firmly and in a serious manner.

The reply from Leonid Brezhnev was unequivocal. Moreover, I'll tell you, there was a moment when the interpreter had a question mark in his eyes, as if he were a little surprised by my question.

Then he said to me in reply: Comrade Marchais, I can confirm to you that the policy of the CPSU has not changed. And if we intervened in Afghanistan, it was because we were forced to do so. We hesitated for a long, long time. Taraki had already asked us to afford him military aid against intervention in his internal affairs by Pakistan. We did not do it at the time. When Amin came to power, he asked us to apply the agreement of 1978. We did not do it. We always tried to prevent this intervention. And we knew that this intervention could contribute to creating a climate of tension for a time. We did all we could, but we could finally not do anything else. So evident was the Pakistani intervention, the external intervention directed by the Americans and others, that if we had not intervened it would have meant that we had not respected the obligations we had undertaken in signing the (?treaty of) 1978. And he added immediately afterwards: Having said this, you can tell your comrades that the policy of the CPSU is unchanged and that it will remain unchanged forever, because peace and disarmament are our policy.

[Question] (?You have given the impression that) there will not be another Kabul. But how long will they remain in Afghanistan? Aren't they afraid of getting bogged down like the Americans in Vietnam by a guerrilla resistance?

[Answer] He simply told me this: We will remain in Afghanistan as long as is necessary, that is to say, to put an end to the external interventions in Afghan affairs. The moment that that question is resolved (?we will withdraw) our troops. I will add that he even added that the Soviet troops have as their mission not to fight inside the country, but only to protect the borders against infiltration from outside.

I have noticed that contrary to what has been said on French television, both on TF1 and Antenne 2, the reporters who are beginning to come back from this region are giving (?accounts) of the situation which do not fully correspond to the situation.

L'HUMANITE JUSTIFIES SOVIET INTERVENTION

LD231657 [Editorial Report LD] Paris L'HUMANITE in French 18 January 1980 carries on page 1 and 5 a 1,200-word Jean-Pierre Gaudard article in which he condemns the West's denunciation of the Soviet policy in Afghanistan and points to instances of Western "interference" in the affairs of other countries. Gaudard points out that "military aggression against a sovereign country is just one form of imperialist domination" and goes on to list methods of economic domination, alleging that "the shah of Iran's plans were drawn up by the United States via the U.S. Embassy in Tehran." Gaudard states that "these factors should be considered when assessing events in Afghanistan."

PS' JOXE VIEWS OLYMPICS BOYCOTT, MARCHAIS TV ADDRESS

[Joseph Paletou interview with Pierre Joxe, French Socialist Party secretary--live]

[Excerpts] [Question] You will tell us later, Pierre Joxe, what your impressions are of George Marchais' statements, but let us start with a matter that perhaps brings you closer to each other. Is the PS in agreement with the PCF in saying that the Olympic games must not be boycotted, whatever President Carter may say?

[Answer] The PS has always defined its position in this field independently from the other parties, including the PCF. For example, at the time of the Mundial in Argentina we were of the opinion that it is necessary that the major sport meetings should always be held because they are a means and a time for exchanges between peoples.

[Question] A last question. In general terms, to come back to what you said at the beginning, the Marchais case, the Marchais television phenomenon which attracts the attention of and (?appeals) to his followers as well as opponents. A simple question. Is Georges Marchais credible?

[Answer] I believe that a deputy, a leader of a major party of the left as he is, has better things to do under present circumstances than transforming himself into an advocate of the Soviet Union's external policy. There are so many things to say about what is happening in France, on the external policy of France, on the economic policy of France, on the situation of employment in our country, even of France's diplomatic situation. To devote an hour, 1 and 1/2 hours, to come forward for the second time as an advocate for a poor, foreign cause--this in my opinion is not time usefully spent for a French deputy and a head of a party of the left.

I am convinced that last night a major section of left opinion understood that the real problems were not tackled. The real problems are those raised by many French Communists, problems concerning employment, the [economic] crisis and foreign policy, and by many Communists and Socialists at the grassroots level who are looking for answers and who again want a rallying of the forces of the left. Well, those who expect this obviously did not hear it from Georges Marchais last night. I believe it is up to them to exert pressure on the PCF leadership to make it agree to change, which it will do sooner or later.

ALGERIA'S BENYAHIA IN FRANCE FOR OFFICIAL VISIT

Meets With Giscard

LD231249 Paris LE MONDE in French 20-21 Jan 80 p 5 LD

[Paul Balta report: "Both Sides Consider Paris Talks 'Very Positive' and 'Very Encouraging'"]

Elysee spokesman Pierre Hunt considered the "unusually long" discussion with the head of state "very positive," and Mr Benyahia, on leaving, found it "very encouraging." Speaking first, Giscard d'Estaing defined his understanding "of the new relations between the two countries." With Francois-Poncet present, the two men proceeded to examine the international situation, notably in Asia, the Near East and Africa.

Benyahia's analysis of the impact of Iran and Afghanistan on both North-South and East-West relations caught French interest. On this subject he appeared quite critical of the Islamic conference due to meet 26 January in Islamabad. The Algerians fear U.S. backstage maneuvering, and that one of the meeting's indidious aims is to change the alliance structure within Islam to divert the relevant countries away from Israel and line them up against the USSR, henceforth deemed the major adversary.

The Algerian foreign minister also studied with his hosts "the possibilities of reaching a political solution in the West Sahara" and, in more general terms, Paris' and Algireas' world role. One phrase summarizes the mood of the various discussions on bilateral cooperation: "France and Algeria together can be an important world influence."

Benyahia expressed much concern to Mr Barre, as he had to the president, on the problems of Algerians working in France. The prime minister stressed that immigrant repatriation targets had to be quantified and that it was desirable to do this by joint agreement. France affirms that there is an agreement in principle between the two countries since Algiers favors a return of its nationals, but there is admittedly disagreement on how to effect this.

The head of Algerian diplomacy also expressed his concern at the imbalance in his country's trade [with France]. Barre indicated that France is prepared to increase its gas purchases so as to achieve a balance within a few years. Benyahia also expressed the wish for joint commission for the periodic discussion of economic and commercial exchanges. Barre did not object in principle, and the idea was discussed again at the full meeting that evening.

The two delegations, meeting at the Quai d'Orsay, have in effect decided to set up and convene the working groups and committees absent so far, including the Social Security Committee, to examine various issues.

Benyahia, who is leaving France at noon Sunday after receiving Algerian community representatives, will have further discussions with Francois-Poncet Saturday.

After-Dinner Toasts

LD231201 Paris LE MONDE in French 20-21 Jan 80 p 5 LD

[Unattributed report: "'The Mediterranean Makes It Necessary for Our Two Countries To Show Imagination and Be Demanding,' Says Algerian Foreign Minister"]

[Text] Proposing a toast at the end of a dinner given in honor of [Algerian Foreign Minister] Benyahia on the evening of 18 January, Jean Francois-Poncet stated: "It has perhaps never been so necessary for two nations such as France and Algeria, both independent, proud to be independent and mutually respectful of the choice of society which they have made, to develop their dialog in depth."

Referring to the West Sahara problem, he stated that "France would very much like to see it resolved, and that it is willing to support the political solution which will have to be found to resolve it as soon as its help is deemed useful." Referring to another important problem--emigration--the foreign minister emphasized that "the big Algerian community enables our country to benefit by its activity and its know-how" and expressed "the feelings of respect and friendship which we have for it and our gratitude for the role which it has played in our national life."

While admitting that there still is "a lot to be done" to settle matters in dispute, Francois-Poncet concluded: "The task awaitingus is difficult but we are capable of dealing with it--we have the will and the means to bring it to a satisfactory conclusion."

Replying to Francois-Poncet's speech, Mr Benyahia stated that his host's visit to Algiers in June had opened "a restorative dialog."

"By openly proposing," he said, "other models of relations, France and Algeria would undoubtedly arouse new hopes centered on the wider horizons of a world policy of cooperation....

"At various crossroads which mark the cardinal points of their commitments, France and Algeria cannot forget that they mean....opportunities for a new order of freedoms closed to hegemonist desires and to a policy of blocs and anxious to insure the balanced and creative participation henceforth of the human values of tomorrow."

With reference to this Mr Benyahia emphasized that the Mediterranean, that "local communication area," makes it necessary for the two countries to "show imagination and be demanding."

After paying tribute to the Algerian workers, those "anaonymous supporters of the French industrial machine," and to French overseas workers who have "kept the footbridges of our relations solidly fixed to their bases," Mr Benyahia expressed the belief that the two countries will take the necessary steps "to create the ways and means most apt to raise, both qualitatively and quantitatively, the present roles of our relations while recognizing the special nature of our differences."

STIRN VIEWS AUSTRALASIAN TOUR, FRANCE'S REGIONAL ROLE

OW221253 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0710 GMT 21 Jan 80 OW

[From Focus on Australia program]

[Text] The French foreign minister, [secretary of state to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs] Mr Olivier Stirn, has returned to Paris after a 12-day visit to Australia and the South Pacific. Mr Stirn said he believes that France and Australia will form closer ties. He told Radio Australia correspondent John Starr that the disagreement between the two countries over French nuclear testing in the Pacific was now a thing of the past:

[Begin recording] Mr Stirn is full of praise for the dynamism he found in Australia. He also sees what he calls her enormous needs and her necessity to diversify abroad, in which, he thinks, France is increasingly welcome. He sees France as a contender for part of the program for an enriched uranium plant in Australia. He thinks French industries should be involved in the project for a gas pipeline to Perth. He is pleased that the country is buying airbus planes and indeed suggests that in matters of warplanes the Mirage 2000 is still in there with a chance despite Australia's published preference for American planes.

I asked Monsieur Stirn, who during his visit in Australia saw the foreign minister, Mr Andrew Peacock, what were the practical results of his trip?

[Stirn] First, a good explanation about our policies. Secondly, a growing of our cooperation in many fields, especially in economic fields but also for assistance--technical assistance. And globally, I think that the links between France and all those democracies of the South Pacific shall be growing next year.

[Question] There is talk about a new enriched uranium plant in which France may take a leading part. How far has that advanced?

[Answer] It is one of the possible projects--one of the important projects--that (?is the responsibility) Australia (?has) for the moment, and France has been consulted like other governments.

[Question] Minister, do you find that Australia is more Asiatic minded or is she now--thanks to visits like your own--thinking more in terms of Europe and Europe's problems?

[Answer] In fact Australian population, of course, is native in Europe generally, but more and more Australia becomes a great country in Asia, and its influence, its role are growing, and the place of Australia in all Asia is now very important.

[Question] How will your visit be followed up? Are other ministers from France going to Australia?

[Answer] Yes, minister of industry in some months and after minister of economics. [sentence as heard]

[Question] Is there any link in defense between France and Australia at the moment?

[Answer] Not exactly, but France wants to maintain stability in that area.

[Question] And how will she do it?

[Answer] By its presence at first and also by the help France can bring to all of those countries. [end recording]

PCF DEPUTIES' STATEMENT PROTESTS ANTICOMMUNIST CAMPAIGN

LD231707 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 19 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Apparent text of "PCF National Assembly Group Statement"]

[Text] The PCF National Assembly group approved the following statement yesterday:

"The PCF deputies solemnly protest the exceptionally violent anticommunist campaign being waged under the pretext of the Afghan situation which systematically falsifies the PCF's policy and its leaders' statements.

"The media, acting on the Elysee's orders, and politicians headed by the Socialists do not hesitate to fuel this campaign by provocation and slander.

"The PCF deputies, who have examined the situation in Afghanistan, approve the necessary international solidarity against imperialism and for peace, as well as the statements of the Politburo. They wish to stress that this unworthy campaign, together with the recently approved 1980 budget, conceals both the difficulties it will present to the working people and the country and the reinforcement of the Giscard-Barre policy of austerity, inflation and unemployment. Such a process of misinformation does not simply misrepresent PCF policy. It is a blow against every citizen's freedom of conscience and choice based on objective pluralist information. It does democracy a disservice by depriving political debate of the seriousness and respect for one's opponent to which PCF deputies adhere particularly."

PS' CHEVENEMENT ON LEFT UNION, PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

[Unattributed report: "Chevenement Labels the 'Socialist Plan' 'Eurocommunist'"]

[Text] The guest of France-Inter's "Face the Public" program, M Jean-Pierre Chevenement, affirmed that for him the "Socialist plan" is "the only historical plan realizable by the genuine left," and that this is a document "which aims to unite the left." He added: "If Eurocommunism has a meaning other than that of a withdrawal strategy, and if it corresponds to the will to transform West Europe's developed capitalist societies democratically in the interests of the working people, then our plan could be labeled "Eurocommunist."

The Belfort deputy stressed that the PCF "is currently undergoing a great malaise." "We are not going to present it with a clear field; we shall stick to our course firmly," he added.

M Chevenement also pointed out that the Socialist Party [PS] should "persist in trying to make the PCF change its attitude" and that the Communists cannot "shut themselves in a permanent impasse, in a suicidal outlook." In his opinion the PCF chose to break the Union of the Left in 1977 for "international reasons" as well as because of PCF-CPSU relations, which "affected this choice."

M Chevenement stressed finally that the Yvelines federation was among the three rejecting the "Socialist plan."

Evoking prospects for the presidential election, the Center for Socialist Studies, Research and Education (CERES) leader recalled that he hopes for M Mitterrand to be the Socialist candidate, because "he best expresses the continuity of the Epinay Congress and he symbolizes the left-union." He did not specify what would be the CERES view if M Michel Rocard were the candidate, indicating merely that, if M Mitterrand were not the candidate, "this candidate would probably be nominated by a congress."

PCI'S INGRAO ON EUROMISSILES, OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

AU240930 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 24 Jan 80 AU

[Excerpt] Rome, January 24 (ANSA)--Communist Party official Pietro Ingrao addressed himself to his party's foreign policy position in an interview appearing in the latest edition of the Communist weekly, RINASCITA.

Ingrao, the former speaker of the lower house, said that, "the clear position we took on the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan gives us an even greater strength to denounce the serious mistake made in accepting the American proposal for the installation of Euro-missiles in Europe."

After indicating the tensions created by the escalation of armaments, the Communist official declared, "We have come to the absurd point of (American President Jimmy) Carter threatening to boycott the Moscow Olympics, that is, refusing communications between men and peoples."

Ingrao went on to affirm the importance of an independent foreign policy for Western Europe with the statement, "Europe can exercise its own role if it will drop the illusion of being above the fray, somehow immune and without guilt in the present crisis situation. Europe can act only if it becomes aware of the framework of contradictions in the world which Europe is now a part of," Ingrao concluded.

LISBON REVIEWS CHANGES IN PORTUGUESE-SOVIET RELATIONS

LD231544 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1300 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] Sakharov's arrest highlights yesterday's decision of the Council of Ministers to revise the framework of our relations with the Soviet Union. The extent of this revision is not yet known but all signs are that it cannot have a very broad scope because bilateral relations never developed all that much.

As far as trade is concerned, we can expect a marked reduction in our exports of footwear and wine to the USSR as well as in our imports of Soviet oil. However, the contract concerning our purchase of 400 million barrels of oil for the whole of this year should not be affected since this would basically hurt the Portuguese side by forcing us to look for alternative sources at higher prices.

Shipbuilding may be affected to some extent, particularly the Viana do Castelo shipyards, where several ships have been built for the USSR. But the impact of such a curb would be little more than symbolic since middlemen can always be found in the event of the current contracts being canceled.

It is possible that the meeting of the joint Portuguese-Soviet committee, scheduled for mid-1980 in Lisbon, may now be called off. Another agreement that will probably be shelved is one envisaging exchange visits by specialists and scientists in the fields of education, health, the arts, the cinema, television and sports.

Yesterday's Council of Ministers session also approved a proposed reshuffle of diplomatic postings. The proposal will now be sent to Belem Palace for presidential promulgation. It is very likely that it will include the immediate dismissal of all the ambassadors who are not career diplomats and a reshuffle in various postings abroad.

This morning neither the office of the president of the republic nor the presidency of the Council of Ministers would comment on the questions of the revision of Portuguese-Soviet relations and the reshuffle of diplomatic postings.

PREMIER'S LETTER TO BREZHNEV REJECTS INTERVENTION EXPLANATION

LD241105 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 17 Jan 80 p 9 LD

[Unattributed report: "We Don't Accept Moscow's Version of Kabul Coup"]

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen has sent Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev a letter in reply to the Soviet Government's message to him on the subject of the intervention in Afghanistan.

In the letter the prime minister states that the Danish Government must clearly dissociate itself from the Soviet Union's military intervention in that country, which raises fundamental questions concerning the relationship between sovereign states.

It also states that the Danish Government cannot accept the Soviet explanation, according to which the military intervention is said to be based on the right to individual or collective self-defense in accordance with Article 51 or the UN Charter.

Soviet Veto

"The Soviet veto against a Security Council resolution--which was supported by the overwhelming majority of the Security Council--for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all foreign troops from Afghanistan must give pause for thought in a country like Denmark where confidence in the United Nations and in fundamental international law for relations among states is a basic principle for national security," Anker Jorgensen writes.

The prime minister adds that Denmark still wants to take an active part in the efforts for detente between East and West, and that it is therefore with disappointment that we have to note that the prospects for the future course of detente have been diminished.

"The preservation of peace is an absolute condition for detente." Furthermore the prime minister reminds his addresses that the permanent members of the UN Security Council have a rather special responsibility in this regard. He concludes his letter with an urgent appeal to President Brezhnev to observe the UN General Assembly's 14 January resolution and to withdraw the Soviet forces from Afghanistan as soon as possible.

PRESS COMMENTS ON PROPOSED OLYMPICS BOYCOTT

LD221148 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1106 GMT 22 Jan 80 LD

["Press Review" on Olympics boycott]

[Text] SUOMEN SOSIALIDEMOKRAATTI writes about the boycott of the Moscow Olympics. No other state, even among the closest allies of the United States, seems so far to be enthusiastic about canceling the games. The least support has come from sports leaders representing the Olympic movement, most of whom--even apparently in the United States--are of the opinion that the games will nevertheless be held.

The modern Olympic games can be criticized in many ways, SUOMEN SOCIALIDEMOKRAATTI writes. The use of money for them has reached absurd proportions, exemplified by buildings in Montreal which may remain unfinished forever. The Olympic organizers' attitude to various countries has not always been fully consistent, and there have already been a few boycotts.

In spite of this, the Olympic games have their positive significance. They bring together an exceptionally large number of young people from all over the world, and by means of diverse media most of literate mankind follows the events. This is peaceful cooperation. Destroying the games would by no means help to find a way out of the current tension, SUOMEN SOSIALIDEMOKRAATTI points out.

UUSI SUOMI writes that the [proposed] boycott of the Olympic games shows that the procedures open to Carter's foreign policy are running out. He has resorted to measures traditionally opposed by the United States. Carter must have been aware of the fact, the paper says, that a threat to the other superpower is regarded by Moscow as blackmail which cannot be tolerated. In the United States the election year, however, always entails tighter measures in foreign policy. Consequently, the situation has reached a deadlock from which it is difficult to withdraw.

The boycott embarked upon by the United States will at least be supported by a few leading Western powers. Some Islamic states' participation in the boycott can also be expected. Although the boycott might not be carried out to this extent, the withdrawal of the Western powers from the games is [as heard] a heavy blow to Soviet prestige. The Soviet Union has carefully prepared for the games which are of great importance to it, UUSI SUOMI points out.

OLYMPIC OFFICIALS FAVOR GAMES DESPITE SAKHAROV EXILE

ID231151 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 23 Jan 80 p 18 ID

[A.J. McIlroy report: "Olympic Sites Offered"]

[Text] British Olympic officials remained determined yesterday that British athletes should compete in the Moscow games irrespective of any political developments.

They said that the arrest of the Russian dissident Dr Andrey Sakharov and Mrs Thatcher's announcement that she is to formally ask them to consider alternative sites were irrelevant to sport.

Their response, backed by the Marquis of Exeter and Lord Luke, Britain's two representatives on the International Olympic Committee, removed any doubts that the government and amateur sporting organisations are diametrically opposed.

Mrs Thatcher announced in the Commons that she was asking the British Olympics Association to seek another site for the games and was offering sites in Britain for certain events.

Among sites in Britain which might be considered to stage Olympic events are Holme Pierrepoint in Nottingham for rowing; Crystal Palace, Earls Court and Wembley; Meadowbank, Edinburgh (which staged the Commonwealth games), the Isle of Wight or the Firth of Clyde for sailing.

It was understood that the government is willing to see extra cash made available through the Sports Council.

IRELAND EXPECTED TO REJECT OLYMPICS BOYCOTT CALL

ID231142 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1105 GMT 23 Jan 80 ID

[Text] The Irish Republic is expected to reject President Carter's call for a boycott of the Moscow Olympics.

Premier Mr Charles Haughey will reply soon to Washington's plea for support which has now reached Dublin.

But if Ireland backs President Carter's campaign, it will be an about turn on a policy agreed by the Irish Cabinet less than a week ago.

The Irish ministers declared then that the venue for the games was a matter for the International Olympic Committee and, if the committee stood by its Moscow decision, athletes from Ireland should take part.

This approach has been endorsed by both the main opposition political parties in Dublin.

But defying President Carter over the Olympics could put at risk the chances of assistance on Northern Ireland from United States politicians.

President Carter has made it clear he would be prepared to help out economically in the event of a settlement of the Ulster crisis. And other leading Americans, among them Senator Edward Kennedy, have shown a keen continuing interest in Irish affairs.

A sign that Ireland intends to press on with a trip to Moscow came today from an Irish Government Junior Minister Mr Jim Tunney, who reinforced an appeal from businessmen to help pay the cost of sending athletes to the Olumpics.

The Cabinet is likely to frame an answer to President Carter at a meeting on Friday.

LONDON STRATEGIC INSTITUTE HEAD INTERVIEWED ON AFGHANISTAN

DW230918 Bonn DIE WELT in German 19/20 Jan 80 pp 1, 8 DW

[Claus Geismar interview with Christoph Bertram, director of the London Institute for Strategic Studies, in London: date not given]

[Text] London--In an interview with DIE WELT Christoph Bertram, director of the renowned International Institute of Strategic Studies (IISS) in London, defined his stand on the situation in Afghanistan.

WELT: The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has lasted for 3 weeks now. Does the West still have any options now to turn the Soviet Union's military action into a political defeat?

Bertram: The West's reaction should be determined by one consideration alone: What can be done to prevent the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan from becoming a success and from repeating itself on comparable occasions? I see only one answer: The Soviet intervention must be rendered difficult on the spot.

WELT: How, specifically, is this possible?

Bertram: There are two ways of doing it. First, support for the states of South and Southwest Asia which feel directly threatened by the Soviet action. This is already taking shape in the U.S. assistance to Pakistan. But the FRG's intensified interest in helping Turkey is also appropriate.

WELT: Are there any other direct options?

Bertram: Yes. The only ones capable of resisting the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan are the Afghan rebels. They must be supported. So far Washington has not been prepared to state unequivocally that these rebels can count on U.S. aid. Nothing would deter the Soviet Union from future "Afghanistans" more than the failure of its current invasion.

WELT: The resistance in Afghanistan is to some extent attributable to Islamic roots. The whole of Islam has been grasped by a revolutionary feeling which shows strong anti-Western tones. Is it now appropriate for the West to help these forces against the Soviet Union?

Bertram: The entire Islamic world has not displayed a hostile attitude toward the West. But above all, Afghanistan is the typical example of a crisis such as may recur everywhere in the Third World during the eighties. At the moment, the most important strategic task is to teach the Soviet Union a lesson for its intervention in Afghanistan. If this is the goal, then it does not matter at the moment whether one is in agreement with the Afghans on all questions. It is good enough to be in harmony with them on some objective questions: The Soviet Union must be dissuaded from attacking neighbors.

WELT: Iran is another direct neighbor of the Soviet Union. What does Afghanistan mean for Khomeyni?

Bertram: This is what makes Afghanistan so particularly important for the West. It is highly probable that after the Khomeyni era, the separatist tendencies discernible even now will be successful. What will happen if a separatist government asks the Soviet Union for protection? Unless the Soviet Union is taught a lesson in Afghanistan it will understand this to be confirmation and encouragement of intervention elsewhere as well.

WELT: U.S. President Carter's wheat embargo and a technology embargo, therefore, are not an adequate reply?

Bertram: It is appropriate in principle for President Carter to arrive at this conclusion.

The Soviet invasion must not be tolerated idly. On the spot, in Afghanistan, the United States so far has not taken any action, however. It is giving a reply which calls the entire East-West relationship into question. But is this the appropriate reaction? You can impose an embargo only once. In other words, if Moscow takes another step this reaction option no longer exists.

WELT: Does not the current U.S. reaction also encourage those in Moscow who are referred to as "hawks?"

Bertram: If there really are such species as "doves" and "hawks". But the advocates of military action in the Kremlin might now argue thusly: We now know the answers of the West. It discontinues wheat deliveries. It considers a technical embargo. It procrastinates on questions concerning arms control--but it does not disturb our actual military operations.

WELT: Is a boycott of the Olympic games the proper answer to Moscow?

Bertram: Nothing would be worse than a Western reaction which is not credible. The politicians now threatening to use this instrument must ask themselves whether they have the political stamina to go through with such a boycott.

WELT: Are any long-term strategic intentions of the Soviet Union linked with the invasion of Afghanistan?

Bertram: What matters to the Soviet Union most is probably the clarification of a situation in Afghanistan proper, a situation which was unpleasant for the Soviet Union. This does not mean that long-term intentions ought to be ruled out. Yet we must keep in mind that even without any bases in Afghanistan, the Soviet Union has the military competency to intervene in this region. It has naval units in the Indian Ocean anyway. Its airplanes have a range, anyway, for intervening wherever geographically sensitive spots for the West's energy supply exist. This is why I do not think very much of attempts to explain that what matters to the Soviets in truth is just "the warm water of the Indian Ocean."

WELT: The West finds it hard to give a common answer. How important is a common attitude within the Western alliance?

Bertram: In view of the old and new endangering of our security, solidarity in the Western alliance will become one of the most dangerous and important tasks in the eighties. Interests are not identical everywhere. The Americans can almost afford to consider detente a luxury. This is not the case for the West Europeans and the Japanese. The American leadership which is not always impressive does not facilitate solidarity.

WELT: So the great foreign policy line aiming for equalization--the policy of detente--can be continued despite everthing?

Bertram: Yes. Detente is not a gift to the Soviets. If it were that, it would have been wrong all the time. I consider detente an instrument of Western policy for the implementation of Western interests. I consider, therefore, the slogan about the indivisibility of detente as obsolete. In the eighties there will be turmoils in the Third World. The West must remain able to act in the Third World, without always calling into question the entire crisis management between the East and the West.

WELT: So the Soviet argument about the divisibility of detente is not necessarily opposed to Western interests?

Bertram: Because it is important to face a Soviet action on the spot, this argument serves Western interests. In addition, there is the further point that he who declares detente to be indivisible is binding his own hands. In such a case he cannot react with other sanctions.

WELT: What Soviet reaction do you expect when the Tito era comes to an end?

Bertram: The Yugoslavia Tito will leave behind someday will be different from the Yugoslavia he found. Nothing unites a country more--even if there is peaceful quarreling internally-- than an external threat. Therefore, I believe that after Tito Yugoslavia will be even more aware of the danger of internal quarrels. We can therefore hope that the country will merge even more strongly after Tito.

WELT: In contrast to Afghanistan, the Soviet Union has no common border with Yugoslavia. Is that important?

Bertram: The Soviets, although they tend to explain their actions with the help of principles, are pragmatists. They run risks only when they believe that they are acceptable and that they can be successful. But that is more than questionable with regard to Yugoslavia. And Afghanistan is located in Asia; Yusoslavia is, however, directly on the line separating the East from the West. Every conflict would run the risk of being escalated to become a nuclear war. Even the Kremlin respects that.

During the meeting, views were exchanged on the international situation and on the two countries' relations, with particular emphasis on the parliamentary level.

Mr Fischer conveyed to Mr Mikhailidhis the greetings of the president of the GDR People's Chamber Horst Sindermann, and his desire that the Interparliamentary Union spring congress that will be held in Berlin will provide the opportunity for the two parliaments to achieve closer contacts, which would contribute to the further strengthening of mutual relations.

Dinner With Rolandhis

NC232115 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 23 Jan 80 NC

[Excerpts] GDR Foreign Minister Fischer, who arrived on a 3-day official visit to Cyprus today, held a private meeting with Foreign Minister Rolandhis. Talks were later held at the Foreign Ministry among representatives of the two countries on bilateral relations and international developments.

Mr Rolandhis gave a dinner tonight in honor of Mr Fischer. Speaking at the dinner, Mr Rolandhis stressed the close relations between the two countries and referred to questions of foreign policy and the Cyprus issue. Mr Rolandhis said that Cyprus is consistently following a nonalined policy and believes that, through the increasing role of the nonalined movement, it can play a constructive role in contributing to the solution of problems and provocations facing mankind and to the promotion of cooperation based on true independence, equality and justice. He added: We strongly believe that only if the lawful UN order prevails can we hope that world detente will prevail. With regard to the Cyprus issue, the foreign minister expressed the Cyprus Government's deep appreciation for the consistent support of the GDR and all the socialist countries for the just cause of Cyprus.

In his reply speech, Mr Fischer expressed satisfaction with the firm progress in relations between the two peoples and states. Referring to his country's stand on the Cyprus issue, Mr Fischer said that the GDR is bound by solidarity with the arduous struggle of the Cypriot people for national liberation, independence, territorial integrity and the maintenance of nonalined policy. He added: The very well known UN resolutions remain the basis for a just Cyprus solution. The convention of a representative conference on Cyprus within the UN framework will help the Cypriot people live in peace. Mr Fischer stressed the role played by Cyprus in maintaining peace in the Mediterranean and thus in Europe. The sagacious proposal by President Kiprianou for complete disarmament and demilitarization of Cyprus, Mr Fischer said, and the Cypriot people's anti-imperialist struggle for a peaceful, democratic and lasting Cyprus solution enjoy our unreserved support.

TURKISH PAPER NOTES U.S., FRG ENVOYS MEETINGS WITH DENKTAS

NC230830 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 22 Jan 80 p 5 NC

[Dispatch by Resat Akar]

[Text] Nicosia--Upon the announcement by the TFSC Government that it intended to open some of the closed hotels in Varosha, the Greek Cypriot administration has approached a few big powers in an effort to counter Turkish Cypriot plans in this respect. It has been learned that yesterday President Denktas first received Mr Galen Stone, U.S. ambassador to Nicosia, and then Mr G Soehnke, Federal German Republic ambassador to Nicosia. Both ambassadors are reported to have urged the Turkish Cypriot administration to resume intercommunal talks in a short time and to refrain from opening the Varosha hotels.

The U.S. and the Federal German ambassadors have stated that their governments could assist UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim in having the intercommunal negotiations started, and added that if the hotels in Varosha were opened, fresh disturbances might occur on the island.

It is reported that President Denktas has informed the American and West German ambassadors, whom he received separately, that the Greek Cypriots could come and operate their hotels in Varosha under the Turkish Cypriot administration.

On the other hand, Greek political circles report that during his recent visit to Ankara, British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington dwelt seriously on the Cyprus issue and urged the Turkish Government to prevent the opening of the hotels in Varosha. The Greek Cypriot press, which carries various reports attributed to Greek Cypriot authorities, said that representations made to the United Nations and to the big powers have yielded positive results and that Ankara has provided assurances that Varosha would not be opened.

FOREIGN MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON AFGHANISTAN, IRAN

TA231733 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1550 GMT 23 Jan 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, Jan 23 (AA)--Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen observed "detente" between the two superpowers and in Europe might be "suspended" for some time to come due to recent developments in international relations. He made the comment during his address from the floor during Wednesday's joint session of parliament devoted to debate on foreign policy.

Afghanistan

Explaining his government's assessment of recent developments in Afghanistan, Erkmen said it was concerned about the "intervention" in that country not only because it was directed at the friendly people of Afghanistan, but because detente had also received a blow. The emergence of the possibility that progress in the process of world detente may be "reversed" had indeed cast a shadow over years of efforts, he said. "Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan would surely make a major contribution to detente," he declared.

Erkmen was convinced that the Amin administration in Afghanistan was brought down through intervention, and the fact that his regime was "liquidated" rendered "incredible" the contention that Amin had appealed to the Soviets. Moreover, he said, it was impossible, in his government's view, to consider this intervention compatible with article 51 of the UN Charter, and these views had been communicated to the Soviet Union at the time of the Turkish Government's official statement commenting on [passage indistinct].

The foreign minister noted Turkey was among the 49 member countries calling for the special session of the UN Security Council and among the 104 countries voting for the UN General Assembly resolution on Afghanistan.

Reminding that Turkey had historic ties with the Afghan people, he referred to his government's formal expression of "great concern" over the intervention in Afghanistan. His government believed, he said, that the withdrawal of foreign forces from Afghanistan could help restore the faith in peace which was jolted in the region and in the world. "We share the concern which countries in the region, including the friendly and fraternal state of Pakistan, might have over the events in Afghanistan," he commented.

Iran

With regard to recent developments in Iran, the foreign minister said preservation of Iran's "territorial integrity" was of utmost importance not only for the region, but also for world peace. Iran was living through a "unique revolution" in history, and Turkey considered it a "domestic affair" of the neighboring Iranian people, he noted. "We consider it the most natural right of the Iranian nation for them to attain the governmental system they desire," he said, "and we believe they will, as one nation, overcome all difficulties in order to strengthen their country and form a prosperous society."

Erkmen also believed economic relations between Turkey and Iran would work in the mutual interest of both nations. Any cooperation between these two countries "with extensive natural resources" would contribute to "regional peace and stability", he believed.

Iranian-U.S. Dispute

Foreign Minister Erkmen said that Turkey favored the easing of tension between Iran and the United States, a neighbor on the one hand an an ally on the other. It hoped for a "satisfactory solution" before the incident of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran reaches dimensions which may lead to "undesirable developments" not only in Iran, but in the whole region," he added.

Economic Sanctions Not Useful

Erkmen announced that his government did not believe measures like economic sanctions could contribute to a settlement of the dispute, but on the contrary, might lead to "fresh misunderstandings." Therefore, Turkey did "not consider useful" any resort to bilateral sanctions against the Iranian people.

Addressing the joint session of parliament on foreign policy Wednesday, Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen gave details of the defense cooperation accord Turkey initialled with the United States on January 10, 1980. The foreign minister reiterated that the joint defensive installations in Turkey belonged to the Turkish Armed Forces and were under Turkish commanders.

The basic agreement and three supplements, Erkmen noted, discontinue measuring U.S. defense support aid in figures and establish a mechanism intended to meet needs on time and most effectively. The legal basis for developing a joint defense industry was established by a supplementary agreement. With regard to the joint installations, Erkmen added, principles contained in the 1976 draft agreement were restated in somewhat developed form.

GOVERNMENT STUDYING CARTER REQUEST TO BOYCOTT OLYMPICS

TA231626 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 Jan 80 TA

[Text] It has been reported that U.S. President Jimmy Carter has sent a special letter to President Fahri Koruturk asking that Turkey boycott the Olympics to be held in the Soviet Union this year. Carter's letter recalled that certain Western countries--primarily Canada and Britain--gave positive replies to the U.S. proposal to boycott the Olympics following the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

In reply to a TRT correspondent's question on the subject, Foreign Ministry Information Department Chief Akgun Kiciman said: Such a message has been received and it is being studied.

GRAND NATIONAL ASSEMBLY DEBATES FOREIGN POLICY

TA231738 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 Jan 80 TA

[Text] A debate on foreign policy started today at the joint session of the National Assembly and the Senate. Foreign Minister Hayretten Erkmen was the first speaker at the joint session, chaired by Cahit Karakas. Erkmen commented on events in Afghanistan, development in Iran, the defense cooperation agreement signed with the United States, the Cyprus issue and relations with Greece as well as international economic relations. Erkmen said that problems regarding international relations could lead to the return of the tense and insecure environment of the cold war. Noting that Turkey has always occupied an important place in international relations, Erkmen stated that the government followed the recent international events in a cool-headed manner while remaining loyal to its traditional foreign policy.

Pointing out that Soviet intervention in Afghanistan disrupted regional stability and has developed in such a way that could greatly affect the world strategic balance, Erkmen said: The Turkish nation is greatly grieved over this intervention. Our sincerest wish is for the withdrawal of foreign forces in Afghanistan as soon as possible.

Referring to Turkish-U.S. relations and the defense cooperation agreement signed between the countries, Erkmen said that the relations between the two countries had reached a positive stage following the recent agreement between Turkey and the United States.

Noting that a change in the policies concerning Cyprus and Greece is out of the question, Erkmen declared that the Cyprus problems and the disagreements between Turkey and Greece can only be solved through negotiations.

Speaking on behalf of the National Salvation Party, party leader Necmettin Erbakan said that the awakening of the Islamic countries and their emergence as a new power is the greatest event of the past decade. Noting that international Zionism is plotting secret schemes to detach Turkey from the Islamic world, Erbakan said: Do you want to become detached from the Islamic world and be overpowered by the West or do you want to pursue a national policy? This is the question. Erbakan said that Turkey does not have a Cyprus problem and that a Turkish Cypriot state would eventually be declared. Claiming that the attitude of the current government set back relations with Iran, Erbakan noted that it was impossible to remain silent in the face of events in Afghanistan and that Turkey should propose to the Islamic Conference that joint troops should be sent to Afghanistan.

Senator for life, Suphi Gursoytrak, expressed the views of the National Unity Group. Gursoytrak said that Turkey should protect its national interests in accordance with the idea of full independence, taking into account Turkey's geopolitical situation and realizing that it is a Balkan, Middle Eastern and Mediterranean country. Noting that the superpowers are trying to use countries located in regions that they are interested in influencing to attempt to change the existing balance to their advantage, Gursoytrak said that the agreement signed between the United States and Turkey should not conflict with the concept of national independence. Pointing out that the agreement should contribute only to Turkey's defense, Gursoytrak said: Turkey should take care to avoid provocations which would cause an active war between the countries in our region or between blocs.

Speaking on behalf of the group from the president's quota, [group of distinguished senators constituting the president's advisory contingent] Senator Metin Toker said that a negative attitude toward adventurism and a positive attitude toward security would best serve the interests of Turkey and would be beneficial to it. Pointing to events in Iran and Afghanistan and the problems which Yugoslavia may face in the aftermath of Tito as the main factors of the world crisis Toker noted that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan is more important and significant than that country's earlier intervention in its two satellites--Czechoslovakia and Hungary. Toker stated that Soviet troops are now fighting against an oppressed people in an independent, nonalined and Muslim country. Toker said that friends and allies would genuinely benefit from transforming Turkey into a buffer zone--which is as strong as a rock--between the Soviet Union and the oil region rather than embroiling Turkey in a hot situation. Nationalist Action Party Konya Deputy Agah Oktay Guner was still addressing the Grand National Assembly when this news bulletin was prepared.

Further Report

TA232046 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 23 Jan 80 TA

[Text] The debate on foreign policy at the joint session of the National Assembly and the Senate has ended. The debate, which started at 1500, lasted for 7 hours.

Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen, who was the first speaker, commented on international developments and the policy to be implemented by the government vis-a-vis these developments. The other speakers were National Salvation Party leader Nechettin Erbakan, on behalf of his party, Senator Suphi Gursoytrak on behalf of the National Unity Group and Senator Metin Toker from the president's quota.

Addressing the session on behalf of the Nationalist Action Party, Konya Deputy Agah Oktay Guner said the bilateral agreements reached with the United States should be reviewed in accordance with the changing conditions. Guner noted that Turkey is part of the Western alliance and that NATO is beneficial to the country. Pointing out that a policy of enmity toward the West, which is being exacerbated through communist provocations, would be very dangerous and damaging for Turkey, Gunner stated: In our opinion, Turkey should loyally continue its alliances with the Western world and at the same time base its foreign policy on sincere friendship and goodneighborliness with its neighbors.

Expressing the views of the Justice Party, Istanbul Deputy Celal Yardimci said that, in its foreign policy, Turkey is on the side of the democratic free world against communism, fascism and imperialism. Pointing out that the events in Iran and Afghanistan and the developments in the various parts of the world clearly exposed the importance of Turkey in the global balance, Yardimci said that, under these circumstances, all the political parties should support Turkey's foreign policy. Yardimci noted that the defense cooperation agreement with the United States is actually related to the NATO defense system. Yardimci added that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan increased the concern that the Soviet Union is pursuing imperialist goals and that there cannot be any excuse or reason to justify this action.

Addressing the session on behalf of the RPP, Bursa Deputy Hasan Esat Isik said: In the face of all this confusion in the Middle East, Turkey should first insure that the storm does not affect it and then assist in establishing tranquility in the region. Pointing out that the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan is unfortunate for detente, Isik said: However, one should not rashly diagnose a return to the cold war period. It is impossible for Turkey not to be sensitive in the face of such a situation, but one should not be afraid that the next intervention will definitely be directed at us; the threat is directed against world peace. Noting that Turkey is not [word indistinct] a sphere of influence, Isik asked that the Turkish-U.S. defense cooperation agreement be discussed in detail in the parliament and that it be submitted to the parliament for approval.

[Text] The first shipment of food [as heard] and clothing to be given by the Red Crescent to Afghan refugees in Pakistan will be sent by air this evening. In a statement in Istanbul, the secretary general of the Turkish Red Crescent society, Necmi Hosver, said that the first shipment comprises 1000 blankets and 100 tents. Hosver said that the relief supplies will be sent in small shipments due to transportation difficulties. He added that food and clothing will be sent to the refugees aboard a Pakistani ship which will arrive in Istanbul at the end of this month.

Addressing the general assembly of the International Red Cross, Red Crescent, Lion and Sun societies, which met in Geneva some time ago, Red Crescent President Kemal Demir said that Turkey is ready to extend every possible aid to the Afghan refugees.

NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL ASSESSES FOREIGN, DOMESTIC ISSUES

[Text] The National Security Council has decided that a total, merciless and effective struggle will be waged to insure that peace and security are completely established in the country. The National Security Council met under the chairmanship of President Koruturk at 0930 today. The meeting, which was held at the Cankaya Mansion, was attended by Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, Chief of the General Staff General Evren, the ministers who are members of the council, the commanders of the branches of the armed forces and the National Security Council secretary general. A written statement was issued at the end of the 4-hour meeting. It said:

During its meeting today, the National Security Council made a general assessment of domestic and foreign developments and discussed the administrative, social, economic, legal and security measures that should be taken in the martial law areas as well as certain other provinces. The National Security Council reviewed the recent important foreign developments occuring in the Near and Middle East which closely concern Turkey--a regional country--and the possible consequences and affects of these developments. The council also assessed Turkey's situation both from the viewpoint of its own security and from the viewpoint of the peace and tranquillity of the region.

In accordance with the results of its assessments, the National Security Council once again restressed the necessity for all constitutional institutions and all our citizens to abide by the republic's and Ataturk's principles and to take a position on the side of the state in the struggle against anarchy, terrorism, divisiveness and destructiveness, which are national issues. It also decided that a total, merciless and effective struggle will be waged to insure that peace and security are completely established in the country.

LUNS WARNS USSR AGAINST INTERVENING IN SFRY

LD221806 Hanburg DPA in German 1729 GMT 22 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Saarbrucken/Brussels--NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns has warned the Soviet Union against the consequences of a possible intervention in Yugoslavia. In an interview for tomorrow's SAARBRUECKER ZEITUNG Luns said in Brussels that though such an intervention would not represent a "casus foederis" he believed "that the alliance could then come into it."

Luns went on to say that NATO has emphasized for years that Yugoslavia's integrity is a matter which affects the alliance. However, the NATO secretary general stressed at the same time that he personally does not have the impression that the Soviet Union would "take such risks."

In reply to the question whether intervention by the Soviet Union in Yugoslavia would represent a "crunch", Luns said that he would not like to say "what could or would happen then." He would only like to say that an intervention by Moscow in Yugoslavia, Austria or Sweden would be "an overture to most serious events."

Edited excerpts from the interview were made available to DPA.

ITALY'S MOSCOW AMBASSADOR TO DELIVER PROTEST OVER SAKHAROV

AU250852 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 25 Jan 80 AU

[Text] Rome, January 25 (ANSA)--The Italian Foreign Ministry has announced that the members of the European Economic Community (EEC) have given the Italian Government, currently EEC duty chairman, the mandate to voice their protest with Moscow authorities for the banishment of Soviet dissident and Nobel Peace Prize winner Andrey Sakharov, a "flagrant violation" of the Final Act of the Helsinki European cooperation and security conference signed by the Soviet Union.

The protest that will be presented by the Italian ambassador to Moscow in name of the EEC Nine refers "to a specific violation of the dispositions contained in the Final Act of the Helsinki conference towards a person whose only activities have been those guaranteed to all citizens of the countries that signed, and to correctly apply the measures contained in the Helsinki charter."

PAKISTAN TO RECEIVE AID FOR REFUGEE WORK

[Text] Brussels, Jan 24, REUTER--The European Common Market will give more than 20 million dollars in aid to Pakistan to help it cope with Afghan refugees, Market officials said today.

They said the European Economic Community (EEC) decided yesterday to give 14 million dollars in cash and 3.7 million dollars worth of food aid.

Because the Community's 1980 budget has yet to be finalized, EEC ministers will have to give special authority for the expenditure, the sources said.

Together with bilateral aid from EEC states, the Community total would exceed 20 million dollars, the sources said.

PARLIAMENT CONDEMNS SOVIET AGGRESSION IN AFGHANISTAN

AU241418 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 24 Jan 80 pp 1-2 AU

[Andreas Unterberger report: "Parliament Condemns Soviet Aggression"]

[Summary] Vienna--"Spokesmen of all three parties unanimously condemned Soviet intervention in Afghanistan at the first Nationalrat session after the Christmas holidays yesterday [23 January]. In an extensive foreign policy debate the three parliamentary parties also unanimously expressed the view that at present there is no threat to Yugoslavia's independence. In view of the tense international situation, the Austrian People's Party desisted from presenting a no-confidence motion against Foreign Minister Pahr, but it did criticize his administration of office."

People's Party Chairman Mock emphatically condemned the invasion of Afghanistan, stressing that Austria could not be indifferent toward such a serious violation of international law. "Austria has seen what happens when such aggression is merely watched indifferently," he said. Freedom Party Chairman-designate Steger said a wave of indignation had swept the whole parliament because it was a case of a small country being "turned around." "Steger regards this as a threat not to the United States but primarily to free Europe--for example, in the raw material sector."

Commenting on the Yugoslav situation, Socialist Party floor leader Heinz Fischer referred to the military stalemate between the superpowers and said: "There can be no doubt that the change in the top leadership in Yugoslavia that will take place sooner or later will cause tension and nervousness, but there is no reason for us to increase it."

OIL SHORTAGE BLAMED ON REDUCED SOVIET DELIVERIES

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Text] Vienna--In the past few days there has been a serious shortage mainly in the fuel oil supply but for the first time also in the gasoline sector. This has been confirmed by Trade Minister Staribacher, who last night [23 January] unexpectedly met representatives of the oil companies for a "crisis talk." The bottleneck was attributed to reduced Soviet oil deliveries and to the continuing strong demand. In view of the domestic prices, which do not cover costs, the oil companies are no longer ready to buy additional quantities of expensive crude oil in the spot market. The talks are to be continued today.

MARTENS COMPROMISE EVOKES MIXED PARTY REACTIONS

[Pierre de Vos dispatch: "The Flemish Christian People's Party Rejects a New Compromise"]

[Text] Brussels--The prime minister continues his race against the clock, and each day brings new surprises. During the night of 21-22 January, only the Christian People's Party [CVP]--which he has led for several years--refused to accept his compromise to avoid the government crisis brought on by the backing of the three French-speaking ministers of the French-speaking Front [FDF] on 16 January.

The new text was drafted during the night of 18-19 January. It partially satisfied the French-speaking Socialists [PSB] and Social Christians [PSC] who, after Mme Spaak's departure from the FDF, demanded new guarantees on state reform. In the words of PSB President Andre Cools, a PSB congress called for Sunday approved the compromise "without enthusiasm," with 486 votes for, 73 against and 30 abstentions. The PSB leaders also decided to call a new congress in 3 months "to assess whether the agreements reached within the majority coalition have been correctly applied."

On Monday, the PSC in turn approved the agreement and, on leaving the General Council, M Vanden Boeynants also declared that it was a forced "yes" because of the seriousness of the social and economic situation. Shortly after, M Van Miert's Belgian Socialists PSB-Flemish wing gave their approval and the matter seemed settled: The political world seemed convinced that the prime minister would easily get his own party's agreement at the 7 pm meeting.

At 1 am there was impasse. The CVP General Council continued to express reservations on the partition into three regions and Brussels' proposed powers. It still opposed the parallelism demanded--and to an extent gained--by the Socialists for carrying out the state reform and the austerity program bill. The CVP left asking for more time to consider. So M Martens is still unable to replace the three French-speaking ministers backed a week ago, and his government is no longer functioning, since the Constitution makes linguistic equality indispensable.

PRESS REACTS TO CARTER'S STATE OF THE UNION MESSAGE

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU

DW251005 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 25 Jan 80 p 3 DW

[Karl Grobe editorial: "Carter Doctrine"]

[Text] A colder wind is blowing through world politics. Historians may decide what low created it: the one over Afghanistan or the one following NATO's decision to close the arms gap. They may find out more exactly how hurricane Brezhnev created tornado Carter. It remains incontestable, however, that Jimmy Carter's doctrine has something to do with that of Leonid Brezhnev's even though it was announced 12 years later.

The Soviet general secretary stated that no country of the socialist community of states has full sovereignty (except the great Soviet Union), particularly that no country that has joined the socialist camp more or less voluntarily can leave it again. In this respect there is hardly any difference between the states of the Warsaw Pact, from the GDR to Mongolia, and the USSR states, from the Ukraine to Tadzhikistan. If they want to do something different there is still the Soviet Army: Prague experienced it.

Jimmy Carter defines his doctrine differently but certainly not less severely. If the oil of the Gulf states is involved, the interests of the United States (not human rights or moral principles) are threatened. In the end, if Washington believes that nothing else is possible, arms will speak. This is pleasantly clear: At the Indian Ocean America will defend not democracy, but the energy base of its economy and eventually its own interests.

The President left open what would happen if one of the peoples in this region, without foreign interference, wants to act in opposition to the economic interests of the United States. He did not mention any other resources than liquid ones. The doctrine could be extended: Will the uranium of Namibia be part of the U.S. interests tomorrow, or tin from Bolivia, or copper from Zambia? If that were so would the leathernecks have to act in Bolivia if a leftist revolution led by the campesinos were victorious and a policy hostile to that industry were pursued? If a Moroccan-French-Belgian expeditionary corps were unable to keep Zaire under control, would that be a case for the leading power of NATO? Cynical observers could say that the Cubans could be found if necessary to justify an intervention, as well as calls for help from Afghanistan and Czechoslovakia.

Doctrines contain the danger of being doctrinaire. But what really counts with regard to Jimmy Carter's and Leonid Brezhnev's doctrines, which cannot be compared otherwise, is the demarcation of interests. Risks are indicated and lines drawn showing how far one is prepared to go and how far a possible competitor might go.

This is a continuation of what was begun at the conference during the war and in postwar times in Tehran, Yalta and Potsdam: the distribution of the world. In the three conferences between 1943 and 1945 it was mainly Europe, Germany and Austria that were involved (Austria was later neutralized). The interests on the Balkan--particularly Greece--were not accurately defined. Once Stalin acted quickly in the Balkans it was up to U.S. President Harry Truman to write his own doctrine and decide on the civil war in Greece with American and British arms. Thanks to this doctrine, no war has broken out in Europe.

Naturally the price was cold war. The consequence was an arms race to the limit of the manifold destructive capacity of arms. That contains its own dangers. As long as the two superpowers mistrust each other, they will pursue the aim of "first strike capability," the capability of annihilating the other with a first destructive strike that cannot be responded to. This also poses the tempation to try it out once if one believes himself to be stronger. If one has an arms lead, the other closes the arms gap, even if he wants to defend a lead, which in turn causes the other party to close the arms gap. This leads then to closing the gap of the arms gap. The price will be paid, in addition to the economies, by the people--as long as they permit it.

That does not guarantee any security either. Not even peace. Vietnam and Afghanistan are examples. If indivisible real detente existed, the arms race could be brought under control. Carter urged that this be done but the impetus becomes weaker. Only the common interests of the two superpowers can prevent World War III. That is not enough in the long run.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

DW250856 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 25 Jan 80 p 1 DW

[Article signed R.H.:"Carter Doctrine"]

[Text] President Carter has formulated something in two sentences that must be termed in accord with famous precedents as the "Carter Doctrine." Only Congress can decide whether it will enter history as follows: Whoever approaches the Persian Gulf with hegemonic intentions touches on American interests and must count on American arms.

The "Carter Doctrine" has the advantage that its promise--or warning, depending on one's stand--contains more than it says: Protection of American interests in the Persian Gulf also means protection of European interests. The ticklish issue of whether the NATO area has to be extended to achieve that has thus been brushed aside. It has probably been realized on both sides of the Atlantic and not just since yesterday, that it would be more appropriate to handle exotic problems with ad hoc groupings and changing "directorates" headed by Washington than under the flag of NATO. Cranking up the entire alliance, NATO plus France, and reaching some sort of decisive party agreement in country X or Y is too clumsy a procedure for our times. That difficulty has been formally overcome by the Carter doctrine wherever Western energy supplies are involved. In practice, division of labor is to take place, with the Federal Republic, for example, contributing militarily only on its own territory while contributing other things to achieve success far away: material aid for Turkey, cooperation with the Gulf states, leaving operations and providing bases to those powers who know these areas better.

After the patience with which the Americans for years have viewed the expansion of Soviet interests in Angola, Ethiopia and Indochina, this is suddenly an enormous hardening. It was probably caused by information that Afghanistan has been occupied not in the sense of the Brezhnev doctrine in order to fraternally assist an ailing revolution. Behind it is the thinking of generals and admirals who want to achieve with modern means the old dreams of the tsars far beyond Afghanistan, following a "doctrine" in the progressive political civilization of the world that is unbelievably reactionary: pure desire for conquest.

[Press review on President Carter's State of the Union Message]

[Excerpts] NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG makes the following comment: Rarely in past decades has a U.S. president in his State of the Union Message used such harsh tones as Jimmy Carter. His speech to Congress was not bombastic: It was rather soberly realistic with harsh language. The President made it clear to the Moscow leadership that any further Soviet expansion into the Persian Gulf region would be seen as an attack on the vital interests of the United States. In other words: This would spell war.

The editorial goes on to say: This has nothing to do with confrontation or cold war. It was probably hard enough for President Carter to make up his mind about this reorientation of his policy. At the beginning of his term he set lofty goals for himself: He wanted to cooperate with the Soviet Union peacefully, make human rights prevail in the world, reduce armaments, mitigate nuclear arsenals. In the end, Carter found himself cheated by Moscow. This result probably emerged also because East and West interpret detente policy differently. The allies of the United States now have to make decisions without delay and state clearly whether or not they intend to follow President Carter with deeds. This is advisable, especially since West Europe's interests in the Persian Gulf are affected no less than those of the United States.

The following is the comment of the Koblenz RHEIN-ZEITUNG: Let us hope that the Soviet leadership will take President Carter's warning seriously. The United States has precisely described the situation with respect to its interests: Any Russian reach for the vital vein of the West, the Gulf region, will be repelled with force of arms. Carter's military warning to the Soviet Union indirectly highlights the serious neglect of U.S. security policy. To begin with, Carter cannot repel anything in the oil region with conventional means. There are not enough soldiers and not enough ground bases from which counterpositions might be set up. What remains is the threat of a nuclear strike. This threat seems to be as ineffective as it is impracticable. In his circumspect message, Carter himself terms the prevention of nuclear war the main task of the two world powers. On a long-term basis the United States is more capable of action, at the moment, however, it has hardly anything but words to put up against Soviet expansion.

MUENCHNER MERKUR notes: Carter must proceed from reacting to acting if additional Afghanistans are to be prevented. He is on his best way to doing just that. He has found the proper words. Now he must act, because--and also in this respect we cannot help but agree with the President without reserve--a verbal condemnation of Moscow is just not enough. Even the reaction of the Americans to date has astonished the Soviets. How startled will they be once more action follows unless the Europeans succeed in softening Carter up after all. In view of the forthcoming U.S. elections, however, this is unlikely.

GRUENEWALD, BRANDT REACT TO EXILE OF SAKHAROV

LD232110 Hamburg DPA in German 1716 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpts] Moscow/Frankfurt--The exile of the Soviet dissident and Nobel Peace Prise winner Andrey Sakharov has led to worldwide protests. Government Spokesman Armin Gruenewald said in Bonn that as one of the signatories of the Helsinki Final Act, the Federal Government expects the USSR to rescind this violation of the right to freedom of speech and conscience. SPD Chairman Willy Brandt said he is taken aback, but expressed the hope that the exile of Sakharov will not be the beginning of further reprisals.

Brandt Asked To Help

LD241510 Hamburg DPA in German 1258 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] Bonn--According to SPD Executive Spokesman Lothar Schwartz, SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has been asked to take up the cause of exiled Soviet civil rights activist Andrey Sakharov. It was stated that Brandt will use every possible opportunity to further Sakharov's cause. Schwartz' statement notes that the SPD chairman will refrain from further public initiatives for the time being for the sake of this cause.

Shortly before this, CDU Deputy Alois Mertes sent Brandt a letter asking him to make use of his friendly relations with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev and to help Sakharov by exerting his influence "emphatically in Moscow as Nobel Peace Prize winner for the imlementation of elementary human rights." Mertes, who is deputy chairman of the German-Soviet Parliamentary Group, also proposed an initiative by all Nobel Peace Prize winners for the worldwide circulation of Sakharov's latest writings.

GENSCHER DISCUSSES KAMPUCHEA WITH THAI DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

LD241856 Hamburg DPA in German 1538 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--During a 1 and ½-hour talk today in Bonn with Thai Deputy Prime Minister Air Chief Marshal Thawi Chunlasap, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher came out in favor of an indepdent and neutral Kampuchea without a foreign military presence. The Foreign Office spokesman said that the two men supported a political solution to the Kampuchean question. Genscher paid high tribute to Thailand's responsible attitude in receiving refugees from this neighboring state.

The federal foreign minister and the Thai deputy premier agreed in assessing the Vietnamese intervention in Kampuchea and the Soviet march into Afghanistan as violations of territorial integrity and peaceful international coexistence.

Minister of foreign affairs Uppadit Packhariyangkun also took part in the exchange of views.

Speaking at a dinner, Genscher gave assurances that the Federal Government would continue to contribute aid such as goods and money to ease the plight of the refugees and relieve Thailand of this problem. He stated: "We are firmly resolved not to leave you alone in this situation."

In March, Genscher plans to attend a joint foreign ministers meeting of the EC and ASEAN groups of states in the Malaysian capital of Kuala Lumpur.

KORNIYENKO ARRIVES; VISIT REQUESTED BY GISCARD

LD241312 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] Korniyenko, USSR first deputy foreign minister, arrived in Paris yesterday on the same flight as the chairman of the National Assembly [Jacques Chaban-Delmas]. He has come to Paris at the request of the president of the republic to explain Moscow's position and the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan. Talks began at the Quai d'Orsay this morning. Mr Korniyenko will meet Jean Francois-Poncet at 1800.

Brezhnev-Pompidou Protocol Invoked

LD241547 Paris LE MONDE in French 23 Jan 80 p 6 LD

[M.D. reports: "French Government Seems To Share 'Disapproval' Expressed by Chaban-Delmas"]

[Excerpt] A Foreign Ministry communique issued Monday 21 January announced that Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Korniyenko will discuss the "international situation resulting from the events in Afghanistan" with the foreign minister at the Quai d'Orasy Wednesday 23 January.

This visit is part of the "expansion procedure" proposed by President Giscard d'Estaing in his 15 January message to Mr Brezhnev. The president of the republic invoked the protocol signed by Mr Brezhnev and Mr Pompidou 13 October 1970 which states in particular: "Should situations arise which, in the view of both sides, would pose a threat to peace, would end peace or would cause international tension, the French and USSR governments would immediately enter into contact in order to consult each other on all aspects of these situations and on steps which could be taken to face them."

At the beginning of the crisis the Soviets suggested that a French envoy be sent to Moscow but the French Government, while regarding the situation as serious enough to merit a detailed explanation between Paris and Moscow, thought it more appropriate for a Soviet to make the journey. As for the content of the explanation, it is clear that the French Government thinks it should relate to the future as much as to the past and that details should be given of the circumstances in which the USSR will withdraw its forces from Afghanistan.

As for the Olympic games affair, it is mainly being discussed among Western countries at present: President Carter's letter proposing a boycott of the games is an embarrassment to the French Government and to other European governments. The Quai d'Orsay said Monday that it is being "studied" and the government is consulting its partners in the EC and the Atlantic organization.

"No Isolated Stance"

The government is taking every opportunity to argue against the boycott. On leaving Paris for an official visit to Moscow Monday National Assembly Chairman Chaban-Delmas said: "Carter has misfired completely. He has missed his target.... I think this initiative is ineffectual and I personally disapprove of it completely."

The government's viewpoint does not seem to be very different. However, what would happen if a large number of Western countries fell into line with Mr Carter? Would opinion in Paris not be that there are no longer any real Olympic games? In these circumstances it is improbably that France would take an isolated stance.

Explanation of Afghan Events

LD242128 Paris Domestic Service in French 2100 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] At a meeting at the Foreign Ministry this evening, Korniyenko, first deputy foreign minister of the USSR, justified his country's armed intervention in Afghanistan. He said the Red Army will withdraw as soon as circumstances permit. But Foreign Affairs Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said he will need to know the timetable and means of withdrawal before he believes it.

SHORTENED CHABAN-DELMAS TALKS IN MOSCOW 'VERY TENSE'

["D.V." dispatch: "National Assembly President's Talks in Mosocw Have Been 'Very Tense'"]

[Text] Moscow--During his shortened visit to the USSR Mr Chaban-Delmas found time to meet Leonid Brezhnev on 22 January and have talks with Central Committee officials and members of the Supreme Soviet. The talks centered on Afghanistan. The two sides briefed each other on their respective analyses of the situation but no rapprochement was achieved. Just like the former Soviet explanations, the new explanations failed to convince the French delegation, which indicated that the discussion had been "very tense."

Mr Chaban-Delmas stated that Paris views the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan as an "occupation." Mr Shitikov, chairman of one of the two Supreme Soviet chambers, replied that this word was "unacceptable." During the toast proposed at a luncheon given by the Supreme Soviet the president of the French National Assembly stated that "the disagreement relates not only to the materiality of facts but also to the nature of the events."

After emphasizing the usefulness of and even the need for a dialog on "a precise point which constitutes an obstacle to detente," Mr Chaban-Delmas expressed the hope that "an agreement between our two governments on prospects concerning this problem (that is, Afghanistan) will replace the present disagreement and that our dialog will continue and develop in depth in such a way as to enable our policy of entente and cooperation to develop in the various spheres where it already exists." But he nonetheless emphasized that it is quite natural for a "country of human and civil rights to be very heedful of the question of respect for the principles of national independence and the peoples' right to self-determination."

CARTER'S STATE OF UNION MESSAGE CONTAINS 'THREATS'

LD241632 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] Things must be called by their proper name, and it is indeed threats which are contained in the State of the Union message delivered in Washington yesterday evening by Jimmy Carter. For the first time since Carter has been at the White House, this speech-cum-program had the look of a lesson in strategy given to a military general staff. The Soviet Union is no longer presented as a partner in negotiations on detente but as an enemy of which one should beware.

So, the decks are cleared for combat; the army is going to be given new equipment; the American strategic forces will be redeployed and people have gotten the message that if the Soviets ever take it upon themselves to threaten the oil route or even to destabilize the Persian Gulf politically, the United States will intervene militarily.

L'HUMANITE ATTACKS 'NEW CARTER DOCTRINE'

LD211359 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 17 Jan 80 p 1 LD

[Yves Moreau editorial: "The 'New Carter Doctrine'"]

[Text] What is the "new Carter doctrine" so loudly proclaimed by the American press, which the U.S. President is apparently planning to define himself in a forthcoming speech?

Washington is invoking events in Afghanistan to justify this "new doctrine." Washington is not afraid of exaggerating: For instance, Defense Secretary Harold Brown has no hesitation in stating that the Soviets "would like to take Iran and Pakistan."

Mr Warren Christopher, U.S. deputy secretary of state, is touring West European capitals. It was he who announced as early as 31 December that France and the other Atlantic alliance members were going to "review their bilateral relations with the Soviet Union." Yesterday evening Mr Christopher was received by Mr Jean Francois-Poncet at the Quai D'Orsay. He had previously had talks in Bonn, after which he stated that Helmut Schmidt's West German Government accepted the need for a "strong reply" to the Soviet Union.

In portraying the U.S. initiatives as a reaction, Mr Christopher is indulging in gross distortion. Indeed, it is important to remember that the first signs of the so-called "new Carter doctrine" date from well before the events in Afghanistan. They go back at least to 12 December, when the Americans persuaded NATO to approve their plan to deploy 572 new nuclear missiles in Western Europe.

Also on 12 December Mr Carter announced that, between now and 1985, the United States will increase its arms spending by 4.5 percent per year; this spending now totals $127 billion and will therefore rise to $200 billion in 5 years.

Commenting on these facts, U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT magazine wrote that they were a "turning point" and were two "important and fundamental developments."

Everybody knows what measures followed: postponement of U.S. ratification of the SALT II treaty, speeding up of arms supplies to Pakistan, agreement on U.S. bases in Turkey, strengthening of the U.S. military presence in the Persian Gulf and in various Middle East countries, use of the food weapon, the decision to blockade Iran and increased efforts to prevent the Olympic games from taking place in Moscow.

Therefore, before even being spelled out by its author, the "new Carter doctrine" is aimed at replacing detente by international tension. It revives the arms race in a dangerous way. It is accompanied by greater pressure on U.S. allies. It increases the danger of armed confrontations in the Middle East and Southern Asia.

It certainly has a fair amount in common with the cold war policy.

However, the world balance of forces is very different from the days of Truman and John Foster Dulles. While the latter had almost the same motives as Mr Carter--it is still a question of attacking peoples striving for liberation--the White House now has inferior facilities at its disposal compared to 30 years ago.

The counteroffensive launched by U.S. imperialism bears witness to the persistence of its aggressive stance but is also a sign of its decline.

The dangers involved in the "new doctrine" should be a warning to world opinion. France has nothing to gain from showing any compliance with Mr Carter's endeavours.

Nonetheless, when he left the Quai d'Orsay yesterday Mr Warren Christopher said that he was "happy" to note that Washington and Paris make the "same" analysis of the Afghanistan situation and that "appropriate parallel" measures will be taken by the two governments. How can we fail to be indignant at the Giscard diplomacy's alinement?

France, on the contrary, has everything to gain from asserting its desire for independence, which is inseparable from its desire for peace.

LE MONDE: CARTER MESSAGE CHARTS 'DECISIVE CHANGE'

LD241015 Paris LE MONDE in French 23 Jan 80 p 1 LD

[Editorial: "A 'Tough' Message"]

[Text] For those who were still in doubt, President Carter's "State of the Union" message published in Washington Monday, 21 January has just provided proof that the Americans have taken a decisive change of course in foreign policy affairs and consequently in the sphere of defense. Of course, this piece of rhetoric which dates back to George Washington traditionally takes a high-flown style. However, the chief of the U.S. administration must be taken at his word when he asserts that the invasion of Afghanistan constitutes "a threat to world peace" and "one of the most serious challenges" which the United States has had to face in its whole history. The emphasis is placed on strengthening American military power, as is clearly shown by the forthcoming presentation to Congress of a draft defense budget which has increased more than 5 percent in real terms.

The somewhat evangelical candidate, who toured the United States in 1976 preaching fraternity, love and almost universal disarmament, has certainly come a long way: Is there any need to recall that, in his first message in 1978, Mr Carter remarked that "for the first time in a generation we are not facing any major international crisis or domestic malaise" and mentioned quite naturally "peaceful competition" with the USSR? In 1979 again the President publicly proclaimed that "it is not a question of knowing which superpower will dominate the world" since "neither can nor wants to."

It is this second assertion which is now doubtful. Mr Carter told his citizens publicly 31 December during a television interview that events in Afghanistan had radically modified his opinion of the Soviets. On what was his previous evaluation of USSR foreign policy based? Had he not merely projected onto his interlocutors the fundamental pacifism which is one of his personal traits? Mr Carter is a president surrounded--perhaps excessively--by many advisers. However, he clearly decided the main policy lines: The human rights campaign and the peace effort in the Middle East, for instance, must be attributed to him. It is almost certain that the same is true of the renewed awareness of the USSR and that Mr. Carter, in his occasionally blundering but obstinate way, will pursue the new path he has laid down: giving security priority over cooperation.

The White House chief is facing a situation which is not unlike that faced by another Democratic President who proved his worth in difficult times, namely Harry Truman during the Soviet threat to Greece and Turkey in 1947. International tension undoubtedly serves Mr Carter on the electoral plane as it did Truman. Opinion polls had already recorded the President's spectacular lead over his rival, Senator Edward Kennedy. The Iowa voters confirmed that trend Monday by giving Carter more than twice as many votes as Kennedy during an internal Democratic Party caucus. It is a leader strengthened in his authority who will address Congress Wednesday evening to explain what can already be called the "new deal" in U.S. foreign policy.

LE MATIN: 'OLYMPIC SANCTION' CANNOT BE RULED OUT

LD221551 Paris LE MATIN in French 18 Jan 80 p 2 LD

[Editorial: "Toward an Olympic Sanction?"]

[Text] There is one point on which all French political leaders--from Communists to Giscardians--seem to agree: They are all opposed to a boycott of the Moscow Olympics. This means that they are also in agreement with the leaders of the sports world who do not want to "smash" Moscow in order not to smash the games at the same time.

In fact, the idea of transferring the Olympics to Montreal, Munich or elsewhere, in accordance with certain people's wishes, appears unrealistic to both the Olympics' organizers and professional athletes. It also appears that any change in the organization of the Olympics would have relatively important consequences in the financial and commercial spheres. At any rate, in France the government is hiding behind the sports authorities as far as this matter is concerned, since the offical attitude still coincides with that of our Youth and Sport Minister Jean-Pierre Soisson, who has said that "there is no reason why we should support any boycott. The games are organized not by any government but by the International Olympics Committee, which chooses a city and not a country."

However, it seems that the discussion, which has taken the form of a dissertation on the separation of sport and politics, has now clearly been overtaken by events. In view of the fact that the White House chief believes that American athletes should not go to Moscow unless the Soviet troops are withdrawn from Kabul and that British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has in turn categorically demanded that the Olympics be transferred to some other venue, it is becoming clear that the possibility of an "Olympic sanction" cannot be ruled out, even though German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has adopted a much more cautious attitude and recalled that it is necessary to keep a cool head and avoid making any demagogic statements. Was he in fact referring to any temptation to boycott the Olympics?

In any case, should the hypothesis of a boycott of the games not have seriously been considered as soon as NATO included this idea among other possible retaliatory measures? In this kind of situation neither Washington nor NATO is likely to give such a "hint" without due consideration. Furthermore, in view of the gravity of the situation in Central Asia, should not any lyrical statements on the "let us not mix sports with politics" theme have been avoided?

The French people are forgetful. During the soccer world cup, which took place from 31 May through 15 June 1978, many of them--especially among the noncommunist left--campaigned in support of the idea that this sports event should take place elsewhere, now the Soviet Union is a country which not only shows no respect for human rights within its borders but also has just invaded a neighboring country to impose on it the law of its totalitarianism.

ALGERIA'S BENYAHIA CITED ON GLOBAL, REGIONAL ISSUES

LD231251 Paris LE MONDE in French 22 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Unattributed report: "Return to Cold War Is Speeding Up Confrontation Between Superpowers in Third World"]

[Text] Speaking to the Europe 1 Press Club Sunday, 20 January [Algerian Foreign Minister] Mohamed Seddik Benyahia raised several bilateral and international questions.

The main points of his statements are as follows:

The immigrant community: "It is apolitical and amoral to use workers for decades and then ask them to leave.... The French state has a historical responsibility toward the Algerian workers which it brought to France during World War I."

Afghanistan: "Why are those who are protesting most energetically against the intervention in Afghanistan the champions of military interventionism in the Third World's internal affairs?....You have to start by setting your own house in order.

"This affair has provided an opportunity for resuming specific aspects of the cold war, in particular the use, for the first time, of the food weapon which is likely to be dangerous to poor countries. It has resulted in the United States abandoning ratification of the SALT II agreements which were equally advantageous to the USSR and to the United States.

"We are in favor of detente, "Mr. Denyshia continued, "because...a return to the cold war also means speeding up the trend toward confrontation between the great powers within Third World countries to make these not only spheres of influence but also military strongholds for the control of all these regions."

Euro-Arab-African dialog: Before launching into a no doubt "noble trialog" which is likely to be"an abortive operation, it would be better to pursue the existing Arab-European and Arab-African dialogs."

The Mediterranean: "It is impossible to discuss security in Europe without discussing security in the Mediterranean. This sea must be outside the superpowers' spheres of confrontation and influence....Above all it should belong to the Mediterranean countries and be controlled by them.

"Why are countries situated tens of thousands of kilometers away sending their fleets there?... If the Mediterranean Sea were free of arms a considerable step would be made on the path to world peace and security throughout the region."

Islam: At the present time the fundamental aim for the Muslim world is "The liberation of Jerusalem and the Arab territories occupied by Israel."

Iran: The Iranian Revolution was intended to bring Islam back to its origins which is "a view of liberated men and peoples and not domination of peoples by backward feudal systems."

COMMUNIQUES ISSUED ON ARMY STRENGTH, TALKS WITH CHAD

LD241603 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Two communiques have just been published by the office of the president of the republic. The first communique states that the minister of defense has been requested to make the necessary arrangements to avoid a reduction in the number of the army's paratroop regiments and in order to maintain the readiness of that important instrument of national defense.

The second communique concerns Chad. The French Government has examined the decision of the Council of Ministers of the Chad Republic instructing its president to form a committee to negotiate with France the departure of French troops stationed on its territory. The office of the president of the republic recalls that the decision to withdraw French troops from Chad was announced 20 March 1979. An official will visit Ndjamena to study the details of this withdrawal with the Chad authorities.

COSSIGA EXPRESSES GOVERNMENT 'SOLIDARITY' WITH CARTER

LD242220 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2000 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Carter's faith in the work of the Cossiga government in coping with Italian problems, solidarity of the Italian Government and people with the United States with particular reference to the events in Tehran--this was the tenor of the two messages of greetings exchanged by the President of the United States and the prime minister at their first meeting in the White House today. Carter announced that he will be paying an official visit to Italy next June.

After the talks which Cossiga will have with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance starting tomorrow, another meeting with Carter is scheduled. At today's meeting, Cossiga was informed of all the measures which the United States intends to adopt in response to the USSR's armed intervention in Afghanistan.

CARTER'S STATE OF UNION MESSAGE REPORTED

LD241840 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 0700 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] An attempt on the part of any external force whatsoever to take over control of the Persian Gulf region would be considered as an attack on the vital interests of America, and therefore would be repelled using any means, including force. This was stated by President Carter in his State of the Union message to Congress and the nation.

Iran, Pakistan, the Middle East and the Persian Gulf have consequently become, for Carter, areas of vital importance, and as such have to be defended with all necessary firmness. Hence the suggestion, rather than the announcement, of a reintroduction of compulsory military service. For the time being, compulsory registration of young men of callup age will be restored, without, however, abolishing the present military volunteer system.

Carter had harsh words for the Soviet Union, asserting, among other things, that the invasion of Afghanistan could constitute the most serious threat to world peace since the war As we know, a large part of the speech, which was nevertheless subjected to some alterations, had already been given a few days ago. Carter has therefore listed once again the measures which he intends to take to cope with the situation: increased military expenditure during the next 5-year period, preparation of a rapid intervention force capable of reaching any part of the globe, and strengthening of NATO.

PERTINI, LUXEMBOURG GRAND DUKE CONDEMN SOVIET INTERVENTION

AU250840 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 25 Jan 80 AU

[Text] Rome, January 25 (ANSA)--Italian chief of state Sandro Pertini condemned the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan yesterday saying that "it is a criminal act which we disdainfully and firmly condemn in the name of the rights of people, of their independence, of civilization against modern barbarity. We condemn it in the name of world peace".

Pertini made the statement in a toast offered for the Grand Duke Jean and Grand Duchess Charlotte of Luxembourg who arrived in Rome yesterday for an official three-day visit. In his toast Pertini stressed Italy's and Luxembourg's commitment for a united Europe and said that the process of European unification "must proceed resolutely" because the active presence of a united Europe "is a contribution of primary importance to international equilibrium and peace on this planet".

The grand duke also spoke of the tense international situation in his reply. He praised the Italian Government's "courageous and wise attitude" on the problem of European missiles which he said "will contribute to creating the most favorabld conditions for a balanced and controlled reduction of nuclear weapons and detente. Currently, the serious attacks in Iran and in Afghanistan against the fundamental principles which rule international relations highlight even more the importance of solidarity between members of the Atlantic alliance". The grand duke also asserted that because of its position and historical ties Italy "has a special role within the framework of community relations with nations of the Mediterranean, Africa and the Middle East."

RUFFINI: ITALY, PARTNERS MUST COORDINATE AFGHAN POLICY

AU250828 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 25 Jan 80 AU

[Text] Rome, January 25 (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Attilio Ruffini asserted yesterday that it is only through initiatives undertaken with the United States and with other Western nations that Italy and its European Economic Community (EEC) partners can contribute to creating a situation in which, with respect to Afghanistan, the fundamental rules of coexistence among states can be respected. Ruffini made the statement in replies to questions before the Senate Foreign Affairs Commission on the situations in Afghanistan and Iran.

The minister also asserted that Italy's suspension of assistance to Afghanistan's economic development was imposed by the situation which has developed in the Asian nation. The suspension "is not aimed in any way at inflicting punishment on a population which has our entire solidarity", Ruffini added.

With reference to the situation in Iran and the holding of diplomatic hostages at the American Embassy for nearly three months, the foreign minister confirmed that the Italian Government considers such act "a flagrant violation of international law". He added that "it is evident that Italy's position must take into consideration the need to not create hurdles to what is being accomplished within the United Nations."

LEGISLATORS, LABOR UNIONS CRITICIZE SAKHAROV EXPULSION

AU240950 Rome ANSA in English 0850 GMT 24 Jan 80 AU

[Text] Rome, January 24 (ANSA)--The Tuesday arrest and expulsion from Moscow of Soviet dissident Andrey Sakharov continued to draw harsh criticism from Italian parliamentary and labor spokesmen. Wednesday evening, a statement approved by the Socialist Senate group declared that, "the turn of the screws applied in the Soviet Union recalls to mind the methods of Stalinism".

A Christian Democrat document released by a group of senators defined Sakharov, a Nobel Prize winning physicist, "a man who proudly bore testimony of the rights of people to independence and who struggled against all forms of oppression inside his country and oppression abroad."

The Republican Party leadership statement affirmed that the dissident was "one of the few free voices to be raised up over the past few years with courage and nobility to defend human rights".

According to minister without portfolio, Christian Democrat Vito Scalia, "The arrest of Sakharov and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan have totally erased the word 'free' from the Soviet dictionary". The three giant labor unions making up the labor confederation termed the Soviet move, "a harsh blow to the policy of detente".

BERLINGUER ON PEACE PROPOSALS, GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION

ID240953 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 21 Jan 80 pp 1-2 ID

["U.B." report on PCE Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 20 January speech in Terni: "Five Peace Proposals"]

[Excerpts] Terni--International events, Berlinguer said, are developing in such a way that even the people furthest removed from politics are beginning to wonder whether we are approaching a situation whose only possible outcome threatens to be another world war. This feeling has become sharper since the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan and the measures of economic and political reprisal against the USSR decided by the United States.

I will discuss our stance on the Afghan events and on subsequent developments in a while, Berlinguer continued. First I would like to point out that the crisis of detente--of this laborious process which (at least in relations between the United States and the USSR and between East and West Europe) [words apparently dropped] the end of the cold war and the establishment of profitable relations--did not begin with Afghanistan and does not only affect that part of the world. It affects Southeast Asia primarily, with the battles in early 1979 involving Vietnam, Kampuchea and China. It affects the conflicts between China and the USSR, which it would be irresponsible for anyone to manipulate. (In this connection Berlinguer also said that the news that China has decided to halt the negotiations begun with the USSR last fall for resolving contentious issues between the countries is certainly not a positive sign.) It affects the Middle East, with the Egyptian-Israeli Camp David agreements for a separate peace, which certainly did nothing to improve the situation in that area of the world since those accords did not even begin to resolve the fundamental problem of the Palestinians, which are based on the division of the Arab peoples, and which are vitiated by the rejection of relations of cooperation with the United States for a peaceful solution in that highly sensitive area of the international chessboard.

It [crisis of detente] also affects the entire area surrounding the Persian Gulf, where the crisis reaches its highest point in relations between Iran and the United States. Last, it affects various parts of southern and eastern Africa.

The exacerbation of these conflicts and elements of tension, Berlinguer said, are mainly caused by, on the one hand, the aggravation of the economic and social imbalances which characterize the world today and, on the other, the progressive deterioration--which has now become a conflict--in relations among the major powers, particularly between the United States and the USSR. Thus, instead of directing the efforts of all states, particularly the two major states, toward aiding the economically backward areas and developing them within the framework of international cooperation and therefore toward a parallel and progressive reduction in military spending and weapons, we have moved in the opposite direction.

Berlinguer referred to the U.S. action of suspending ratification of the SALT II agreements following their signing in Vienna and to the Pershing and cruise missiles affair, which led to the decision to deploy them in Western Europe despite resistance from many European countries and political forces and to the various proposals, such as the one from the Italian Communists, calling at least for the postponement of a decision for a certain period and at the same time calling on the USSR to suspend manufacture and deployment of its SS-20s, so as to permit a verification of the balance of forces in Europe and a start to specific negotiations for their reduction. [paragraph continues]

The decision taken by NATO in Brussels under U.S. pressure has, as we predicted, he said, eliminated at least for the time being any prospect of negotiations and has imparted a further thrust to the process of deterioration in the international climate.

Last has come the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. It would be a mistake, Berlinguer said, to interpret that intervention as a response to the Brussels "Euro-missiles" decision; but it would equally be a mistake to fail to place it and interpret it in the context of the general situation created by all the events of the past 2 years, which I have mentioned.

We have, Berlinguer continued, clearly censured the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, calling for an end to it since we consider it unjustifiable in principle and likely to cause a further deterioration in the entire international situation. What principles are we referring to? To the principles of every state's sovereignty and independence and noninterference by other states. We have always clearly condemned every violation of these principles. But, Berlinguer asked, can other Italian parties say the same with regard to interventions by other powers, such as those of the United States in Vietnam, Kampuchea and Laos or in support of the shah's regime in Iran, or France's regimes in Africa? As far as we are concerned there is no difference: The principles which we defend must apply to all states, including the socialist states, and we have proved this again with our stance on the intervention in Afghanistan. So what are certain Christian Democratic (or Social Democratic) leaders prattling and muttering about concerning our "autonomy"? How can they presume to lecture us--they who have never said a word against the capitalist states' thousands of aggressions and interventions throughout the world?

As far as we are concerned, we say that the principles that we defend must also apply to the socialist states, because we are firmly convinced that, just as counterrevolution must not be exported, nor can or must socialism be exported. The liberation of all peoples, Berlinguer said, their liberation from exploitation and dependence must be carried out by the peoples themselves, and the building of a socialist society cannot be transplanted from outside and cannot follow other people's models, just as ideologies cannot be exported and imposed. Otherwise--this is the fundamental point--the basis of mass consensus essential for every revolution to consolidate, exist and develop cannot be created.

It could be noted, the PCI secretary general continued, that throughout world and European history there have often been foreign interventions in other nation's lives, and that sometimes they have facilitated the success of progressive forces. This is true. But it is also true that today the state of the world, interstate relations and the interdependence of economic, political and military factors among the various parts of the world are such that every act of force anywhere in the world--especially when it is carried out by one of the major powers, either directly or indirectly--sparks off a spiral and unleashes reactions which endanger world peace.

This is why we are such tenacious defenders of the principle of nonintervention. We are so inasmuch as we are aware that observance of this principle is one of the fundamental and inalienable conditions for salvaging peace and promoting world cooperation, so as to achieve objectives in the common interest of the whole of mankind. And we are tenacious defenders of this principle also inasmuch as we are revolutionaries and fighters for socialism, since we have gained from experience the conviction that every transformation of society in the direction of superseding capitalism can be the result of a popular struggle in line with each country's own conditions, traditions and aspirations.

Obviously relations of solidarity do exist, are bound to exist among all movements and peoples struggling for their own independence and emancipation, since their autonomous action pursues certain shared objectives. [paragraph continues]

But, for the reasons I have mentioned,this solidarity must not involve state interventions violating the principle of independence. These are the reasons which prompted us to condemn the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan for which, above all, there does not appear to have been any request from the Afghan people's representative bodies.

As a result of all the events that have taken place in recent years, Berlinguer added, the entire international situation has reached a level of dangerous tension which demands the utmost wisdom, moderation and positive initiative, unless we want to slide toward disaster.

The U.S. Government's recent decisions, which are being followed by some European governments including the Italian Government, tend by no means in this direction but, indeed, in the opposite direction.

For instance, what sense is there in the decision to suspend the SALT II agreements? These agreements set a ceiling on all strategic weapons, in the interests of both sides and in the general interest. Among other things, some European governments linked the Brussels "Euromissiles" decision to its approval. The suspension of the SALT II ratification imparts a thrust to the weapons race, which is causing increasingly worrying consequences on the economic and political planes. And what sense is there in the embargo on grain supplies to the USSR and in the U.S. request that other countries follow the path of economic and other kinds of reprisals? These moves do nothing but damage--and not only to those against whom they are directed but also to those who carry them out and encourage them. And unfortunately we can see that our government evidently wants to take the same path.

And what sense is there in boycotting the Olympics? Particularly in a situation of growing tension such as the present, the prospect of a meeting of athletes and sportsmen from all over the world--with all that implies in terms of mutual acquaintance, friendship and fraternal feelings--should be welcomed as valuable and opportune. What is the intention? A "free world" Olympics: And who would be the one to decide? Carter, perhaps?

Clearly, Berlinguer said, it is not measures like these that are needed now but, on the contrary, a halt to the spiral of repirsals and of the progressive accentuation and intensification of acts of hostility between the two major states. Continued accentuation and intensification would lead rapidly to the most disturbing dangers: Mankind would find itself increasingly close to the brink of nuclear destruction.

Against the logic of tension and confrontation we must set the logic of detente, dialog, negotiation and international cooperation. This, the PCI secretary general added, is the option of a force such as ours, which wants to make an effective contribution to peace, to fight actively and specifically and not to restrict itself to expressing "hopes" or to carrying out propaganda. Furthermore, a similar option to ours has been adopted by other forces which refuse to "aline" with either of the major powers, but which are speaking and trying to act to reestablish the conditions for dialog between them and to halt the downhill trend. Among these forces Berlinguer cited several governments of nonalined countries, including some which, while condemning the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, reject the logic of repirsals. He cited the Catholic Church and the appeals and warnings issued by John Paul II--appeals which, irrespective of other questionable aspects of this papacy, constitute a major contribution to the cause of peace and disarmament.

Next he referred in particular to the role which Europe and the Western workers movement must take on. Again in Strasbourg during the recent debate, two trends emerged. We saw states and political forces which blindly follow the United States and aim to exacerbate tensions for domestic and international ends, apart from having a long-standing hatred of the USSR as the country which carried out the first revolution marking the end of capitalist world domination. The extreme stances within this group are those of the British Conservative Government and Strauss' German Christian Democrats.

Quest for Detente

There are, however, other states and parties in Europe which are to a greater or lesser extent resisting the logic of exacerbating tensions and are seeking the paths of dialog and detente. Berlinguer cited the Scandinavian countries and, in some respects, France, the FRG Government and several socialist and social democratic parties. In the final vote in Strasbourg, he said, the PCI formed a significant convergence with the European socialists and social democrats, while the Italian Christian Democrats found themselves alined with the opposite side. And, Berlinguer exclaimed, we were certainly in better company than those who voted with Strauss' Christian Democrats and Mrs Thatcher's Conservatives. We have sought and we continue to seek all possible convergences with the European peoples forces--Catholic, socialist and social democratic--and even bourgeois forces. This effort, which we intend to continue, does not of course lead us into the error of placing socialism and capitalism on the same level or of identifying with the social democratic outlook. We are fighting to supersede capitalism, but we are also aware that there will be no socialist future without the consolidation of peace; indeed, that democracy in Italy will not even progress without detente and peace. And for this very reason we are seeking convergence with all those--states, political forces, peoples and individuals--who are working for peace, wherever and however that may be.

As for the socialist and social democratic parties, Berlinguer said, we differ from them, but at the same time seek with them possible points of convergence on the topics of detente and peace, against the current offensive of the reactionary forces in almost all West European countries, in defense of democracy and for objectives of social progress. We do this because we believe that the West European workers movement can only fulfill its immediate tasks and its historical role if it manages to develop cooperation among all its components.

Next Comrade Enrico Berlinguer indicated five points, or lines, as the cornerstones of what the PCI maintains should become a joint action by the West European peace-loving forces and the Italian democratic forces:

1--Opposition and condemnation with respect to every act of force, every threat of the use of force and every act motivated by a logic of reprisals by any state whatever.

2--Action of moderation and stimulus with respect to the United States and the USSR, to encourage these two major powers, which bear the greatest responsibility for the fate of peace, to rediscover the path of a shared task, open to the free cooperation of all states, to guarantee detente, to help peacefully resolve current conflicts and controversies and to promote the world's peaceful development. We are not questioning the policy of alliance with the United States pursued by Italy and other European countries, but we are convinced that, in order to be really useful, a West European initiative must be free of any spirit of hostility or enmity toward either the United States or the USSR and must develop autonomously and, we maintain, as a task of mediation. Such an action is now indispensable on account of the worrying state which relations between the two major powers have reached and the shortcomings still revealed by their conduct.

3--Political and diplomatic initiatives, backed by a mass movement, to halt any further steps in the arms race and to start a progressive, balanced and controlled arms reduction. This means.

--A request to the United States to ratify the SALT II agreement;
--Negotiations between the two blocs (the Atlantic pact and the Warsaw Pact) on medium-range missiles in Europe;
--Restarting the Vienna talks on conventional weapons;
--Promoting initiatives, including new initiatives, which have been set aside for some time such as an all-Europe disarmament conference for instance.

4--The preparation of an agreed stance among the EEC countries to insure the success of the European development and cooperation conference due to take place in Madrid in the latter part of this year.

5--Initiatives for tackling and surmounting the economic causes of the present international tensions, by establishing a new system of relations with Third and Fourth World countries.

We can now rightly say that the experiment of participating in the majority but not the government cannot and must not be repeated, Berlinguer said. Indeed, we remain loyal to our decision to be either in the government or in opposition. This is because it is now proven that other solutions do not guarantee the implementation of the programs and laws, do not insure effective solidarity and honesty in the parties' conduct, and do free government actions from the direct surveillance, intervention and contribution which can only be exercised and implemented by full members of the government.

Next Berlinguer referred to the recent conclusion of the Italian Socialist Party Central Committee debate. This was, he said, a turbulent Central Committee meeting, but it did not lead to a split; we followed it without "avidity" (contrary to someone's absurd assertion) and without interfering in any way in that party's internal management. We followed that debate with attentive interest, paying particular attention to the decisions on the political line, inasmuch as decisions in this connection could influence one way or another the country's crisis and the conduct of the other parties, starting with the Christian Democratic Party [DC], which is about to hold its congress.

From this viewpoint, the decision reached unanimously by the Socialist comrades was clear, inasmuch as it proposes as the only solution for satisfactorily tackling the emergency an organic national unity government without the ideological prejudices which have hitherto prevented that solution.

This decision eliminates the hypothesis of the five-party government and deprives the DC of any excuses: That is, it makes it very difficult for the DC to invent any new kind of expedient. It is a decision which strengthens the two leftwing parties in their relations now with the DC.

It is impossible to forcast whether this solution will be realized, and if so when. One thing is certain, however: Unless we move in this direction, which is now so necessary to the country, the situation will certainly deteriorate, and we will be able to talk about I don't know what kind of ungovernability in Italy. However, if we create a possibility of forming a government representing a real national solidarity, then, at that point, our party will carefully examine whether the conditions for our government participation exist. Berlinguer indicated the following conditions:

1--Equal rank for all parties participating in the government coalition, taking into account their respective political and parliamentary weight;

2--A clear and specific program, with exact dates and behavioral commitments, under continuous scrutiny by the workers masses and the citizens.

PRESS COMMENTS ON CARTER OLYMPIC BOYCOTT PROPOSAL

AU221600 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 22 Jan 80 AU

[Text] Rome, January 22 (ANSA)--The Italian press focused today on the decision taken by United States President Jimmy Carter to boycott the Olympic games if the Soviets do not withdraw from Afghanistan within a month. Carter yesterday repeated that the U.S. would not take part in the Olympics in Moscow or would ask that the games be transferred elsewhere if Soviet troops were not pulled out of Afghanistan, and urged friendly nations to follow suit. The Italian papers today stressed that such a move could strike deep at the Soviet Union, but added that the boycott might boomerang on the U.S.

Rome's LA REPUBBLICA claimed that Carter's threat split Europe and all of the West. "The American President has decided to punish the Kremlin with a step that will inevitably become public in the USSR and therefore seriously undermine the prestige of the regime; but if the Soviet leaders are trembling, Western Europe is seriously divided over the choice of whether to follow the White House and thus adopt a line of frontal clash with the USSR, or to attempt to keep a dialoge open with the Soviets," the daily said.

Milan's GIORNALE NUOVO stressed the contradictory nature of the American position. If the boycott received widespread support it would become an effective propaganda weapon that would tend to isolate the Soviet Union, but if there is insufficient support, the propaganda effect would backfire, the paper said. The daily saw the Olympics issue as a crucial test of the solidarity among the allies.

The Italian Socialist Party paper AVANTI said that the American ultimatum had created embarrassment in the Western nations and in the Third World. Many of these governments are wondering about the utility of such a gesture. On the one hand, the boycott appeared to be the most noticeable and possibly the most intolerable step for the Kremlin, the paper said. On the other, the move would radicalize the opposition between the two blocs and squelch hopes of resuscitating detente in the near future, according to the paper.

Rome's PAESE SERA came out against the American ultimatum, and analyzed the Carter move from a purely political point of view. The paper felt that Carter's plan was to isolate the Soviet Union by lowering a 1980's version of the Iron Curtain, which would not stop at the Olympics. According to PAESE SERA, Afghanistan had little or nothing to do with all this. Of much more import were the coming presidential elections, the paper claimed, and asked whether the Western loyalty of Italy and of Europe had to be measured in terms of the electoral fortunes of the candidate from Georgia.

Both Milan's IL GIORNO and the Christian Democratic Party paper IL POPOLO stressed the American people's backing for the boycott. The Milan (?daily) said that 86 percent of the American public was [words indistinct] Carter's boycott.

The Council of Ministers approved on 22 January a proposal by Foreign Minister Freitas do Amaral comprising the following measures:

Until a further reassessment of the matter is made, all official visits and contacts of a political nature between Portugal and the USSR will be affected. The Portuguese-Soviet agreement envisaging cultural and scientific cooperation will be denounced. The fisheries agreement between Lisbon and Moscow will not be signed. That is the message which Kalinin will be conveying to the Kremlin.

GOVERNMENT ORGANS REACT TO SAKHAROV EXILE

Foreign Ministry

LD241334 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has released a note on the arrest of Professor Sakharov. The ministry condemns what it calls the repression of Sakharov by the Soviet Government and adds that this repression is part of an overall lack of respect for human rights and the individual freedom of citizens, which has already been demonstrated by the invasion of Afghanistan.

The note concludes: The international community is reacting strongly to this further clear demonstration of the policies of the Soviet Union, which violate the spirit and principles of the Helsinki Final Act, which the USSR undertook to respect.

Prime Minister's Office

LD242208 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1930 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] The prime minister's office has issued a communique which supports, in a way, the motion passed in parliament yesterday protesting the arrest of Soviet citizen Andrey Sakharov. The communique stated that the Portuguese people's solidarity with Sakharov is most deep, and that there are no valid political arguments against the principles of dignity upheld by the Nobel Peace Prize winner, who has been waging a courageous struggle against an authoritarian and inhuman regime, which is a model for all peoples and a warning to all antidemocratic regimes.

GREEK FOREIGN MINISTER CONCLUDES OFFICIAL VISIT

Signs Road Transport Agreement

LD240026 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 2000 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Greek Foreign Minister Yeoryios Rallis this afternoon signed in Madrid with his Spanish colleague a bilateral agreement on road transport. Rallis, who is in the Spanish capital on an official visit, was today received by prime minister Adolfo Suarez and had a meeting with the minister for relations with the EEC, Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo, and with Congress President Landelino Lavilla.

Holds Press Conference

LD242102 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpts] Greek Foreign Minister Yeoyyios Rallis ended his official 3-day visit to Spain this afternoon. Shortly before leaving Madrid this afternoon, Yeoyyios Rallis held a press conference. Our colleague, Manuel Garcia Montenegro, now gives us an account of the press conference:

At his press conference in the EFE agency's Madrid offices this afternoon, the Greek foreign minister said: My visit will undoubtedly increase our relations in all fields. With this he ended his official visit to Spain. Rallis said our future cooperation in the political and cultural fields is encouraging but this is not the case in the economic field because our agricultural and industrial products are the same. However, we could work even within this to find good bases for cooperation on a business level by, for example, setting up joint companies in the industrial field.

The Greek minister also spoke about his country's problems with Turkey which, he said, should be resolved with the cooperation of international tribunals but above all with good faith and understanding by Greece and Turkey.

Finally, asked by a journalist about the possibility of Greece being the permanent site of the Olympic games, Rallis replied that Greece proposed this 2 years ago. He said that he understood that this would be the way to rescue certain economically weak countries from the very high cost of organizing the games.

GOVERNMENT CONTINUES TO PREPARE FOR CSCE FOLLOWUP

LD231526 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 23 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Reliable sources say that Spain has not even considered the possibility of not attending the Moscow Olympics, in spite of comments to this effect from other countries.

No country has officially proposed to Spain that the CSCE followup due to open in Madrid in November might be suspended, Spanish diplomatic sources have said. The same sources said that some people have spoken of the danger facing the conference in the wake of recent international disputes but they have always been speaking personally. Spain, they also said, is going ahead with the planned program of preparations for the technical side of the conference, while the specially created committee is studying our country's position on the questions that may be raised during the working sessions. All the countries taking part are continuing to show growing interest in the holding of the conference, especially because of these international events.

PVN CALLS FOR DEBATE ON AUTONOMY STATUTE

LD250044 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] The Euzkadi Buru Batzar, the highest organ of the Basque Nationalist Party [PNV], issued a communique after its meeting in Pamplona today. In the communique, the PNV proposes a radio and television debate between the prime minister, Adolfo Suarez, and Carlos Garaicoechea, president of the Basque General Council, to clarify, as far as possible the polemic over possible agreements on the statute of autonomy. Furthermore, the PNV insists: The Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] can say what it likes but there are agreements with the government.

In short, the communique says the following:

The PNV rejects the UCD and Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] position attitude calling our withdrawal from the Cortes electoralist, aimed at catching the most moderate sectors of our electorate. The government and UCD can say what they like but it is absolutely true that in June 1979 the UCD and government representatives arrived at agreements on the statute which they are violating today.

In the negotiations, held at highest level, the scope of specific and important questions such as the responsibility for education given to the Basque Country, the referendums for the future incorporation of Navarre into the autonomous community--one for Navarre alone, another for all the territories apart from the prior and later decision of the parliament--the autonomous police force and the joint nature of the safety committee and so on, was made clear. In general, the meaning and scope given to the provisions of the statute in these negotiations signify a real moral obligation to the PNV, an obligation as important as the most solemn of the agreements.

After observing the government's reaction, which sets its word against ours, this Euzkadi Buru Batzar invites the prime minister to take part in a radio and television debate with Carlos Garaicoechea, the Euzkadi Buru Batzar's speaker on the main points of the statute, to clarify this polemic as far as possible.

The communique continues: The Euzkadi Buru Batzar is not interested in perpetuating this polemic but in using efficient means so that the political climate may lose its virulence and the institutions may recover their full feasibility. The Euzkadi Buru Batzar finds it ironic that the PNV be asked to account for its disagreements in parliament from its minority grouping, while the majority force, which negotiated the statute with the PNV, drafts laws that contravene it and mechanically states its approval with the consent of the PSOE and other forces.

In view of this polemic in which the UCD and PNV versions are opposed, we ask that, despite our possible mistakes, any failure to fulfill our obligations be pointed out. We allow ourselves to recall the government's ups and downs on autonomy which today affect other peoples, and especially the recent accusations levelled against it for its failure to fulfill its repeated obligations toward Andalucia by the PSOE secretary general.

Another point: We consider that the attack on the Alonsotegui Aldana bar as an act against us, as an attempt to radicalize the PNV and to force it to strike attitudes which will separate it from its rejection of all violence, causing internal recriminations and separating it from the democratic path mapped out.

It ends: The Euzkadi Buru Batzar asks without haste but without delay for the creation of the autonomous police force which will have the people's trust and which will be the main instrument for the pacification of the Basque Country

NORWAY

NKP CC SPLITS 8 TO 5 IN FAVOR OF SOVIET ACTION

LD241045 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 15 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Nils Ottar Ask report: "Split"]

[Text] Last night Norwegian Communist Party [NKP] Chairman Martin Gunnar Knudsen won the support of the majority of the party's Central Committee for his view of the Soviet incursion into Afghanistan. By eight votes to five the Central Committee resolved to support the Soviet Union action in step with the views previously expressed in the party organ FRIHETEN.

It was the NKP's statement of principles on nonintervention in other states' affairs which was the premise for the discussion and the stand of the Central Committee majority. The resolution states that the Central Committee deems it proven that the Soviet Union's military support was given following an appeal by Afghanistan's lawful government and in accordance with the treaty of assistance between the two countries.

The Central Committee also deems it proven that guerrilla forces had entered Afghanistan from Pakistan. A victory for these forces would have returned the country to a medieval feudal system. It would also have resulted in a change in the balance of power in the area. We would strongly advise against using the events in Afghanistan as a pretext for beginning another period of cold war. In the future also the only way open is to build further on the policy of detente and continued negotiations between NATO and the Warsaw Pact countries, the Central Committee resolution states.

There were no representatives for the minority present when the party called a press conference after the meeting.

It is usual practice in the NKP for only the majority's resolutions to be made public, the party chairman said, although he made it clear that the minority's view will also be made known to the party's grassroots organizations.

He also brushed aside the disagreement among central officials and in the party's grassroots organizations.

The disagreement is not so serious. It is a question not of directly opposing views but of differing assessments of the matter, Knudsen said; neither does he fear a subsequent split in the party.

Asked whether he expected recriminations or resignations, he replied that to date he has had no reason to believe that this will happen, adding:

In all parties and movements throughout time there have been deserters. So there would be nothing sensational if there were some reaction after this affair, he opined.

The party chairman also said that he believes that he and the majority are well supported in their view by the party's grassroots organizations. A potential discussion of this affair in the National Committee would most certainly provide a comparatively far greater majority, he said. Yet he does not expect a demand for the National Committee to discuss this at an extraordinary session.

The party chairman also made it clear that measures will not be and have not been taken against those officials who have publicly expressed a view different from that of the majority of the Secretariat. Yet he does consider that following the party Central Committee's decision, public statements by the minority's representatives will be contrary to party rules and to how the party ought to work in practice.

GOVERNMENT OFFERS GENERAL SUPPORT FOR CARTER OBJECTIVES

LD241407 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1340 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Britain today offered general support for the basic foreign policy objectives set out by President Carter in his State of the Union message last night. A Foreign Office spokesman said the basic goals set out by President Carter were shared by the West as a whole. The spokesman welcomed the proposals for strengthening the West's defences and the promise of Western support to Pakistan and countries in the Gulf area. The spokesman said they had still to study the full text of President Carter's address.

LORD CARRINGTON ANNOUNCES MEASURES AGAINST USSR

LD241636 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1550 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] In a tough package of measures against the Soviet Union, Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington tonight announced that Britain will end high-level and ministerial contacts with Russia. Military exchanges will be cancelled and broadcasts to Russia and Afghanistan by the BBC will be boosted, in the wake of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. If the Russians were to be deterred, "sustained and significant response will be needed," he told the House of Lords.

The trade agreement with Russia negotiated by the last Labour governments, which expires next month, will not be renewed, he announced. The Russians must understand that there can be no (?good) relationship so long as they behave as outrageously as they have done in Afghanistan," he said.

The foreign secretary added: "For the Olympics now to be held in Moscow would condone Soviet aggression abroad and repression at home."

Lord Carrington said: "The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan is an event of the widest significance. For the first time since the Second World War, Soviet combat troops have been used in massive numbers outside Europe to establish a military hold on a sovereign non-aligned country. The Soviet action is a breach of all the conventions which have governed East-West relations for the last decade. It is a vivid demonstration of the Soviet drive to gain wider influence wherever possible, by propaganda, by subversion, and where necessary by force."

The foreign secretary said: "With the arrest of the Nobel Peace Prize winner, Dr. Sakharov, Russian action reflects "cynical disregard for world opinion." He warned: "It is bound to affect our attitude in current and future negotiations between East and West, though we naturally want these to continue where they clearly serve our own interests as well as those of the Soviet Union."

"But the present crisis is not in the first instance an East-West confrontation between superpowers. Although the significance of the Soviet action is world wide, its immediate impact has been on the region of South West Asia, and on the neighboring Muslim countries.

"Afghanistan is a strategic salient into the region. One is bound to ask oneself where the Russian drive is to stop. If the Russians are to be deterred, a sustained and significant response will be needed, not only from the West, but from the countries which themselves feel threatened."

Of his tour, Lord Carrington said he visited Turkey, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Pakistan and India, with a brief call at Bahrain.

"Despite the obvious differences of perspective, certain important points of agreement emerged. One was that the West and the countries of the area have a common interest in the stability and integrity of the Gulf and the Straits of Hormuz. In the light of the Soviet threat, Pakistan must be able to count on the material and political support of its friends. The real threat of [as received] Iran's recent revolution and to her future security came from the Russians. Finally, there was of course a general repugnance in the Islamic countries I visited at the Soviet onslaught on another Islamic [country].

"An effective response to the Soviet threat in South West Asia and its neighbourhood is above all a matter for the peoples of the region. All the statesmen with whom I spoke recognised the Soviet threat of intervention, by force or subversion, which now extends across the region as far as Yemen, and they accepted the responsibilities that flowed from this assessment. In particular, the need for solidarity among like-minded people, and for a fresh effort to overcome the divisions of the past was widely recognised.

"This will not be easy. Conflicts of local interest have to be overcome, and in some cases the present crisis has sharpened them. In India... I found a deep concern that Western military aid to Pakistan could disturb the delicate political balance in the sub-continent. The Indians have no desire to see their part of the world become the arena for a clash between the superpowers."

Lord Carrington: "The response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan is not, of course, the exclusive responsibility of the people of the region, even though theirs is the most immediate interest. They need--and they look for--material Western assistance, and a firm Western commitment to their security and independence.

"The West itself needs to find ways to make the Russians understand that they cannot break the rules of international behaviour with impunity, either now or in the future. This entails responses by individual countries, and by the West's collective organisations, about all by NATO and the European Community.

"In the region itself, the first need is to help Pakistan. There are already half a million Afghan refugees there. This number could soon double. Many of them bitterly oppose the Soviet invasion of their country and are determined to return. Their condition is wretched. Pakistan needs further help to tackle her political, economic and military problems. We are discussing with our allies how best to do this."

The foreign secretary told peers: "We need to develop our cooperation with Turkey both bilaterally and multilaterally. We need to strengthen our links with the countries of the Arab Peninsula. We look forward to rebuilding a mutually satisfactory relationship with the people and government of Iran once the American hostages in Tehran have been released."

The foreign secretary said: "Above all we believe that one of the most important of all possible contributions to the political stability of the area would be a settlement of the Arab-Israel conflict which recognised the rights of the Palestine people as well as Israel.

"Immediately after the Russian invasion, the British Government proposed that the North Atlantic alliance and the European Community should discuss the measures we might take, bilaterally and collectively, to impress on the Russians how seriously we view their actions. Some of our allies, notably the United States, have already acted. I expect others to follow suit."

Lord Carrington then announced the measures the government had decided to take. They were in addition to those related to Afghanistan which the minister of state announced on January 14, he said.

The British-Soviet credit agreement, concluded by the Labour government in 1975, expires on February 16. Its terms were too favourable to the Soviet Union, since the export credit was subsidised more than that which we extend to other countries. The government's view is that all trade should be pursued on a basis of mutual advantage. We shall apply that principle to British-Soviet trade. We do not propose to renew the credit agreement when it expires. Credit in the future will have to be considered on a case-by-case basis. Assuming that other Western countries do likewise--which would be very much to our collective advantage--we shall not provide export credit to the Soviet Union at rates more favourable than those set by the international consensus on credit terms", said Lord Carrington.

On technology, Britain was studying with other countries the tighter application of the COCOM [NATO coordinating committee for strategic goods] rules for controlling the transfer of sensitive technology to the Soviet Union.

"The European Community has decided not [to] export any food to the Soviet Union which would directly or indirectly replace supplies denied by the United States. The Community has therefore decided to curb exports of grain in the future," he said.

"Britain is also pressing for an end to subsidised sales of butter, meat and sugar to the Soviet Union. The government has also decided to avoid high-level and ministerial contacts with the Soviet Union for the time being. They will cancel military exchanges which were under consideration. They will avoid the kind of cultural and other events which would give an impression that nothing has changed and thus appear to condone Soviet aggression.

"In accordance with the agreement between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the BBC, I have approved an increase in broadcasts by the external services of the BBC to listeners in the Soviet Union and Afghanistan."

Lord Carrington then turned to the Olympic games. "The government sympathises deeply with the Olympic ideal that young people from all over the world should be able to compete freely together with no overtones of politics... But this view has never been shared by authoritarian governments, which expolit such events for their political advantage. As in 1936 for the Nazi government, so now for the Soviet Union the Olympic games are a major political undertaking designed to impress the whole world with the prestige of the system. For the games now to be held in Moscow would appear to condone Soviet aggression abroad and repression at home."

But Lord Carrington said that for the fames to be cancelled entirely would be a bitter blow to dedicated athletes in Britain and elsewhere. That was why the government believed they should be moved.

"They will not be easy," he continued. "But it should not be beyond the capacity of the 104 countries which condemned the Soviet Union in the United Nations. If necessary the games could be held in more than one country."

Recent Soviet actions in Afghanistan and at home were not a happy augury for the future, said Lord Carrington. "They undermine much of what has been achieved over the past decade and more to provide the basis for a stable and mutually satisfactory relationship between East and West. They underline the need, above all, to develop political solidarity among the members of the European Community and between the members of the North Atlantic alliance.

"It is from that political solidarity, and from the defensive arrangements which accompany it, that our dealings with the Russians have to start. But both East and West live on one planet. The consequences of serious miscalculation could be disastrous for very many of its inhabitants.

"It is right that the Russians should feel the strength of our disapproval," declared the foreign secretary. That should help them to avoid miscalculation in the future. But it is also right that we should, where possible, continue the search for arms control agreements, commercially justified trade, and other arrangements of mutual benefit.

"In the long run both we and the Russians need a sound East-West relationship. But the Russians must understand that there can be no such relationship so long as they behave as outrageously as they have done in Afghanistan." Earlier the foreign secretary told peers the Russian invasion of Afghanistan had "soured" the atmosphere for detente.

"The atmosphere has been soured by what has happened", he said: But Lord Carrington added, it did not stop Western and Warsaw Pact countries from seeking arms limitation "which is advantageous to both sides."

The foreign secretary had been challenged by Labour Peer Lord Brockway to combine condemnation of the Soviet Union's action with an extended campaign for disarmament. He pointed out that President Carter in his State of the Union message had insisted that nuclear arms control was the foremost responsibility of the two superpowers. Lord Carrington replied: "I do not think the government would in any way differ from the sentiments of the United States."

CABINET MINISTER DENOUNCES OLYMPIC AUTHORITIES' ATTITUDE

LD241241 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1227 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] A Cabinet minister today denounced the Olympic authorities for their cool response to appeals from the British and American governments to boycott the games or move them from Moscow. Mr Angus Maude, who as paymaster-general is in charge of government information, said: "Disrupting the Russian propaganda plans for the Olympics is the one and only major way of jolting the Russians into a realisation of world disapproval because it is the one thing that could not be concealed from their people."

He said the reaction of the Olympic establishment, that sport had no concern with politics, was "extremely alarming." This had nothing to do with the present case, Mr Maude said in a statement. "Those who seek to deny the Russians a propaganda spectacular, which they could present as world approval of an unprovoked invasion, are not just playing politics. They are trying to deter the Soviet Union from doing it again, perhaps in an area which would provoke a world war. It is human lives which are at stake.

"I understand very well the feelings of young athletes trained for their once-only chance to show that they are the best in the world--and in some cases to lay the foundations of a lucrative professional career. The disappointment would be agonising, but the survival of freedom and even of human life affects us all. Let us hear no more of this nonsense about sport and politics. Let those who wish to find excuses for encouraging, however indirectly, the Russians to conquer more countries and arrest more Sakharovs, do so. But let them be quite clear what they are doing and not seek to dismiss those who think they are wrong as being concerned merely with politics."

Britain's Olympics boss, Sir Dennis Follows, met Sports Minister Hector Munro today for talks on Mrs Thatcher's suggestion to switch the games from Moscow. But before they met, the British Olympic Association [BOA], of which Sir Dennis is chairman, had already delivered its reply to the prime minister's request. Although no details were given, BOA General Secretary Dick Palmer said the reply did not differ from unofficial views already expressed. The association said yesterday there was no possibility of some events being held in Britain. Any decision to boycott the games in Moscow--and at this stage that seems unlikely--would have to be taken by the National Olympic Committee, which meets in March.

DEFENSE MINISTER OUTLINES NEW NUCLEAR WEAPONS SYSTEM

LD241950 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1812 GMT 24 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Britain's hitherto secret 1 billion pound project to enable our Polaris nuclear deterrent to penetrate upgraded Russian missile defences was disclosed by Defence Secretary Mr Francis Pym when he opened tonight's major Commons debate on the role of nuclear weapons in Britain's defence policy.

The project, codenamed "Chevaline" involves improvements to the guidance system of the Submarine-launched warheads. Development is nearing completion, Mr Pym told MPs.

Mr Pym said "without breaching the provisions of the 1972 treaty on anti-ballistic missile defence, the Soviet Union has continued to upgrade its ABM capacilities, and we have needed to respond to that upgrading in order to maintain the deterrent assurance of our force. The last Conservative government therefore pressed ahead with a programme of improvements to our Polaris missiles, which our immediate predecessors continued and sustained. I cannot go deep into detail, even to correct the widely mistaken assertions which have sometimes appeared in public--but I think the programme has now reached a stage where I can properly make public more information about it."

Then he disclosed "the programme, which has the codename Chevaline, is a very major and complex development of the missile [word indistinct] involving also changes to the fire control systems. The result will not be a MIRV (multiple independently targeted re-entry vehicle) system, but it includes advanced penetration aids and the ability to manoeuvre the payload in space. The programme has been funded and managed entirely by the UK, with the full cooperation of the US Government including the use of certain US facilities for trials and tests."

Mr Pym said the Chevaline project, mounted in co-operation with the Americans, had cost 1 billion pounds with most of the work being done by British firms. When completed, the project would equip the Polaris force with the ability to penetrate deep into Russian defence zones, and to manoeuvre pay-loads in space.

"We have had a very successful series of flight trials," said Mr Pym, "and development is close to completion. Deployment will begin soon afterwards and maintain the full effectiveness of our strategic deterrent into the 1990s. For that period of time we can have the confidence that our strategic deterrent force is equipped absolutely to fulfill its deterrent function."

Mr Pym went on, "for a variety of technical and operational reasons we cannot sensibly or responsibly plan on its continuance much into the 1990s, and we intend to ensure that our strategic deterrent remains effective for a long time thereafter." He said the length of time involved in producing the complex force required made it necessary to consider an ultimate replacement to Polaris.

Mr Pym said the United States fully supported Britain's maintenance of a strategic deterrent capability and would support Britain in providing such a force.

A new force to succeed Polaris, which was currently being considered by the government would cost in the range of 4-5 billion pounds this would be spread over a ten to fifteen year period.

"The acquisition of any new system would be very much likely to absorb much more than 5 percent of the defence budget. That is still a massive demand on our limited resources, but we must keep it in perspective of what modern defence provisions cost. Even 5 percent of the budget, if it were that, would be much lower than the proportion reached during the build up of the U-bomber force in the 1950's."

Mr Pym said, "I do not think there is any prospective alternative defence application of the same amount of resources that would bring Britain and NATO a bigger dividend in security than this one would," he said.

"We believe also that Britain's own nuclear effort makes a key contribution to alliance security, which no other member in practice is able to make."

DAILY TELEGRAPH REPORTS ON PROGRESS AT ULSTER CONFERENCE

LD241201 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 24 Jan 80 p 16 LD

[Editorial: "Mr Atkins' Seminar"]

[Text] Perhaps the most hopeful aspect of Mr Atkins's constitutional conference in Belfast is the growing recognition of its limitations. Indeed, it is now regarded more as a seminar than as a conference. The theory is that it will not end in precise agreement or disagreement but in a thorough elucidation of the beliefs and aspirations of all the participants. It will then be for the British Government to draw its own conclusions and announce its own settlement.

So far the proceedings (which Mr Atkins is obviously managing with outstanding tact and patience) would seem to have been tedious but civil. Should they end in anything resembling a consensus (and this remains highly unlikely), even that would have to be submitted to various tests. Would the agreement, though acceptable to Mr Paisley and Mr Hume, be equally acceptable to their respective supporters? The assumption that Mr Paisley has a hypnotic power over his followers which enables him to deliver them wherever he wishes is plainly untrue and does not, incidentally, appear to be shared by Mr Paisley. Mr Hume is very much the prisoner of a party. Even supposing that a settlement genuinely acceptable to Mr Hume's SDLP [Social Democratic and Labour Party] and Mr Paisley's DUP [Democratic Unionists Party] were found, would it command the acquiescence of the Official Unionists, who will have nothing to do with the conference and who (though Mr Paisley has done his best to conceal the fact) can still claim to be the strongest party in Ulster?

Above all, any constitutional structure which emerges must be solid and not the mere registration of a momentary conjunction of tactical interests, requiring to be shored up by continual interventions from Whitehall. By Easter, then, the British Government should make up its mind, not forgetting that it is in search of a settlement acceptable to the people, and not merely to the politicians of Ulster. It will then be for the government (it is to be hoped without undue barracking from Dublin and the USA) to embark on the initiative that really matters--a thoroughgoing military onslaught on the IRA.

Meeting With Kiprianou

NC241222 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 24 Jan 80 NC

[Text] At noon today GDR Foreign Minister Fischer, who is on an official visit to Cyprus, was received by President Kiprianou. Fischer was accompanied by Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

In a statement after the meeting, President Kiprianou said that he warmly thanked Fischer for the GDR's consistent and constant stand of support on the Cyprus problem at all levels, particularly at the United Nations. He added: During the meeting it was noted that both sides have the good will to further strengthen the already existing good relations of friendship between both peoples.

The president announced that an invitation from Mr Honecker to visit the GDR had been conveyed to him on behalf of the GDR party and government. President Kiprianou said that the invitation had been accepted and that 15 June had been tentatively fixed as the date of the visit.

[Text] GDR Foreign Minister Fischer's official visit to Cyprus ended today with the signing of three bilateral agreements. The agreements were signed for the Cyprus side by Foreign Minister Rolandhis and for the GDR side by Foreign Minister Fischer. Departure

[Excerpts] GDR Foreign Minister Fischer's official visit to Cyprus ended today with the signing of three bilateral agreements. Rolandhis and Fischer expressed their satisfaction over the signing of the agreements and over the results of their talks, stressing that this would further strengthen the already good bilateral relations.

In his statement, Rolandhis said that Fischer's visit took place within the framework of a tradition of bilateral exchanges. He said: We had the opportunity to exchange views over a broad range of questions, with special emphasis on the Cyprus problem, bilateral relations and international problems. I would like to convey again to Mr Fischer the Cyprus Government's thanks for the GDR's unreserved support of Cyprus, its people and their struggle. We now look forward to President Kiprianou's visit to Berlin next summer, a visit that will undoubtedly contribute to the further strengthening of the good relations between both countries.

In his statement, Fischer said that his visit to Cyprus fully met his expectations. He added that his talks were held in a constructive atmosphere of mutual confidence. Fischer said: The mutual respect that we have met everywhere is of particular significance for me. The entire visit is a demonstration of friendly relations based on strong foundations. I agree that bilateral cooperation must be expanded in the future.

The visiting foreign minister said that he was impressed by the Cypriot people's achievements and industriousness. He added: I have been most impressed by the Cypriot people's appreciation of the GDR's solidarity and of the friendly relations between both our countries. I particularly appreciate your people's special regard for my country.

Fischer then referred to his meetings, particularly to his meeting with the president of the republic, and expressed satisfaction and pleasure over President Kiprianou's forthcoming visit to GDR. He added: The GDR party, government and people look forward to this great event, which will undoubtedly serve as a new impetus to develop further our relations. Fischer also said that Kiprianou's visit to GDR would promote detente and serve as an example for other countries that cooperation brings about positive results.

The GDR foreign minister voiced his country's opposition to the NATO decision to establish new nuclear missiles in Europe, adding that this would only bring about negative results for the world. Fischer also stated that he was opposed to the establishment of military bases. He added: This policy is directed against peace, detente and the basic interests of all the people. In my opinion, Fischer said, detente is also necessary for solving the Cyprus problem. The GDR maintains that the results achieved by detente during the 1970's must be continued during the 1980's.

Fischer left around noon for his country. At Larnaca Airport, he was seen off by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, by members of the diplomatic corps and by other officials.

TFSC FOREIGN MINISTER SCORES FISCHER FOR NOT VISITING NORTH

TA241740 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1300 GMT 24 Jan 80 TA

[Text] The foreign affairs, defense and tourism minister has said that the fact that GDR Minister of Foreign Affairs Oskar Fischer did not visit northern Cyprus, despite an invitation, clearly reflects the attitude of the GDR toward the Turkish Cypriot community, which has the right and status of cofounder in the independence and sovereignty of Cyprus. Noting that Fischer's visit to northern Cyprus would be very beneficial for understanding the situation of the Turkish Cypriot community, which is a partner in Cyprus' independence, Atakol said: It is possible to realize the realities of Cyprus, form an opinion on Cyprus and be able to make impartial and conscious decisions on Cyprus only by visiting, seeing and listening to both communities.

RIZOSPASTIS SCORES CARTER'S STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS

[From the "Radical" column: "Carter's Threats"]

[Excerpts] The unprecedented cold war spirit which dominates Carter's written message to Congress from beginning to end, the Hitler-like threats which the U.S. President unleashes against the Soviet Union, his "sword-rattling" that the "United States is ready to pay any price in order to remain the strongest country in the world" are all clear examples of the deep and multifaceted crisis through which U.S. imperialism is now passing. All of this is nothing but proof of its inability to discover a way out of and to cope with the complex problems created by its rapacious policy in areas of the world controlled by Washington, as well as problems inside America itself wherever broadening masses express their discontent and their protest against the continually rising prices, inflation, unemployment and against the huge and annually increasing military expenditure for the sake of which social spending is being correspondingly decreased. Wall Street cannot accept the fact that the Iranian revolution cost it the control of Iranian banks and oilfields and that the arms manufacturing conglomerates lost $7 billion which they annually collected from the shah. This is why they pressure their political and military representatives at the White House and at the Pentagon for new orders. Imperialism does not want detente and it has proved this repeatedly. Now that the efforts of U.S. imperialism have failed thanks to the Soviet aid requested by the Afghan Government, now that their efforts to convert Afghanistan into another Iran under the shah, now that their efforts to exterminate its population through their agents have failed, President Carter has lost his composure. He threatens the Soviet Union that "it will pay dearly" because it "subjugated an independent Islamic and nonalined nation" and because through its "intervention" it now threatens the entire Southeast Asia region and Pakistan." In an effort to rouse the feelings of the Americans and in order to incite their national spirit Carter proclaimed in his message to Congress that "the United States is facing one of the most serious provocations in the nation's history." It is with this "ace in the hole" that Carter demanded an increase of military expenditures in the amount of billions of dollars so that the United States might be able to intervene with its 100,000 "strike force" even in areas "outside NATO's zone." Without a doubt this "sword-rattling" demonstrates weakness because if imperialism had its old strength it would not have used simple threats; instead, it would have carried out these threats. This, however, in no way means that the situation is not dangerous because the "paranoiacs" who would press the button of calamity always continue to exist. Consequently all those who hastened, in one way or the other, to announce their presence and their support of this mad anti-Soviet campaign unleashed by Washington's imperialists as a result of Soviet assistance to Afghanistan, should come to their senses because the Washington imperialists are only trying to justify preparations for their criminal plans.

BULGARIA DENIES CONCENTRATION OF SOVIET TROOPS

AT231952 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 23 Jan 80 AT

[Text] Deputy Foreign Minister Andreas Zaimis today was visited by the Bulgarian charge d'affairs in Athens who handed him a statement by the Bulgarian Government which emphatically denied recent reports on concentration of Soviet troops in Bulgaria near the Yugoslav frontier. The statement stressed that no Soviet troops are stationed in Bulgaria and that there is no Bulgarian intention to intervene in Yugoslavia regardless of whoever comprises the Yugoslav leadership.

RIZOSPASTIS REPORTS 'SILENT EXPANSION' OF U.S. BASES

AT241435 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 24 Jan 80 pp 1, 11 AT [Excerpts] Broader U.S. and NATO interventionist goals are revealed by the U.S. landing exercises in Lakonia which coincide in time, without this being a pure coincidence, with the culmination of anti-Soviet "danger-mongering" in the area. These dangerous developments were stressed by the KKE in an interpellation submitted to the Chamber of Deputies yesterday. It was stressed that Vatika has been turned into a permanent U.S. bridgehead on Greek territory. This fact is tantamount to a silent expansion of the status of foreign bases in our country.

The U.S. exercises, which are also attended by Greek Armed Forces, continued today for the third consecutive day, while the residents of the area demonstrated a strong spirit of disapproval. Democratic opposition circles stressed the absolute silence with which the government is surrounding the whole issue after its first terse announcement. They specifically stressed the ever increasing danger that our country may get involved in the adventurist preparations of its Western "allies" despite contrary government assurances. It is characteristic that:

--In an official statement a government spokesman alined himself with the new cold war expressions of Western propaganda around the "Sakharov case" even though he used controlled language. Replying to press questions he said "the Greek Government firmly upholds the principle of respect for human rights everywhere and at all times."

--Absolute silence prevails over the official Greek position toward NATO's consultation "on probable developments" in the Balkans and the People's Republic of Yugoslavia, which are attended by a Greek representative at the headquarters of the Atlantic alliance.

As announced yesterday the Bulgarian charge d'affairs visited Deputy Foreign Minister Zaimis and handed him a statement by the Bulgarian Government which emphatically denied Western inventions about the alleged concentration "of Soviet troops in Bulgaria close to the Yugoslav frontier."

The U.S. exercises at Vatika of Lakonia are in full operation. The first phase was completed with operations by a helicopter squadron at Vatika Bay. At the same time, however, naval exercises are being held at the south tip of Cape Malea with possible landing operations. In this way the field of the exercises is being extended to the entire area of Cape Malea and is not confined to Vatika Bay. The landing exercises are being conducted by two battalions of Marines, amphibious tanks and tracked personnel carriers with the support of aircraft from the U.S. Sixth Fleet. The U.S. Naval force is made up of seven units. Greek Naval units, including the landing craft "Navkratousa" are "cooperating" with the U.S. Naval units.

KKE CENTRAL COMMITTEE EXAMINES INTERNATIONAL EVENTS

AT231830 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 23 Jan 80 p 1 AT

[Text] The plenum of the Central Committee of the KKE met [no date given] and examined the international situation and particularly the situation in our own area as it has developed after the attack of the imperialists against detente and their efforts to create an anti-Soviet bloc. The plenum of the Central Committee stressed that through their struggle the peoples of the world can frustrate the plans of the imperialists and they can defend the policy of peace and detente. In conjunction with the international situation the plenum also dealt with recent internal political developments and particularly examined the question of a unified struggle by the workers against the unprecedented rise in prices and against the government's authoritarian measures.

The resoluton of the plenary session of the Central Committee will soon be released for publication. [Dated] January 1980, [signed] by the Presidium of the plenum.

ERKMEN LEAVES FOR ISLAMABAD, COMMENTS ON CARTER STATEMENT

TA251118 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 25 Jan 80 TA

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen has left Istanbul for Pakistan to participate in the Islamic countries' foreign ministers extraordinary meeting to be held in Islamabad. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport before his departure, Erkmen said that Soviet intervention in Afghanistan will be discussed at the meetings to be held between 26 and 28 January [as heard]. Recalling that the Turkish view regarding the intervention had been disclosed earlier, Erkmen said that it was intervention in an independent country and that the situation will be discussed with other Islamic countries. He added that during his stay in Pakistan he will also hold contacts with Pakistani Government officials and with the foreign ministers participating in the meetings.

In reply to a question on whether or not the world was on the brink of a third world war following the statement made by U.S. President Carter yesterday, Erkmen said: No one can make definite judgments on such a possibility. One can not wish for such a possibility. However, war is the undesirable result of international relations. I hope and wish that such a possibility will be averted. We will continue our efforts in that direction.

VOTCP SCORES CARTER MOVE TO BOYCOTT OLYMPICS

TA250915 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 25 Jan 80 TA

[Unattributed commentary: "The Directive of Carter and the Bayonet of the Militarist Clique"]

[Excerpt] Dear listeners, the foreign policy of Turkey is being determined by Washington and by the militarist clique called the National Security Council. The letter sent by U.S. President Carter to Koruturk and the statement the militarist clique made on domestic and world issues confirms this fact. Carter's letter reminds one of the famous letter sent by Johnson to Inonu. However, at the time, Johnson had ordered the Inonu government not to place U.S. arms in the hands of the armed forces without the permission of Washington, thus rendering our armed forces a tool for securing imperialist interests. In his letter, Carter forces Turkey to boycott the 1980 Olympics to be held in Moscow. Dear listeners, these two letters sent from Washington to Ankara governments spanning a period of 20 years reveal that the essence of the U.S. strategic policy vis-a-vis Turkey has not changed at all and that Washington is using Turkey as a springboard toward realizing its expansionist and aggressive aims in the region. When U.S. plans in Iran and Afghanistan were foiled, Western interest and plans involving Turkey gained prominence. Not a day passes by without a Western news agency or a Western newspaper mentioning Turkey.

One of the major issues discussed at the Genscher-Carter meetings was the so-called urgent aid to Turkey. Why have the Western monopolies suddenly become so generous towards Turkey which, up to now, was called the sick man of the Bosporus and which did not qualify for loans? Has the Turkish economy become so reliable in such a short time? No, this is not the case. The intention is to attach Turkey closely to the imperialist bloc and to use our country, which has a strategic significance, as a tool of provocation and aggression against socialist countries and national liberation movements for many years to come. Let us recall a statement made by Nimetz, one of Washington's foreign policy experts who initialed the bilateral slavery agreement in Ankara. Following developments in Iran and Afghanistan, Turkey has become the sole support and hope of the West. Dear listeners, one should assess the increasing Western pressure on Turkey and the plots being staged to advance Western interest in this light.

What is the letter sent by Carter to Koruturk, the directive to boycott the Moscow Olympics, but a blatant interference in our domestic affairs? Just as the economic embargo imposed by Washington on the Soviet Union, the moves made by the Carter administration to use sports as a tool for its political aims is, in the words of Comrade Brezhnev, a boomeranging to hit those who initiated it. The International Olympic Committee and all national Olympic committees have protested efforts, by Washington to use sports as a tool for political aims and have announced that they will participate in the Moscow Olympic games. The Turkish Olympic Committee and the government should refrain from moves which will contribute to the cold war policy of imperialism. As has been pointed out in the statement issued by the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] on 31 December 1980, internationalist aid to the struggles waged by peoples toward national liberation and social progress is the unchanging Leninist policy principle of the Soviet Union. This principle is expressed in the Soviet Constitution. Attempts to defame the internationalist aid extended by the Soviet Union to the Afghan people through a campaign of anti-Sovietism will yield no results other than fueling the cold war and increasing international tension. Our people sincerely support Soviet internationalist aid. Our people are against every boycott and provocation directed or to be directed against the Soviet Union, the bastion of peace. Our people have not forgotten the aid extended by the Soviet Union, our great neighbor, during our war of independence.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS DEVALUES LIRA

[Excerpts] The Council of Ministers, which met today, has readjusted the rate of the Turkish lira and the stamp duty on imports. Except for some cases, the U.S. dollar is now worth 70 Turkish lira. The following statement was issued in connection with resolutions made during the Council of Ministers meeting which began today at 1030 and is still continuing: In a bid to revive the economy, which is undergoing great difficultires, to promote exportations, to increase foreign exchange revenues, to fight inflation, to eliminate shortages and to accelerate production and investments, the Council of Ministers plans to take some stabilizing measures. In its meeting held today, the Council of Ministers readjusted the rate of the Turkish lira and the stamp duty imposed on import transactions.

Decree No 23 dealing with this change for the preservation of the value of the Turkish currency says that except for some cases, the U.S. dollar will be worth 70 Turkish lira from the time of the publication of this decree. The Turkish Central Bank is authorized--taking into consideration the new rate of the U.S. dollar and the differences existing among other foreign exchange currencies--to determine and to announce the rate of the Turkish lira against all other foreign exchange currencies that the Central Bank buys or sells.

Demirel Statement on Devaluation

TA242046 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 24 Jan 80 TA

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that today the Council of Ministers took certain serious economic measures, which are difficult for governments, and noted that if these measures are not taken the country will face much greater problems within 3 months. In a statement at the end of the Council of Ministers meeting, which lasted 12 hours, Demirel said:

[Begin Demirel recording] The Council of Ministers worked for 12 hours on economic and other issues. The Turkish economy was paralyzed in November 1979. It is impossible for the economy to operate in this manner; it is necessary to take serious and difficult measures, which are difficult for any government to take. If these measures are not taken, within 3 months Turkey will be in much worse condition than today. We took these measures. I will hold a new conference and explain to my nation the reasons for the measures to revive the Turkish economy to make our factories operational, to eliminate the shortages, to accelerate investments, to minimize unemployment and to increase our foreign currency income. We are trying to save the country from a state of emergency. Turkey shold be able to purchase 1.1 million tons of diesel oil. It should be able to purchase its fuel oil. This is what we are trying to secure through these measures. Turkey should be able to purchase its medicine and fertilizer. Everything will be available in Turkey, not at black market prices or at official prices, but at the real prices. The sacrifice is necessary for the future of the country. There is no alternative. [end recording]

Photographs of certain communist leaders were substituted for the statues. The terrorists also broke the Ataturk statue in the garden of the Gungoren primary school. The broken statue was painted red and leftist slogans were written on it. [Text] [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 24 Jan 80 TA]

ECONOMIC, CULTURAL EXCHANGES WITH USSR FROZEN

NC261714 Paris AFP in English 1706 GMT 26 Jan 80 NC

[Text] Brussels, Jan. 26 (AFP)--The Belgian Government announced today that in response to the invasion of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union, it was freezing all economic and cultural exchanges with that country at their present level, but that it was still intent on pursuing multilateral negotiations on reduction of nuclear and conventional arms. On the question of a possible boycott of the Moscow Olympics, Belgium favors a joint decision by all European Common Market countries.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE FAVORS PARTICIPATION IN MOSCOW GAMES

LD281146 Brussels Domestic Service in French 1000 GMT 28 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] [Passage indistinct] The position of the Interfederal Belgian Olympic Committee is very clear: We will go to Moscow. Here is the content of its statement:

The Board of Governors of the Interfederal Belgian Olympic Committee met at (Ordinelles) on 25 and 26 January and examined the situation created by the attempts to boycott the 1980 games in Moscow. After hearing a report by the chairman, Raul Mollet, the Board of Governors of the Olympic committee unanimously and very strongly regrets that sport, and in particular the Olympic games--its most prestigious manifestation--should be used as a means of pressure, thus further accentuating the hold of politics on sport, and declares that the adoption of any boycott measure of the Moscow games will constitute a political stand which is prohibited by the Olympic Charter and its statutes. Therefore, bearing in mind these considerations, the Board of Governors of the Olympic committee, loyal to its mission and the mandates received from its federations, has decided to take part in the games of the 22d Olympiad in Moscow and will take the necessary measures to insure the participation of the Belgian delegation within the framework of the Olympic Charter.

GOVERNMENT FAVORS BOYCOTT OF MOSCOW OLYMPICS

LD260556 Hilversum in English to North America 0530 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Text] The Dutch Government has come out in favor of a boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow. It has asked the Dutch Olympic Committee not to send a team to the games. The committee has agreed to study the request. It is thought likely that the Dutch committee will wait until the American Olympic committee has announced a decision on a similar request from President Carter before announcing its decision. Most Dutch sports organizations are opposed to a boycott of the games, but it will be difficult for them not to give in to the government's pressure. Sporting bodies have described the proposal to change the venue of the games as unrealistic. The International Olympic Committee has entered into a contract with Moscow. It would have to pay enormous damages if it were to cancel that contract.

In Holland the government has also made it known that it wishes to go beyond a boycott of the Moscow Olympics. It also wants to put its commercial and cultural relations with the Soviet Union into cold storage. As a result, a Soviet space exhibition scheduled to be held in The Hague in May will probably be canceled.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SAYS GENSCHER'S PRAGUE VISIT POSTPONED

LD251802 Hamburg DPA in German 1643 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher's planned trip to Prague at the end of February has been postponed at Czechoslovakia's suggestion. An FRG Foreign Ministry spokesman said in Bonn today in response to an inquiry that Prague had said that problems with the date were the reason for the postponement, but he also mentioned an "agreed" postponement of the date. He said, however, that both sides had stressed their interest in continuing the high-level exchange visits to cultivate mutual relations.

The date for Genscher's visit to Prague had been set for 24-26 February. Observers believe that Czechoslovakia's action could stem from the East-West crisis caused by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. As early as the beginning of December, there was talk of a trip to Prague by the federal foreign minister, but the date was never officially confirmed. The French foreign minister recently called off a visit to Prague because of the trials of civil rights activists.

SCHMIDT DISCUSSES EFFECTS OF AFGHAN CRISIS WITH OPPOSITION

LD251752 Hamburg DPA in German 1627 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today continued his confidential talks on the effects of the crisis over the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in an exchange of views with SPD politicians and leading trade unionists. The talks dealt in particular with the economic consequences of the crisis and the question of a boycott of the Olympics. In his government statement, the chancellor linked his willingness to support U.S. sanctions against the Soviet Union with the fact that this would also mean economic sacrifices for the FRG.

Among those taking part in the talks on the SPD side were party leader Willy Brandt, his deputy, Hans-Juergen Wischnewski, Parliamentary Group Leader Herbert Wehner, Defense Minister Hans Apel and Treasury Minister Gunter Huonker. Among those represented on the trade union side were DGB leader Heinz Oskar Vetter, IG-Metall Chairman Eugen Loderer and OeTV Chairman Heinz Kluncker. The chancellor also invited the governing mayor of Berlin, Dietrich Stobbe.

GENSCHER SAYS SOVIETS CANNOT DIVIDE WEST ON AFGHAN ISSUE

LD261936 Hamburg DPA in German 1713 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has warned the Soviet Union not to believe that it can use the invasion of Afghanistan to drive a wedge into the American-European alliance. In an interview on Bavarian radio, he stressed that "it would be...an illusion if anyone in Moscow assumed that in this situation he could separate the Europeans from the United States, if anyone believed that the Europeans defined their interests differently from the United States." What one was faced with here was a joint challenge to the United States, the Europeans and the Third World.

In the interview, which was released in Bonn by the Foreign Office, Genscher stressed the need to speak with the Soviets in the present situation, too: "We have always felt that the exchange of views and the stating of one's own concerns and aims are the most important things, particularly in a situation such as this." The Soviet side must have no doubt as to "how gravely we--and by 'we' I mean our allies and ourselves--assess the situation that has arisen."

On the question of an Olympic boycott, Genscher said that events such as the intervention in Afghanistan and the removal of regime critic Andrey Sakharov from Moscow were not in keeping with the spirit in which the Olympic games should be held. It was now up to the Soviet Union "to use its possibilities to create the preconditions...for athletes from all countries to be able to take part in these games."

Genscher stressed the necessity in the interests of safeguarding peace and strengthening economic, social and political stability in the countries of the Third World, which fear for their independence. This should contribute to insuring that "all these countries are less prone to interventionist and expansionist aspirations such as those just undertaken by the Soviet Union against Afghanistan." Because of this the people in the Federal Republic must realize that "there will be additional burdens."

OLYMPIC BOYCOTT ISSUE DRAWS FURTHER RESPONSES

CDU's Heiner Geissler

LD262300 Hamburg DPA in German 1708 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Klingenmuenster--CDU General Secretary Heiner Geissler has accused Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of adopting conflicting approaches and of being two-faced with regard to the Afghanistan crisis, and particularly on the question of German participation in the Olympics. He told 90 delegates from social committees of the Christian Democrat employees associations (CDA) from Rhinehesse-Palatinate in Klingenmuenster today that Schmidt's stance is an affront to German-American friendship and a threat to the basis of the Federal Republic's security and freedom.

Geissler called on the Federal Government to support rather than undermine the U.S. economic sanctions against the Soviet Union. He addressed the same appeal to France, linking it with the remark that the French atomic force will also be of no use if the security of Europe is no longer guaranteed by the United States. Support for the American measures against the USSR, including an Olympic boycott, are in the interest of one's own security.

SPD's Herbert Wehner

LD261617 Hamburg DPA in German 1536 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Stuttgart/Giessen--Herbert Wehner, chairman of the SPD Bundestag Group, has taken the view that the decision concerning a boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow should be left to the National Olympic Committees and the International Olympic Committee. Such a "weighty decision" should be taken by those "qualified," Wehner told journalists on Saturday on the occasion of a conference of SPD group chairmen of the laender in Stuttgart.

Gunter Huonker, minister of state at the federal chancellor's office, said that the Federal Government will reply to the request of U.S. President Jimmy Carter to join his ultimatum of a boycott following consultations with the EC countries and in accordance with the decision taken by the International Olympic Committee and the National Olympic Committee of Germany.

Franz-Josef Strauss, chancellor candidate of the union parties, sees little sense in a boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow restricted merely to athletes. Rather, an Olympic boycott should be part of a whole package of measures, including economic measures. Strauss told journalists in Giessen on Saturday. However, the Federal Republic must not refuse to join a possible boycott by the United States so as not to risk the "psychological breakdown of the alliance."

National Olympic Committee

LD262250 Hamburg DPA in German 1745 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Summary] Duesseldorf--The Presidium of the German National Olympic Committee [NOC] postponed a decision on a boycott of the Moscow Olympics at a meeting in Duesseldorf today. It urged the athletes to keep up their training, saying that the NOC Presidium would continue to help remove obstacles standing in the way of the Moscow Olympics.

After the meeting, which was attended by 17 of the 20 Presidium members, NOC President Willi Daume said that he sees "good chances" that the Federal Republic will participate in the Moscow Olympics. He noted "with gratitude" that so far the Federal Government has put no pressure on the NOC. The NOC will not feel itself bound by any decision of the Federal Republic. "At the appropriate time it will take its own independent decision." He said that in the event of participation in the Moscow Olympics, the NOC will exert no pressure on individual athletes who do not want to go to Moscow. Before a final decision by the NOC's membership assembly, the NOC Presidium will make a recommendation which will also take into account "political coresponsibility."

GENSCHER HOLDS TALKS WITH SOVIET AMBASSADOR SEMENOV

LD251442 Hamburg DPA in German 1327 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpts] Bonn--In a talk with Soviet Ambassador Semenov, Federal Foreign Minister Genscher affirmed the Federal Government's view that the occupation of Afghanistan by Soviet troops must be ended. This was noted in a Foreign Ministry statement on today's meeting, which lasted 90 minutes and dealt with "all important topics." Concerning the Olympic games, Genscher voiced the expectation that the USSR would create the requisite conditions for the participation of all states.

Speaking at an FDP meeting in Hamburg, Genscher said: "We view with great concern the fact that the Olympic games in Moscow are in great danger as a result of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan." The games should be a festival of peace, not an occasion for discord among the peoples. The Soviet Government must know that, as the host country, it has a decisive role to play in creating the necessary prerequisites."

According to the Foreign Ministry, Genscher made it clear that he considers it especially important in the present situation to explain to Semenov the Federal Government's policy on the basis of his and Chancellor Schmidt's statements in the Bundestag. Genscher affirmed that the Federal Government's policy continues to rest on the FRG's membership in the European Community and the NATO alliance. This policy conforms to existing treaties and the Helsinki Final Act. At the same time, the federal foreign minister drew attention to the joint declaration at the time of Brezhnev's visit to Bonn in May 1978, which said that peace and security are indivisible.

CDU'S WOERNER OPPOSES BUNDESWEHR PRESENCE IN GULF

LD261317 Hamburg DPA in German 1040 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Bonn-CDU/CSU defense expert Manfred Woerner has stated that use of the Bundeswehr outside the sphere of the NATO alliance is out of the question for the CDU/CSU. Woerner, who is also chairman of the Bundestag Defense Committee, was commenting today in an interview with the radio station Sender Freies Berlin on statements to the contrary by Deputy CDU Chairman Alfred Dregger, who did not rule out the possibility of the Bundeswehr's being used in the Persian Gulf to protect Western oil supplies. Woerner said that Dregger's views are undoubtedly thought of as a possibility for the distant future.

Speaking on the German role in NATO, Woerner said, "Our work will definitely have to focus on the political and economic field and on aid to those threatened states." Woerner felt a 3-percent increase in defense expenditure to be "the absolute minimum." He said that an increase in Bundeswehr manpower is not necessary at present.

STRAUSS COMMENTS ON SOVIET GOALS, POTENTIAL

LD261524 Hamburg DPA in German 1334 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Giessen--The CDU/CSU chancellor candidate, Franz-Jozef Strauss, does not believe personally that the Soviet Union wants to start the third world war, although its strength makes possible military operations in places other than Afghanistan. Strauss said at the Hesse CDU Party Congress in Giessen today that the Soviet Union still has as its goals grand Russian imperialism and world revolution. As long as there is a serious military counterbalance in the West, the Soviet Union will "not risk the great conflict."

In this context Strauss underlined the absolute priority of safeguarding peace and freedom over internal promises to do more in the social field. It was an illusion to assume that peace had become more secure in the past few years. On the contrary, the Soviet Union's military potential had become greater and more up-to-date than ever. This allowed only one conclusion: The Soviet Union had not given up its long-term strategic goals.

The chancellor candidate came out against what he described as idle talk about the opposition's seeking a dangerous confrontation with the Warsaw Pact states. This "slanderous poison formula" must end. Both the CDU and CSU are in favor of the indivisibility of economic and military security. The "crisis belt" stretching from Afghanistan to South Africa must not become the starting point for a Soviet move that would cut off the Federal Republic and Western Europe from the vital sources of raw materials in the Middle East. He accused the SPD of failing to create awareness of this problem among the population.

About 1,000 people, mainly young people, staged a demonstration against Strauss in Giessen and the same number in Saarbruecken, where the chancellor candidate is due to speak this afternoon.

Threat to Indian Ocean

LD262302 Hamburg DPA in German 1806 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] Saarbruecken--At a state congress of the Saar CDU, which had been expanded into a public meeting, Strauss told a gathering of almost 5,000 today that our security is "acutely threatened in the Indian Ocean and the littoral regions." The West has to be so strong in this area that no other countries can be toppled by pressure from Soviet-fomented unrest.

In this connection Strauss mentioned South Yemen as a possible fresh crisis area. Unless appearances are deceiving, he said, we will again be "very, very occupied" with the unresolved Arab-Israeli question in the foreseeable future. Peace is at least not possible in the Middle East without settlement of the Arab-Israeli question.

During his speech in the Saarbruecker Saarlandhalle, Strauss was continually interrupted by frenetic applause, but also by isolated chants of "Strauss out." There were no serious incidents, however.

SPD'S BAHR VIEWS ALLIANCE POLICY WITH UNITED STATES

DW280923 Mainz ZDF Television Serivce in German 2100 GMT 25 Jan 80 DW

[Reporter Besser interview with SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] How dangerous is the situation?

[Answer] As regards the Middle East, the situation is not yet under control. Efforts are aimed at stabilizing the situation there. On the other hand, it is known in the United States and here in Europe that despite the difficult situation in the Middle East, it still cannot be compared with a situation that could arise if something happened in Europe. That is the great difference. Everybody involved realizes that.

[Question] Yet the crisis is worldwide. Not only has the mood in the United States changed, the President and his government appear to be more determined than ever. Must we or can we, cooperate in all the things Washington is now planning?

[Answer] I just hinted that if--I do not hope so, I do not wish it and I do not believe it--a confrontation were to take place in the Middle East, it could be and ought to be localized there, but if a confrontation were to take place in Europe, it would mean World War III. That is the big difference.

[Question] But Carter said yesterday that all those who obtain oil from down there must also insure that these oil sources are safeguarded.

[Answer] Yes, I wanted to continue--therefore, the expression used by colleague Genscher, namely the problem of the division of labor, is just the right expression in this connection. Everybody must try with the means at his disposal to do the right thing, to do what he can do to stabilize the situation there.

[Question] If you bear in mind the hard course steered by the British vis-a-vis the Soviets, does it not mean that the Federal Republic, maybe together with France, will play a special role?

[Answer] I believe the Federal Government is steering the right course in its attempt to achieve coordination within the framework of the European Community. We must see whether the British will cooperate also.

[Question] Brandt mentioned that European interests and European responsibility must be more involved in the discussion. Does that not contain something of delimitation vis-a-vis the Americans?

[Answer] You know, the mass migration of lemmings is not an example or model of solidarity. First, solidarity stands its test in difficult times; second, friendship demands that one must be prepared to tell one's friends what one believes they could make mistakes. But that must not be done ostentatiously, in public, where prestige becomes involved.

[Question] You were considered, and you are still considered, the architect of German detente policy. What remains of that after Afghanistan? Can something be saved, particularly with regard to the plans you were hinting at?

[Answer] The starting point of detente policy was the capability of both superpowers to kill each other, even if one of them were to launch the first strike. It is the compulsion to avoid the abyss. That has not been changed at all by Afghanistan.

MARCHAIS DEPLORES EXILE OF SAKHAROV

NC261737 Paris AFP in English 1724 GMT 26 Jan 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Jan 26 (AFP)--French Communist Party chief Georges Marchais today deplored the exile and official disgrace of Soviet Academician Andrey Sakharov.

Mr Marchais, whose party has been alone among Western European communist parties in seeking to justify Soviet armed intervention in Afghanistan, said in a radio interview here that if the measures against Mr Sakharov had intervened at the time of his own visit to Moscow last week, he could never have put his name to the joint communique he signed there with the Soviet Communist Party.

He said he would have shown his disapproval of the measures by taking the next plane back to Paris--just as visiting French parliament speaker and former Prime Minister Jacques Chaban-Delmas [words indistinct] in Moscow this week.

French Communist Party reaction to Mr Sakharov's punishment has so far been one of "disapproval" of a human-rights violation. Mr Marchais said, however, in the interview that Western countries, with their past and present record in Vietnam, Nicaragua, and colonial wars, were in no position to preach human rights. "So please keep quiet Mr Carter, Mr Schmidt, and Mrs Thatcher," he declared, adding that French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing be associated with this comment.

SAIGON PARTY OFFICIAL REQUESTS ASYLUM

OW261451 Paris AFP in English 0758 GMT 26 Jan 80 OW

[Text] Paris, Jan. 26 (AFP)--The secretary general of the Saigon region Communist Party Central Committee has requested political asylum in France, the evening FRANCE-SOIR said today in an exclusive article.

The article said 37-year-old Hoang Huu Quynh, code named Hoang Kim Chung in security missions he carried out, was visiting Europe with a scientific study team when he decided to defect. The party official said he slipped away while his group was touring Fiat's Turin plant. He is an engineer who spent four years in the Soviet Union from 1969 for technical but "mainly political" training.

Hoang Huu Quynh told FRANCE-SOIR he remained a communist but had defected in protest a against the current Vietnamese Government which had succeeded in making Vietnam "one of the 10 poorest countries in the world with one of the six biggest armies."

SRV Embassy Confirmation

OW261629 Hong Kong AFP in English 1537 GMT 26 Jan 80 OW

[Excerpt] Paris, Jan 26 (AFP)--The Vietnamese Embassy here confirmed today that a Vietnamese citizen, Hoang Huu Quynh, had "defected" during a technical study mission in Western Europe.

In confirmation of an exclusive report published today in the newspaper FRANCE-SOIR, an embassy spokesman said that Mr Quynh, 37, had left his study team while in Italy. However, according to the Vietnamese Embassy Mr Quynh is not a "Hanoi leader," as FRANCE-SOIR reported in its article which identified him as the secretary general of the Communist Party in the Saigon region.

In the report, FRANCE-SOIR quoted Mr Quynh as saying that he had "slipped away" while his group was touring Fiat's Turin plant, adding that he had requested political asylum in France.

Denying that Mr Quynh had political responsibilities, the embassy spokesman identified him as an engineer who had worked for the Vietnamese Hydraulic Works Ministry, adding that he had "defected" in "September or October 1979." Meanwhile, the French Foreign Ministry and police headquarters here today affirmed that they had not received a political asylum request from Mr Quynh.

PUBLIC OPINION POLL ON OLYMPICS BOYCOTT ANALYZED

[Text] Carter has won. After more than 4 and 1/2 hours of discussion, the U.S. Olympic Committee has unanimously adopted a decision which goes along with the proposals of the White House chief regarding the Moscow Olympic games. America thus requests the International Olympic Committee to transfer the games, to postpone them to a later date or to cancel them. In our 0730 newscast our correspondent in the United States, Denis Poncet, said that U.S. opinion is nevertheless surprised at the suddenness of the decision. The Soviets themselves will soon hear the news, so what are their reactions [as heard], Gabrial Meretik [Moscow correspondent]?

[Begin recording] First of all, considerable bitter resentment for the Soviets who have been preparing for a very long time for this festival and who had only one wish, one dream--to come to attend, to come to Moscow where for the first time there would be so many foreign tourists, to come to the stands to see so many foreign sportsmen. None of this will happen, no doubt. But it is mainly in the area of prestige that the Soviets are shocked and really hurt. This prestige, in fact, has never before suffered so much. [end recording]

It is to be noted that most of the French-speaking countries have expressed their desire to take part in the games. This was reported by Jean-Pierre Soisson [French minister of youth, sport and leisure] in Cotonou yesterday at the end of the Conference of Ministers of Youth and Sport. It is true that the decision of the U.S. Olympic Committee was not yet known. And then there is a French public opinion institute--LE POINT poll taken between 22 and 23 January of a sample of 1,000 people which reveals that 72 percent of the French people are against the boycott of the games. This poll is analyzed by (Helene Bessis):

[Bessis] More than half of all French people also believe that even if Great Britain and Germany decide to boycott, our athletes must take part in the Moscow games, and nearly 70 percent of the people questioned say that the Western countries should not follow the United States if it decided on a boycott. Furthermore, 62 percent of French people disapprove of President Carter's position, with only one-quarter agreeing with him. On the other hand, more than a quarter of the French people go as far as to say that America's nonattendance in Moscow is a threat to the existence of future Olympic games. Forty-nine percent of the people questioned believe that an eventual decision taken by the Americans not to go to Moscow would not be a serious threat to peace but 36 percent believe the opposite.

DISSIDENTS. INTELLECTUALS PROTEST MOSCOW GAMES

Protest Committee Formed

LD251537 Paris LE MONDE in French 24 Jan 80 p 4 LD

[A.M.S. report: "Human Rights-Moscow 80 Committee Believes 'Boycott of Olympic Games Only One Way To Pursue Struggle in Support of Human Rights'"]

[Text] Under Marek Halter's chairmanship the Human Rights-Moscow 80 Committee gave its first conference in Paris on the morning of 22 January. Unlike the Committee for Boycotting the Moscow Olympics, this committee, which was created before the invasion of Afghanistan, originally intended to urge people to go to Moscow to demonstrate there their solidarity with political prisoners.

As far as the immediate future is concerned, Mr Halter's committee intends to charter an aircraft to send a delegation of intellectuals (including Vladimir Yankelovich, Pierre Emmanuel and Max Euwe, former chairman of the International Chess Federation) to Moscow in March 1980 with a view to assessing the situation on the spot.

If the Olympic games take place as planned, the committee intends to organize a large-scale rally--a kind of human rights Olympics or Woodstock. Many artists and musicians have already agreed to participate in it. The organizers hope to be allowed by the West German Government to hold their meeting in the Berlin stadium in which the 1936 Olympic games took place.

The Moscow 80 Committee had invited Soviet dissidents such as Bukovskiy, Ginzburg, Kuznetsov, Plyushch, Amalrik, Maksimov and Mrs Gorbanevskaya to the press conference. They all more or less supported the idea of a boycott of the Olympic games in a city which will be cleared of its young people and all dissidents for the duration of the games.

"A boycott is only one of the weapons in the struggle in support of human rights," Marek Halter stated. "Let us not aim too high, since we are only individuals, but let us try to do something continaully as we have always done long before the invasion of Afghanistan."

Intellectuals' Petition

[Unattributed report: "French Intellectuals Advocate Boycott of Moscow Olympics"]

[Text] The following personalities--Raymond Aron, Mrs Simone de Beauvoir, Robert Bresson, Michel Foucault, Andre Gluksmann, Jacques Julliard, Bernard Kouchner, Emmanuel le Roy-Ladurie, Yves Montand, Andre Lwoff, Jean-Paul Sartre and Mrs Simone Signoret--have signed a document in which they "firmly condemn the deliberate military aggression against Afghanistan by the USSR. They express their concern about the possibility of a similar act of aggression in the future against an Asian or European country. They note that, with a few exceptions, French politicians and statesmen of all opinions have chosen to overlook, partially excuse or even completely justify this aggression."

The signatories "furthermore recall that human rights are being increasingly violated in the USSR: a famous personality who had hitherto been spared--Andrey Sakharov--has now been attacked. In view of all this, they ask the government and sports authorities not to grant to the Soviet Union the certificate of international good behavior and moral legitimacy which its government hopes to secure thanks to the holding of the Olympic games in Moscow. [paragraph continues]

In the past, refugees from Germany and the Jewish community of the U.S.S. [as published] protested against the holding of the Olympic games in Berlin in 1936 since they bestowed on Hitler a dangerous legitimacy. In the course of the past 2 years the great majority of Soviet dissidents has gradually come out against holding the Olympic games in the Soviet capital.

"Therefore the signatories firmly demand that the Moscow Olympics be boycotted. They urge their compatriots to clearly show their feelings with respect to this point."

FRENCH MILITARY EXPERTS REPORTED INVOLVED IN MOSQUE SIEGE

NC261500 Paris AFP in English 1430 GMT 26 Jan 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Jan. 26, (AFP)--French military experts were involved in ending the two-week-long siege of the Grand Mosque in Mecca begun when insurgents stormed Islam's holiest shrine on Nov. 20, the French weekly magazine LE POINT reported this week. In the issue dated January 28, LE POINT said that five French military specialists arrived in Mecca on Nov. 23 at the "top secret" request of Saudi King Khalid to President Valery Giscard d'Estaing. The five experts then took charge of "coordinating and even directing operations, maneuvering the 3,000 Saudi soldiers, LE POINT said.

On December 2, a French airplane landed in Mecca, bringing in "gas cartridges and explosives," the report continued. The French team then worked out the assault plan which enabled the Saudi Army to occupy the mosque on December 3, ending the French military mission. It was learned a few days later that Saudi orders for French military material would be increased, LE POINT (?noted). More than 5,000 people died as a consequence of the two-week-long occupation, the report said.

SIHANOUK TO VISIT GUINEA, CAMBODIA HOUSE TO REOPEN

OW251525 Paris AFP in English 1508 GMT 25 Jan 80 OW

[Text] Paris, Jan. 25 (AFP)--Exiled Cambodian leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk will leave here tomorrow on a visit to Guinea at the invitation of President Ahmed Sekou Toure, sources close to the prince said today. The same sources said that the prince wanted his former Prime Minister Son Sann to get in touch with him to arrange a meeting. Son Sann appealed recently to all Cambodians to bury "fratricidal quarrels" and concentrate on liberating the country. The former prime minister is leading the "Khmer People's National Liberation Front" in Cambodia but his exact whereabouts are now known.

Meanwhile French President Giscard d'Estaing has asked former French Ambassador to Phnom Penh Hubert Argod to inform Prince Sihanouk that the government had decided to reopen Cambodia House, which until 1973 provided accomodation for Cambodian students in Paris. The Presidential Palace spokesman said today the gesture was intended to convey France's hope to see a "free, independent and neutral Cambodia."

PCF LEADERS SCORE MITTERRAND REMARKS

LD280733 Paris L'HUAMNITE in French 16 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Unattributed report: "Mitterrand Has Chosen the Right"]

[Text] Yesterday four PCF Politburo members were interviewed by different radio and television stations following the violent anticommunist statements made by [Socialist Party First Secretary] Francois Mitterrand on French television Channel 2. [paragraph continues]

Paul Laurent speaking on France Inter, Claude Poperen speaking on Radio Monte Carlo, Philippe Herzog speaking on Radio Luxembourg and Guy Hermier speaking on Radio Monte Carlo once again established the truth about the PCF policy and about Francois Mitterrand's objectives. The following are extracts from their statements:

Paul Laurent started by answering a question on the meaning of L'HUMANITE's response to the current anticommunist campaign. "When we denounce lies," he said, "we are denouncing attempts to distort and twist PCF stances and the significance of Georges Machais' interview on French television Channel 1.

"After this interview there were allegations of alinement with Moscow and abandonment of our ideas on noninterference and the sovereignty of states. These allegations have been constantly hammered home even though there is no trace of them in either the PCF's everyday policy or in the communique which we signed with the CPSU.

"Quite the reverse: This communique contains a clear and plain affirmation of the policy defined at the 23d Congress. The joint communique is completely in line with that congress and consequently notes the development of progressive forces in the world, the possibilities for progress in detente, records the counteroffensive by imperialism and reaffirms our party's independence. It points out that although we have areas of agreement with the CPSU we also differ from it in some spheres. "All that has vanished in the campaign which I have mentioned. These are the lines. They are not to be found in the fact that we have different views from certain other parties."

Paul Laurent added: "We are quite happy about the state of our party and our relations with the masses. Little has been said about last Sunday's election at Sables-d'Olonnes in Vendee. For the first time in 20 years a Communist was elected to the Commune Council: Two lists of reactionary candidates were defeated and the Communist candidate came on top of a union list with a lead of more than 200 votes over the Socialist candidate. Our results were 8 percent better than the previous elections. Therefore I do not think that things are going too badly with regard to our relations with the masses.

"As far as the Communists are concerned, I would like to point out that at 31 December 1979 our party's membership had reached heights never attained since the liberation years. We are certain of being understood. Of course, when there is a flood of lies like the present one I do not deny that questions may be asked here and there, but we are calling on Communists to study our explanations with great resolution and patience."

No Mention of Unemployed

Claude Poperen was asked to give his opinion on the "appeal" launched the previous day by Francois Mitterrand to PCF members and voters.

Poperen said in particular: "Although he spoke for 1 hour on television, Mitterrand did not make any appeal for a struggle against the government's policy, against the extortion of 100 billion in 6 months [reference unknown], nor did he make any mention of the magnificent railroad workers' strike or of the 1.8 million unemployed, and he made no attempt to denounce social inequalities which are worsening--contrary to what the president of the republic said at the end of last year. Indeed for 1 whole hour Mitterrand joined the campaign of anti-communist hatred and hysteria. It is obvious that that has no influence on PCF members."

He concluded by answering a question on the expulsion from the PCF: "There are no sanctions or expulsions in our party. Ours is a democratic party--the only party which has not expelled anybody for many years. There is democratic debate within our party which confirms widespread agreement among Communists with their leadership's policy and with Georges Marchais' policy and statements."

Height of Petty Electioneering

Philippe Herzog stressed: "First, Mitterrand clearly demonstrated yesterday evening that he has chosen the right. This is the same Mitterrand who accuses the French workers of waging rearguard struggle against the austerity policy, who is in line with Carter's stances on all major international issues and who has gone even further than Mr Giscard d'Estaing's policy.

"With regard to Afghanistan he has not said anything about the role of the progressive movement in Afghanistan which is trying to steer that country out of feudalism. He has denied the fact, recently reported by AFP, that a war is being waged against democratic Afghanistan from Pakistan and, of course, he concealed his positions behind an attack on the USSR, despite the fact that the USSR serves the cause of peace in the worl and has, on various occasions, sided with liberation movements.

"In so doing Mitterrand has revealed the essential reasons for the PS [Socialist Party] to abandon the joint program in 1977. The PS does not want a France which is independent of the blocs, a France which is sovereign and which stands alongside the forces of liberation and peace in the world. What he wants is more Atlantic integration, tension against socialist countries and the forces of liberation. He can be said to have attained the heights of petty electioneering with regard to PCF members and voters. He has behaved like a recruiting officer, asking our voters and members to oppose their party's policy.

"On the domestic plane he wants above all to deflect them toward a policy of consensus. In other words he is asking them to abandon their struggle.

"On international issues he wants to seduce them into alinement with Carter and lead them to oppose the forces of liberation fighting throughout the world to change the course of events in the interest of the peoples."

BOURGES: PARATROOP REGIMENTS TO STAY

LD250836 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Text] New directives from the Elysee regarding defense: The president has asked Minister Yvon Bourges not to cut down the nunber of land forces paratroop regiments. As Mr Yvon Bourges explained to our special correspondent, Gilbert Picard, the paratroopers indeed remain in case of conflict the number one intervention force:

[Begin recording] [Bourges] The president of the republic has asked me to review the envisaged reorganization measures so as not to cut down the number of paratroop regiments, considering this to be today an essential element of our land forces and of our capabilities.

[Question] There will be more regiments, then?

[Question] But always with its striking power aspect?

[Answer] The paratroopers are intervention troops with indeed the striking power aspect, as you say, but above all with a flexibility in their adaptation to circumstances and situations in which these forces could find themselves engaged.

PCE'S CARRILLO ARRIVES FOR 1-DAY VISIT

Interview on Arrival

LD260330 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] We now have a report from Rome on Santiago Carrillo's visit to Rome. Go ahead Rafael Ortega:

[Begin recording] [Question] At 1800 today Santiago Carrillo, PCE secretary general arrived in Rome on a 1-day visit during which he will have talks with his Italian counterpart, Berlinguer. Carrillo, who arrived with Manuel Azcarate, in charge of foreign affairs for the PCE, was welcomed by Pajetta, head of the same section in the Italian Communist Party. At the Fiumicino Airport I asked Santiago Carrillo what the main aims of his visit were.

[Answer] To talk with our Italian comrades on the international problems of the present time. I can tell you exactly what we discussed at the end of the talks tomorrow.

[Question] There has been a lot of talk about the survival of Eurocommunism. Do you think that Eurocommunism is still to be reckoned with?

[Answer] Well, I think that there are other things which are not going to survive, but Eurocommunism will.

[Question] And the international crisis?

[Answer] The international crisis, I hope, also has a solution and all of us should work toward achieving it.

[Ortega] Many thanks. [end recording]

Remarks on Afghanistan, Eurocommunism

LD272154 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1618 GMT 27 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Rome, Jan. 27 (TANJUG)--Santiago Carrillo has stated that the Communist Party of Spain condemns the Soviet military engagement in Afghanistan. "We consider that act a violation of the principles of independence, autonomy and sovereignty of that country and an element of the deterioration of the international situation", he said.

Speaking to journalists today within the framework of his visit to Italy, the secretary-general of the Communist Party of Spain confirmed that there exist "deep differences" with the Communist Party of France regarding this Soviet action, but that this does not prevent debates among Eurocommunist parties from continuing. Eurocommunism, he said, is "in the process of research which moves forward and in which, naturally, different opinions are manifested".

Carrillo confirmed that Italian and Spanish communists share the conviction that socialism must be achieved by the development of democracy. "I am convinced that in capitalist countries socialism will be victorious and that it will be of a pluralistic character", Carrillo emphasized. Carrillo said that Europe can play a decisive role in the renewal of the lessening of tension and in restraining the cold war.

PCI-PCE Communique

LD272156 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1850 GMT 27 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Rome, Jan. 27 (TANJUG)--The communist parties of Italy and Spain today assessed the Soviet military action in Afghanistan as the last episode in the heightening of political and military tension in the world. The communique made public today after the closing of the talks between Secretary-General of the Communist Party of Spain Carrillo and Secretary-General of the Italian Communist Party Berlinguer emphasizes concern of the two sides over the arms race, especially manifested by the NATO decision to introduce Euromissiles and Washington's rejection to ratify SALT II.

The two parties condemned [word indistinct] and frequently expressed trends of [words indistinct] of power in international relations and threats and (?realisation) measures in (?various) spheres. These trends deteriorate the atmosphere in international relations and strengthen, in Western countries, unyielding [words indistinct] to (?democratic) forces, while at the same time, in other countries stimulate reprisals as the case of (?Soviet) physicist Sakharov has demonstrated it, it was said. The two parties called on the peaceful and democratic forces in the world to give new initiatives for the [words indistinct] of (?tension). LEFTIST POLITICIANS, INTELLECTUALS CONDEMN SAKHAROV ARREST

Document Issued

The document, published in the Sunday edition of the Socialist Party daily, L'AVANTI, linked the Soviet measures taken against the Nobel laureate to "growing international tensions which threaten to push the world back into the cold war, with the consequent deterioration of political, ideological and cultural relations within the Eastern countries and an alarming clampdown by the authorities of these countries".

After citing Sakharov's arrest and transfer out of the capital as a violation of the Helsinki final document on civil rights, the signatories called for the "full reinstatement of (Sakharov's) political and civil rights, freedom of movement and the assurance that he can continue his civil protest".

Rome Guerrilla Raids

WA262329 London REUTER in English 2319 GMT 26 Jan 80 WA

[Text] Rome, Jan 26, REUTER--Urban guerrillas firebombed buses, cars, police barracks, telephone offices and four branch offices of the Christian Democrat Party in more than a dozen raids within 90 minutes in Rome tonight. One person was injured, a bus driver stabbed when a gang of masked youths ordered everyone off his bus and set it ablaze.

No one claimed responsibility, but police said the burst of violence might have been linked with the closing of a clandestine leftwing radio station earlier in the week. The Trotskyite "Autonomy" group vowed yesterday that it would take reprisals against the closure.

The bombers struck at four buses, several cars, four branch offices of the Christian Democratic Party, two police barracks and two telephone offices. Damage to the buildings was slight.

In another incident, police announced the arrest of a 23-year-old prison guard suspected of smuggling pistols and ammunition to imprisoned urban guerrillas in Turin.

On being arrested they declared themselves political prisoners. INTERIOR MINISTER DEFENDS ANTITERRORISM LEGISLATION

LD251147 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 6 Jan 80 pp 8-9 LD

[Text] Rome--The new law and order measures package has prompted some confusion and considerable reservations among party representatives. The most determined criticisms, however, have come from jurists, lawyers and magistrates. How much less freedom will we have? What will be the effect of the restrictions on press and information freedom? Will L'ESPRESSO and colleagues from other papers be able to continue working as before or will they be risking criminal charges? We thought the best thing to do would be to ask for explanations directly from Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni.

Question: Minister, it is futile to deny it: There is some fear. What exactly is the significance of the new norms on the crime of "abetment" ["fiancheggiamento"]? My files and L'ESPRESSO's files are full of Red Brigade documents and documents of other terrorist groups, which are essential to the informative work which we have been doing for years. From now on will it be dangerous to "possess" such material? Will we risk finding ourselves lumped together with the "abettors?"

Answer: The law envisages a specific criminal intent. We must try to be more specific. (The minister pauses, asks over the telephone for a copy of the bill, which arrives after a long wait--L'ESPRESSO note.) Anyone in possession of subversive documents "with the aim of planning and committing a terrorist crime" will be liable to prosecution. If you have Red Brigades' strategic resolutions or other subversive documents at home, I do not believe you have them with the intention of planning any terrorist attacks: Therefore, there is no specific criminal intent.

Question: The "distribution of terrorist documents" will also be forbidden because it constitute a "covert form of subversive propaganda and incitement to subvert." Does this mean the newspapers will no longer be able to publish documents and communiques originating from the area of armed struggle?

Answer: Each case will have to be judged separately. This will be the judge's duty. It will also depend on the context, and there will have to be a verification of the criminal intent, that is, the journalist's intentions. What we want to avoid is the publication of these documents being used objectively for incitement to subvert and unlawful condonation of a crime.

Question: "Each case separately," "the context": Does this mean that if LOTTA CONTINUA publishes a document a different criterion will be used than if CORRIERE DELLA SERA publishes it?

Answer: Certainly not. The context means the way in which the terrorists' document is presented and its accompanying comment. We must be very clear on this point, partly because the public does not now tolerate the damage and affront to coexistence stemming from the impunity of anyone deliberately acting as an instrument for propagating terrorist directives or instructions. Therefore this damage and this affront could not fail to be taken into account from a penal viewpoint.

Question: But Judge Nicolo Amato has already charged LOTTA CONTINUA (with "unlawful condonation of the violent subversion of the economic and social order..." for publishing a letter to the editor in which a certain "Marta" advocated armed struggle. Could events like this happen more frequently in the future?

Answer: It is possible. LOTTA CONTINUA published no commnet on that letter; it did not make the slightest effort to dissociate itself from it. When a paper publishes a document of that kind to create support for the idea of subversion or terrorism it is difficult to deny that it is seeking converts and even committing the unlawful condonation of a crime.

Question: In Sossi's time I interviewed clandestine Red Brigade members and later Renato Curcio in prison. These are only a few examples among many: From now on will it be a crime to pursue this activity?

Answer: This is a serious and delicate problem because it involves the relationship between the right to inform and criminal activity performed through the instrument of information. I believe that from now on it will be right for a journalist carrying out such an interview to consider this problem. It is a matter of conscience above all: And after that comes the importance of the penal norm. I do not believe that everything a terrorist--whether accused or already sentenced--tells a journalist can be comprised in this crime; nevertheless, one cannot rule out the attempt to make the papers a sounding board for the aims of terrorist and subversive incitement and propaganda. Be that as it may, I cannot of course forecast the future jurisprudence in connection with a bill which is still being debated by Parliament.

Question: It is, however, legitimate to ask the interior minister his opinion of the specific significance of this norm....

Answer: Of course.... But we must proceed from the following premise: the public is very alarmed. People are exasperated. Much will depend on the journalists' attitude: For instance, what kind of comment would you consider appending to an interview with Curcio? Clearly a responsible journalist--in the sense of loyalty to the constitutional value--cannot evade expressing an unfavorable verdict, a negative kind of comment, if such an interview is designed to attack the values of the democratic institutions. In other words, if the terrorist makes an unlawful condonation of his own crime, an interviewer who fails to dissociate himself from that could himself become partly responsible for it. On the other hand, if the journalist lets it be clearly understood that he does not want to be involved in that condonation, I believe he would not be running any risk of indictment.

Question: Mr Minister, do you not believe that all this restricts the freedom of the press and intimidates people working in the media?

Answer: These norms envisage a precise form of criminal intent which must be specifically verified. They require a verdict in each individual case based on both objective and subjective elements. In our present situation each of us must know how to behave and accept our own responsibilities. Even journalists must be aware of the limits which must be observed. Are they being subjected to intimidation? If we lived in a peaceful society this might even be open to debate; but we live in a society riddled with violence and terrorism. One of our major concerns must be to avoid nurturing any support for subversive conduct. The responsibilities which each and every one of us has to bear are becoming greater and greater.

Question: A group of 23 Milan magistrates has signed a document criticizing the new norms and, among other things, pointing to the danger that police detention reflects "the intention to effectively legitimize the use of unacceptable means." Could this fear be justified?

Answer: No. A norm of this kind cannot make police methods "unacceptable." In any case police interrogation without the presence of the defense counsel has existed in our system for over a year: Neither the new regulations governing detention in the interests of public security not the extension of police detention by up to 48 hours--which is in any case envisaged by the Constitution--can change things in the direction feared.

Question: Cesare Beccaria has already said that it is not the gravity of sentences but their ineluctability which constitutes the real deterrent against crime. Do you believe that the life sentence can stop youngsters who have decided to take up a radical and dramatic option like armed struggle?

Answer: Of course, ineluctability is the most convincing deterrent. But the scale of the sentence can also play a role. As long as one believes in a policy of sanctions, heavier sentences can be quite effective. And if in some cases they are ineffective, at least they do no harm. In any case, by establishing these norms, we are not worried about hardened terrorists who have long been in hiding being indifferent to them: We are concerned with halting the influx of "new ranks" and discouraging potential terrorists. Why believe that a youngster tempted by the adventure of terrorism, but who has not yet taken the definitive step, cannot be dissuaded by the prospect of life imprisonment?

Answer: In many of their internal documents the Red Brigades explain at great length that their principal objective is to "remove the bourgeois state's democratic mask" in order to reveal its "real repressive and military face." Is there not a danger that the package of new measures will work for the "barbarization of the conflict" which the "gentlemen of war" want?

Answer: Democracy must defend itself while remaining a democracy. The measures we have adopted do not violate this principle and this option, which is both political and social: They remain within the limits and framework of the Constitution. Then there is a fundamental guarantee, a guarantee which it is safe to trust: the consensus of the people, the consensus of public, as expressed through the channels provided by the system and democratic debate. There is very broad consensus with these measures: This is a fact.

Question: To lose constitutional freedoms with many people's consensus is no consolation. Indeed not....

Answer: Nothing is being lost, because freedom without security eventually loses much of its meaning. These measures defend democracy and do not damage it.

POLICY REASSESSMENT MAY JEOPARDIZE GROMYKO VISIT

LD252224 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1930 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Text[Prime Minister Sa Carneiro was received by the president of the republic this afternoon at 1600. An overall reassessment of Portuguese-Soviet relations was the main topic discussed during the audience. The reassessment of our country's foreign policy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union may jeopardize the planned trip to Portugal by Andrey Gromyko, whose visit is to reciprocate former Foreign Minister Mario Soares' visit to the USSR in 1975. Observers believe that the granting of visas to Soviet citizens willing to travel to Portugal will now become more difficult. They also foresee a government reassessment of the position of Soviet enterprise currently operating in Portugal.

It should be noted that Portuguese-Soviet trade relations recorded a 624,000-conto deficit on Portugal's side in the first half of 1979. The trade balance between the two countries--which before 25 April 1974 was favorable to Portugal--is now adverse to our country due to oil imports. The USSR is our fourth largest supplier.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS APPROVES NEW AUSTERITY MEASURES

[Excerpts] A meeting of the Council of Ministers ended this afternoon at about 1400. The Council decided upon a set of austerity measures to be applied to the state sector, including the government and the entire civil service. Questions pertaining to the energy sector were also discussed. After the meeting Deputy Prime Minister Freitas do Amaral spoke to reporters: [Begin recording] The Council of Ministers has decided that within 30 days--starting today--each minister must have a complete list of all the committees and working groups operating within his ministry so that decisions may be made with regard to all of them, either by ordering them to conclude their work within a short deadline to be set in due course, or by suspending them altogether.

Another resolution of the Council of Ministers bears more directly on introducing checks on the operation of the public sector and on curbs aimed at reducing expenditure in a context of austerity for the public sector. In effect, it makes no sense that, considering the country's grave economic and financial crisis, austerity should only be urged on, and demanded from, the public and the enterprises; it must also be demanded from the public sector, including the government itself. To this end, the Council adopted a resolution comprising a broad range of measures that I will now list.

First, the Council of Ministers has decided that trips abroad by members of the government will henceforth be reduced to an absolute minimum which will all be subject to the prime minister's approval on a case-by-case basis. The size of the retinues in such trips will also be reduced to the absolute minimum.

Second, it has also been decided to reduce to the absolute minimum the sending of official delegations abroad and the expenditure connected with this type of operation. Likewise, these trips will also be subject to approval on a case-by-case basis.

Third, the Council decided to revise all the regulations providing for free public transport for members of the government and civil servants on private business.

The rules governing free admission into theaters and state organizations to members of the government and civil servants will also be revised.

It has also been decided to establish tight curbs on the recruitment of new personnel into our already overmanned civil service. Steps will therefore be taken to reduce recruitment to the absolutely indispensable minimum. [end recording]

Further austerity measures with a more direct bearing were announced by Finance Minister Cavaco e Silva:

[Begin recording] The Council of Ministers has set a 60-day deadline for a review of the regulations on the purchasing and utilization of cars by the state, meaning not just state officials in a restricted sense but the whole of the public sector, including the state-run enterprises. This is aimed at reducing expenses and energy consumption and at improving the management of the motor pool. It has also been decided to introduce steeper penalties for the misuse of state vehicles. It has also been decided to amend the regulations pertaining to the use of state vehicles seized by the security forces. This is also aimed at reducing expenses insofar as it is known that there are seized vehicles available that could be acquired for the state rather than purchasing new cars at much higher prices.

The government has also decided to make a strict review of the situations existing in various ministries with regard to civil servants on full pay who in fact have no specific functions allotted to them.

In keeping with this policy of austerity adopted for the public sector, the various ministries have been asked to review the benefits enjoyed by officials of state-run enterprises, that is to say, a complete-as-possible review of the perquisites enjoyed by officials of certain enterprises.

All this is part and parcel of an overall policy aimed at checking public expenditure, at introducing a climate of major austerity in public expenditure, which is already finding reflections in the (?drafting) of the general state budget. [end recording]

At the same meeting with the press, Industry and Energy Minister Alvaro Barreto stated:

[Begin recording] I reported to the Council of Ministers on the problems currently affecting the energy sector, with regard to both supply and prices. As broadly debated in the Assembly of the Republic, this year the country will be spending twice as much in the purchase of oil as it did in 1979. Last year we spent some 60 billion escudos on oil, and this year's projected expenditure is about 120 billion.

With regard to supply itself, at the moment we have only assured the supply of two-thirds of the country's total requirements, which entails the need for a rapid effort aimed at securing the remaining third.

Obviously, this whole state of affairs will be bound sooner or later to be reflected in the price of fuels, and in this regard, I have asked the Council of Ministers for guidelines to enable my ministry to put forward a concrete proposal on the new prices to be introduced. As soon as this is decided, the news media will be duly informed. [end recording]

LD272302 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 2030 GMT 27 Jan 80 LD

[Text] The PCP Central Committee has released two documents analyzing the political situation in Portugal and defining its position with regard to events in Afghanistan.

Referring to Portuguese politics, it says that the plan of the ruling Democratic Alliance rests on seven fundamental trends to eliminate the democratic regime, install capitalist economic and political power and, in the short term, establish a new dictatorship.

The seven trends are the restoration of the dynamics of exploitation, capitalist accumulation, centralization and concentration; limitation of rights; destruction of the major conquests of the revolution; a legislative counterrevolution in parliament; the preparation of the new electoral law; the referendum law; and confrontation with the president of the republic and Council of the Revolution to create an institutional deadlock resulting in a coup d'etat.

The PCP Central Committee says that it will prepare a counterattack to what it terms reactionary attacks. In this way, it hopes to win the next election, proposing that the Porguguese democratic movement remain with it in the coalition form of the United People's Alliance.

With regard to events in Afghanistan the PCP declares solidarity with the people of Afghanistan and the People's Democratic Party of the country, confident that the revolutionary conquests will be defended against the conspiracies and aggressions of imperialism, counting on the aid of the Soviet Union and the revolutionary forces of the entire world.

Stating that China's position confirms the alinement of the leaders of Beijing with imperialism, it criticizes the position of the Portuguese Government with regard to the issue, describing it as a violation of the Constitution and contrary to the interests of the Portuguese people and national independence.

REPORTAGE ON ALLEGED MILITARY COUP ATTEMPT

Reported Military Revolt Fails

OW251731 Hong Kong AFP in English 1711 GMT 25 Jan 80 OW

[Text] Madrid, Jan. 25 (AFP)--An attempted military revolt failed today, reliable sources quoted by the daily paper DIARO 16 said here. An army officer was relieved of his command of Spain's first armored division, quartered in the vicinity of the capital, the sources added.

DIARIO 16 said the plot was hatched at a meeting of high-level officials who wanted to install a retired general as head of the government. The general, whose name was not mentioned, was reported to enjoy great prestige.

The newspaper said the attempted takeover was sparked by the assassiantion on Jan 10 of the commander of the police force in Basque province of Alava by members of the Basque terrorist group ETA.

The officer who was relieved of his command was identified as General Luis Torres Rojas, who led the First Armored Division in the town of El Goloso, north of Madrid.

The evening daily INFORMACIONES said he was transferred to the post of military governor of the town of Coruna in the northern province of Galicia.

INFORMACIONES said the General Torres Rojas was transferred to Coruna after a speech he made Jan 6 during military ceremonies attended by King Juan Carlos.

The officer reportedly pledged that the army was "ready to defend with its blood the unity of Spain and its territorial integrity."

Government Denies Rumors

NC252249 Paris AFP in English 2245 GMT 25 Jan 80 NC

[Text] Madrid, Jan 25 (AFP)--The Spanish Government today firmly denied persistent rumours here of a recent attempted military coup d'etat. The reports were "devoid of any substance," government spokesman Josep Melia told a Madrid press conference.

The Madrid newspaper DIARIO 16 today reported that high-level government officials had failed in a recent attempt to put a retired general in power.

The spokesman said the source of the report was an army captain, Jose Tormo Rico, who had since been arrested for spreading an alarmist rumour.

Following today's article in DIARIO 16, rumours spread swiftly through the capital of an aborted plot headed by seven lieutenant-generals and other army officers.

Their aim, it was said, had been to install a government headed by lieutenant-general Fernando de Santiago Diaz de Mendibil, an officer who resigned in protest at the legalization of the Spanish Communist Party.

The plot was said to have been revealed by Spanish Socialist parliamentarian Jaime Bousquet, who reported the matter to Socialist Party Secretary Felipe Gonzalez.

Contacted in Seville, Mr Gonzalez said today he thought the risk of an army coup was "almost nil".

Officer Reprimanded

[Text] The press and public relations office of the military headquarters of the Ninth Military Region [in Granada] has issued the following note:

The military headquarters of the Ninth Military Region reports that during the last week, in the Plaza de Melilla, Captain Jose (Tornos) Rico, assigned to the above garrison, made statements to certain officers and commanders propagating alarmist rumors, which lacked any foundation, about an alleged plan for military intervention. On hearing of these statements the high command immediately decided to reprimand the above-mentioned officer in order to prevent unease in the army, according to provisions of article 443 of the Code of Military Justice, and ordered proceedings to be taken against him.

Press 'Fabrications' Attacked

LD252208 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Spanish Defense Minister Sahagun Rodriguez, in a statement to the EUROPA press agency, has said:

I am surprised and indignant at the story which appeared today in DIARIO 16. This article, which I consider to be absolutely irresponsible, made inexact statements which could affect the prestige of high-ranking military officers, the institution itself and even national interests. There has been no attempted military action [intentona militar] as this newspaper claims.

The armed forces deserve the greatest consideration and they should not be mixed up in rumors and fabrications. The reshuffle of military officers, as a result of promotions and vacancies which are taking place, are normal and come under the discretion of the military administration. This particular reshuffle has been taking place for the last 2 months.

Therefore, to speculate without foundation regarding this reshuffle and to connect it with certain equally irresponsible statements by a member of a unit of the Melilla garrison can only be understood as a hasty act or one aimed at journalistic sensationalism. Once and for all, I would like to ask, as minister of defense, that the armed forces be given the maximum respect by all Spaniards, and that no one try to involve the army in absurd and alarmist plans.

Military Court Summons Editor

The summons which was handed to his brother at the newspaper office arrived in an envelope from the military headquarters of the first military region and was marked urgent.

EL PAIS Report Cited

LD272342 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 27 Jan 80 LD

[Text] The Madrid paper EL PAIS reports today that the Spanish Government decided 2 months ago to transfer Gen Luis Torres Rojas from head of the Bruneto Armored Division, based in Madrid, to a new post as military governor of La Coruna Province in Galicia. This decision was interpreted on Friday by the Madrid paper DIARIO 16 as a sign that the move was due to an alleged military revolt instigated by this general, which was roundly denied both by the general himself and by the government.

EL PAIS, which quotes very reliable sources for the origin of its report, says the fact that the decision to transfer this general was taken 2 months ago shows that the change in his post cannot in any way be connected with recent reports on an alleged revolt, as a result of which a captain--who spoke to several colleagues of an alleged plan to put pressure on the king to declare the Communist Party illegal and appoint the retired Lt Gen Vega Rodriguez prime minister--is under arrest in Melilla barracks. The reports to this effect have been described as fantastic in political and military circles.

GOVERNMENT CRITICIZES SAKHAROV ARREST

[Dispatch from the Moncloa Palace by Manuel Garcia Montenegro]

[Excerpts] With the report on the meeting of the Council of Ministers today, journalists were given two notes: One concerning payment to civil servants, and the other on the Sakharov affair. With regard to the depriving of Doctor Sakharov, holder of the Nobel Peace Prize, of his liberty, the government has made clear its rejection of an act which constitutes a clear attack on the fundamental rights of the individual and a flagrant violation of the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act.

The note from the government says: At a time when the Soviet Union is using force to intervene in Afghanistan, an Islamic nonalined country which is the victim of armed aggression, the arrest of Doctor Sakharov, an undefatigable defender of rights and liberties, is a new blow to detente which must be based on respect for human rights and is the foundation and final goal of genuine peace.

NO DECISION ON OLYMPICS BOYCOTT MADE YET

[Excerpts] Josep Melia, the secretary of state for information, was asked at the regular press conference held at end of Council of Ministers session today whether the government had considered the possibility of joining President Carter's initiative to boycott the Moscow Olympics. The government spokesman said that the Spanish Government hopes and wishes for the restoration of peace and trusts that circumstances will allow the Olympics to be held, but that for that the conditions must be suitable for carrying them out.

[Begin Melia recording] Spain will make every effort to achieve a concerted position within the Council of Europe, in which the ministers responsible for sports of the various countries will take part, to try to (?reach) a common position among the different European countries. In the meantime, the final decision with respect to Spanish participation will rest with the Spanish Olympic Committee as it is strictly a sporting matter. [end recording]

CARRILLO CONDEMNS SOVIET EXILE OF SAKHAROV

LD251426 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] The Executive Committee of the Spanish Communist Party [PCE] concluded its meeting after midnight last night. The meeting was due to have continued until midday today. The conclusion was moved forward because Santiago Carrillo leaves for Rome today to meet Enrico Berlinguer, secretary general of the Italian Communist Party [PCI].

BASQUE SOCIALISTS, COMMUNISTS CREATE ANTITERRORIST FRONT

LD270050 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Text] The Socialist Party of Euskadi [PSE-PSOE] and the Communist Party of Euskadi [PCE-EPK] have issued a communique announcing the creation of an antiterrorist front in the Basque Country. The first act of this front is the calling of a meeting and rally on Wednesday in Baracaldo.

The two parties believe that the response to terrorism and to any fascist action is a task for the whole people and should be headed by the Basque General Council. The communique adds that since the Basque General Council is not carrying this out, and the other parties refuse to act decisively against violence, the PSE-PSOE and the PCE-EPK feels obliged to call upon the workers to mobilize in the interests of democracy, the national interests of Euskadi and the interests of the left itself, which are opposed to the position of terrorism.

The joint communique also says that those who in Euskadi differentiate between one type of killing, one type of death, and another, those who protest against the brutal attack on (Alonso Tegui) while acclaiming ETA, are in essence carrying the machineguns themselves.

Finally, Socialists and Communists understand that the electoral situation should not be the front to justify everything and that the defense of the statue of Guernica demands united action by the democratic and national forces to pacify this country.

OLESEN HITS MOSCOW 'PROPAGANDA' ON NATO MILITARY PLANS

LD251347 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 21 Jan 80 p 4 LD

[Unattributed report: "Kjeld Olesen Repudiates Moscow Allegation"]

[Text] Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen clearly repudiates the TASS statements Saturday to the effect that NATO's European strategy is a threat to stability in northern Europe, and that the Soviet Union and its allies must begin to restore the balance now that NATO is trying to achieve military superiority.

"I understand this to be a deliberate line from the Soviet Union--as part of a determi and deliberate strategy, which I deeply deplore," Kjeld Olesen said Sunday to the radic news program.

"It is not a case of having military superiority in West Europe--on the contrary," Kjeld Olesen said.

The foreign minister also pointed out that Norway is concerned about the intensified Soviet activity and the greatly enhanced buildup of military forces which has been noted in northern Norway.

"No one must gain the impression that we in West Europe have been rearming over the years and that the Soviet Union has maintained the status quo," Kjeld Olesen asserted.

"Unfortunately, I must describe what we are now experienceing as a propaganda campaign by Moscow. It must be answered in two ways: by sufficient firmness toward the Soviet Union, and by giving detente a chance, when there is an opportunity for it," the foreign minister added.

PAPER SCORES CARTER'S STATE OF UNION MESSAGE

LD251518 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0920 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[From the "Press Review" on KANSAN UUTISET editorial]

[Text] According to KANSAN UUTISET, the main impression given by President Carter's State of the Union message is that the United States is ready to resume the role of a world policemen, who, in the name of protecting U.S. interests, has the right to intervene anywhere in the world. For this reason new political pretexts are also being developing.

According to KANSAN UUTISET, Carter spoke with deliberate provocation about the Gulf area. According to Carter, it is there above all where vital U.S. interests are to be protected. The reason is oil. The United States is prepared to use military means to safeguard oil deliveries. A year ago the United States formed a special force primarily intended for operations of this kind on the other side of the ocean.

According to KANSAN UUTISET, the President's speech also gave another hint that the United States is assuming the role of world policeman. He is now ready to remove the restrictions imposed on CIA activities after the defeat in Vietnam. The unpleasant results of the work of this notorious organization will evidently soon be seen again throughout the world. According to KANSAN UUTISET, Carter's speech clearly reveals the earlier imperialist United States--an aggressive big power which seriously endangers peace in the world through its machinations.

OFFICIAL REFUTES REPORTS ON SOVIET MILITARY ACTIVITY

ID272042 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 27 Jan 80 LD

[Summary] The Soviet party organ PRAVDA has criticized two Nordic newspapers for spreading false anti-Soviet information. PRAVDA referred to news items published by the Norwegian MORGENBLADET and the Swedish SVENSKA DAGBLADET, which claim that the Soviet Union has recently concentrated its troops on Finland's eastern border and closed the Finnish-Soviet border at Kostomuksha.

"Chief of the General Headquarters Information Section Lt Col Jorma Kaarnola also refutes the allegations of the Norwegian and Swedish papers. Lt Col Jorma Kaarnola refers to the Foreign Ministry statement issued last Tuesday, which noted that the reports concerning an escalation of military activity on the eastern border and in the sea areas of the Gulf of Finland as well as the allegations [words indistinct] Finnish construction projects in the Soviet Union are wholly without foundation. According to statements made by the General Headquarters and the army, the Soviet Union has been holding in the Vyborg area military exercises connected with regular training, but these exercises have already ended.

"The defense forces have in no way stepped up their normal readiness. The current exercises in Finland are normal and they are connected with the final training of draftees to be demobilized in February, Lt Col Jorma Kaarnola said."

GOVERNMENT 'SKEPTICAL' ON SUCCESS OF OLYMPICS BOYCOTT

ID251335 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 22 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Einar Solvoll report: "Nordli Skeptical Over Boycott Pressure"]

[Excerpt] The government is skeptical as regards exerting political pressure on sports organizations to prevent our Olympic team going to the summer games in Moscow. Prime Minister Odvar Nordli believes that the sportsmen and sportswomen themselves must be allowed to decide whether they want to go to the Soviet Union. That is the current Norwegian response to U.S. President Jimmy Carter's appeal, and it seems that the government's policy is widely supported among the opposition.

Following a 2-hour Cabinet meeting yesterday at which President Carter's appeal was discussed, Prime Minister Odvar Nordli said that the government will continue to assess the matter in the light of further developments and after discussing the question with other countries' governments.

But the government points out that during the consultations conducted on this affair in the NATO Council, Norway has to date clearly expressed skepticism as regards exerting pressure on sports organization to boycott the summer Olympics in Moscow. The government also wants to await developments regarding the question of a boycott of industrial exports to the Soviet Union.

TFSC'S ATAKOL MEETS WITH ITALIAN ENVOY, DISCUSSES EEC

TA241910 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 24 Jan 80 TA

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, received the Italian ambassador and conveyed to him the views of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus on Greek Cypriot moves of customs union with the European Economic Community. Italy is currently the president of the EEC Council of Ministers.

Mr Atakol told the ambassador that the Turkish Cypriot community viewed with great concern the ongoing dialog between the EEC and the Greek Cypriot administration for entry into the second stage of the EEC-Cyprus association agreement. The minister said it was considered of utmost importance that the basic aim to be pursued must be to adopt a policy that would assist in narrowing and eventually removing the wide economic gap between north and south Cyprus which, as generally conceded, constituted a serious obstacle to the political settlement of the Cyprus problem. He said the Turkish Cypriot community considered it essential that entry into the second stage should be postponed until the removal of the present grave economic imbalance in Cyprus, towards which objective the Turkish Cypriots were directing all their efforts and resources despite tremendous obstacles in their way. It was also appropriate to postpone it until a political settlement in Cyprus because of its unfavorable political implications for a solution.

Mr Atakol stressed that if entry into the second stage was proceeded with, it might present serious difficulties for the Turkish Cypriots, who might be forced to reappraise their fundamental policy with regard to Cyprus-EEC relations and the possible [word indistinct] of the intercommunal talks for discusssing the views of the two Cypriot communities with regard to the vital question of the events of [words indistinct]. He said that apart from the political considerations involved, the economic interests of the Turkish Cypriots would not be safeguarded under the present circumstances by an early entry or by putting into operation a transitional regime without effectively taking into account, through meaningful parallel contacts, the views of the Turkish community and the very special and urgent needs of the economy of north Cyprus.

Mr Atakol also told the ambassador that the EEC could use its influence on the Greek Cypriot administration to pay back to the Turkish community all foreign exchange which it brought into the island during 1963 to 1974 period to the tune of 130 million pounds sterling and which was unlawfully usurped by the Greek Cypriots. He urged the EEC to raise the present 60 percent customs concession of citrus to 80 percent in view of the fact that citrus exports accounted for nearly three quarters of north Cyprus exports. He also called on the EEC to give north Cyprus a separate quota of 20,000 tons for potatoes for the reason that due to the various difficulties facing the north potatoes could not be transported to the EEC markets as easily and efficiently as was done by the south.

In conclusion, Mr Atakol said that in the light of the overwhelming importance of the relations with the EEC, the Turkish Cypriot community was requesting the EEC to enable north Cyprus to benefit from the EEC-Cyprus association agreement, including the financial protocol, within the framework of which seven investment projects were already submitted to the EEC. He named these projects as the Morphou area irrigation project, radiolink telephone system, [name indistinct] dam, thermal power station, drilling machine, Nicosia-Kyrenia road and Kyrenia tourist harbor.

RTP LEADER WARNS AGAINST SETTLEMENT IN U.S. INTEREST

TA231809 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 23 Jan 80 TA

[Text] Republican Turkish Party [RTP] leader Ozker Ozgur said that the Turkish Cypriot community should be vigilant in the face of an increasing U.S. interest in Cyprus. In a written statement today, Ozgur recalled the recent message sent by President Carter to the U.S. Congress in which President Carter said that the new defense cooperation agreement signed between Turkey and the United States was also aimed at solving the Cyprus issue. Ozgur noted that the United States will want to impose a solution compatible with its own interests and that the leaders of the two communities might be forced to sign an agreement prepared by the United States and Britain as had been the case in 1959. He added that the leaders of the communities should bear in mind that the agreement signed in 1960 [as heard] had not lasted long. He noted that the intercommunal conflict should be solved through negotiations between the representatives of the two communities under the auspices of the United Nations. He concluded by saying that any solution should be compatible with the decision made by the legislative assembly on 5 November 1976.

DEMIREL EXPLAINS REASONS FOR RECENT ECONOMIC MEASURES

TA271945 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1555 GMT 27 Jan 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, Jan 27 (AA)--Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel staged a press conference today "to explain to the public the reasons for the economic measures" recently announced by the government. He said, in brief:

"While only 60 days have passed since our government received the vote of confidence on January 24, 1980 [as received], it was out of our responsibility to Turkey to take extraordinarily comprehensive economic measures. This necessity did not manifest itself on January 24, 1980 or Turkey would not have been left face to face with the necessity of taking these measures under the rule of a 60-day old government. Turkey takes precedence before the government and political parties. Overcoming this crisis besetting our country is more important than the question of government. This constituted our starting point.

"During my press conference on December 8, 1979, I said precisely: Everyone is accustomed to admit that the inflation has crushed the poor and the weak, almost paralyzed the economy and the state and constitutes one of the leading problems of November 1979:

--scarcities and shortages,
--unemployment,
--interrupted investment plans,
--greatly diminishing value of the Turkish lira,
--an almost locked Central Bank,

--a state treasury with depleted stocks,
--state economic enterprises in great deficits,
--paralyzed health services,
--education services which lost their national characteristics to a great extent,
--political zealots that infiltrated the state machinery,
--the Turkish Radio and Television Corporation, [RTR] and the ANATOLIA NEWS AGENCY that have drifted away from the constitutional lines,
--suspended foreign policy issues,

"I have declared on many occasions that the government was a 'government of extraordinary state of affairs.' It is clear that all these losses are in fact being paid by our nation. In order to make up for the deficits and losses, the emission by the Central Bank was continuously resorted to and fiduciary notes were issued. The emission increase in the last 2 years, is 50 percent more than all the emissions made until the beginning of 1978. This increase is the most significant reason for high inflation.

"Changing this dark picture depends on accepting the reality as it is and shouldering the sacrifices it necessitates. I am aware that this is not easy. I am trying to say that there lie difficult roads ahead before our nation. But we shall surely reach the light, and a difficult and thorny road will be left behind. Everything that is defunct shall be restored. If this issue is not well understood and dealt with accordingly and if we lend ear to demagoguery and deceptions, it should be clear to everyone that we will be sinking in the quicksand.

"These measures are not taken for making life more unbearable or increasing the high cost of living, but for rectifying the imbalances which have been created, revitalizing the economy, putting an end to all this. One should not be taken in by the deceptive examples and exceptions to avoid jumping into wrong conclusions.

"These are the measures that may be taken by any country of the world under similar conditions. For this reason, we regarded searching for solutions and [passage indistinct] are aware of the fact that such measures may not look popular. While our nation is facing all these problems, how can we enjoy ourselves with complacency. The meaning of our words will be appreciated more, when Turkey overcomes its present situation."

Having read the text of his statement during the first part of his press conference today, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel replied to questions from the press. Following are the highlights of his answers:

"What we are doing is not merely increasing prices. We cannot ignore Turkey's being pushed into the precipice of an economic crisis. There is no other way of eliminating the present circumstances. We have not said to ourselves: 'If we adopt these measures we will lose the seat (of power) on which we have been sitting.' Any government would have to take the same measures in order to save Turkey from the catastrophe called inflation.

"Turkey is more important than the government. I do not worry about the government. What is important for me is Turkey's future. I am convinced that we will block the flood of inflation. Turkey is passing through a difficult period. Measures of difficult days would naturally be difficult too. Governments do not always adopt popular measures.

"While elaborating the economic measures, we have also thought about measures which would ease the lot of the masses with low incomes. We will pay them as much as the inflation, will not allow a further lowering of their level of living. We envisage adoption of the echelle mobile system.

"We have export goods. We have, first of all, tobacco amounting to $400 million. With the sale of the tobacco in question we will have $400 million in the Central Bank vaults. We have also some cotton to export as well as foodstuffs."

POLITICAL PARTIES REACT TO NEW ECONOMIC MEASURES

RPP Criticism

TA251806 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 25 Jan 80 TA

[Text] RPP Deputy Secretary General Altan Oymen has said: Those who used to say that all the country's problems would be solved as soon as the RPP government was replaced, have brought about--and in just 75 days--a dark period not encountered even in war time. It seems that this darkness will become even darker during the remaining 25 days of the Justice Party government's 100-day program.

In a written statement issued in Ankara, Oymen maintained that under the RPP government the economy had been made to work and the value of the Turkish lira had become stable despite the difficult world conditions. Oymen recalled that during those days Demirel used to criticize the RPP government's decisions as "crazy." Oymen added that stronger terms were necessary to describe the latest devaluation decision. However, he added, the RPP opposition will not use such terms because it is not as irresponsible as the Justice Party opposition.

Oymen charged that besides the great list of shortages, which was getting longer every day, the prices of available goods were soaring and the remarks "the opposite happened" were being used for the Turkish economy for the first time. Oymen added: The buying power of especially our middle and lower-income groups is soon going to disappear. This new devaluation will bring new and greater price hikes on top of the unending hikes of the past 2 and 1/2 months. Our people have been pushed to the limit by the high cost of living. How will they bear the load of the new price hikes? The attempts to exempt minimum wages from taxes and to raise the salaries of the civil servants are no longer valid in light of the present situation.

NAP Concern

[Text] Nationalist Action Party [NAP] leader Alpaslan Turkes has asked that low income groups be protected and that the burden of the high cost of living on these sectors be alleviated following the recent economic decisions. In a news conference in Ankara today, Turkes expressed his views regarding the recent economic measures announced by the government. Turkes said that the measures that were not taken as a whole at the right time led Turkey into this situation. Pointing out that the present condition is like an extremely painful operation, Turkes stated that his party will not take advantage of the situation; however, it will support solutions which will, on the one hand, protect low and middle income groups, while, on the other hand, not contradict the general logic of the economic measures. Turkes continued:

[Begin Turkes recording] The economic and social problems which Turkey should solve in the face of these decisions is to be able to ensure--in a manner which will not increase inflationary pressures--that the low and middle income groups will not be affected by these decisions.

Turkey was placed in these difficult straits because the previous government did not heed this point and the bitter cures resulting from Marxist conditioning, which continuously exacerbated inflation, failed.

The primary condition for saving the civil servants, the workers, the shopkeepers and the peasants with little land without causing further inflation, or artifically increasing the volume of money on the market, is a just, scientific and intelligent tax reform. The minimum wage should certainly be exempted from tax and illegal profits. Tax-free profits and profits which are allocated to investment should be taxed effectively, thus eliminating means for illegal profits and alleviating the burden on the low income groups like civil servants, workers, shopkeepers and peasants. While taxing profits not allocated for investments, a financial policy should be formed to encourage investments and create resourses. [end recording]

Proposing that the civil servants' incomes be increased in a just manner and that the tax bracket for middle income groups be reduced, Turkes noted that the real sacrifices should be made by those who made illegal and tax-free profits. Turkes also demanded that the high cost of food and clothing should especially be averted and state support be extended if necessary.

In reply to a question about the kind of support his party will extend to the government in the face of the new developments, Turkes said: This government is still new. We regard it as untimely to comment on the issue of support now.

NSP: Government 'Bankrupt'

NC280840 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 27 Jan 80 p 1, 11 NC

[Excerpt] Ankara--Commenting on the latest economic decision taken by the government, National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan said that these decisions will shorten the life of the government.

Answering questions by the Ankara correspondent on recent economic developments, Erbakan stated that the government made these decisions on the instructions by the IMF. He added: "It is odd, but also the Ecevit government had taken such measures as soon as it had gone bankrupt. This government too has gone bankrupt in such a short time and is now being used as an instrument in implementing these decisions."

When asked whether his party continues to support the government, Erbakan replies: "We had allowed the government a limited time in order to ascertain clearly the mentality of the Justice Party. Although the government has been acting contrary to all our recommendations, we have been patiently keeping our promise for the past 2 and 1/2 months. The National Salvation Party has refrained from submitting an interpellation in order to topple the government. The government is still in office. We are thus fulfilling our promise to support it."

Erbakan then stated that the government was pursuing a secret foreign policy and added: "The government has failed to fulfill its task during the parliamentary debate on foreign policy. Instead of submitting the U.S.-Turkish defense and cooperation agreement to our parliament for ratification, it did everything to distract the nation's attention from it." Finally, Erbakan drew attention to President of the Senate Caglayangil's disclosure that MIT was collaborating with Mossad, SAVAK and CIA; Erbakan stated: "MIT's work must be based on national sources. If MIT is operating on the strength of the information it obtains from these organizations, this situation must be rectified as soon as possible."

VOTCP Denunciation

TA260831 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 26 Jan 80 TA

[Text] The Demirel government has devalued the Turkish lira by 50 percent. New price increases will follow the devaluation. The Council of Ministers, which met under the chairmanship of Demirel on Thursday, fulfilled another demand by the IMF, the World Bank and other imperialist organizations and decided to devalue the Turkish lira by 50 percent. The statement on the subject issued by the pro-American, pro-martial law and pro-holding company Demirel government cited the continual reduction in the real value of the Turkish lira and the economic crisis as the reason for the devaluation. According to the devaluation decision, a U.S. dollar will be exchanged for 70 Turkish lira and a German mark for 40 Turkish lira.

In addition to the devaluation, which is equivalent to halving the purchasing power of all workers and automatically decreasing wages by 50 percent, the economic measures package of the Demirel government was announced. This package too, reflects the prescriptions of the IMF, the likes of Koc and Sabanci [prominent Turkish businessmen], and the collaborationist, monopolistic and capitalistic circles. According to the Council of Ministers decision, the prices of oil and petroleum products, coal, cement and steel were increased by 100 percent and a series of consumer products were increased by 45 to 70 percent.

Through the recent devaluation and the new price hikes, the Demirel government, which attacks our people and the toiling masses with the bayonets of martial law and police panzers, has clearly shown that it is threatening the livelihood of the people. This government--the enemy of the people and of democracy--should be overthrown.

INCREASE IN PETROLEUM PRODUCTS PRICES REPORTED

[Excerpts] The prices of petroleum products, paper, iron, steel and cement have been increased. The sales of these products were suspended throughout Turkey as of 0700 this morning.

According to information obtained by a TRT correspondent from the Ministry of Energy and Natural Resources, the price of a liter of high octane gasoline has been increased from 25 lira to 36 in Ankara. The price of low octane gasoline, which was 22 lira per liter, has now been increased to 32. Heating oil will be sold for 14.7 lira per liter in Ankara. Fuel oil number 6 will be sold for 12 lira per liter. The price of fuel oil number 5 has been set as 13.0 lira per liter. CLARK SAYS GOVERNMENT WILL BOYCOTT MOSCOW OLYMPICS

[Text] Ottawa, Jan 26, REUTER--Canada today followed the United States in recommending a boycott by its athletes of the Moscow Olympic games if the Soviet Union has not withdrawn its troops from Afghanistan by February 20. Caretaker Prime Minister Joe Clark asked officials of the Canadian Olympic Association to convey the Canadian stand to the International Olympic Committee [IOC] at its meeting in Lake Placid, New York, on February 9. Mr Clark, who has offered Montreal and other sites in Canada for events in an "alternative Olympics", told reporters he would still prefer the games to be moved from Moscow.

But if they could not be shifted, and if Soviet troops were still in Afghanistan on February 20, the government felt Canada should not take part in the Moscow games, he said. "We feel Canada has to continue its very strong position against an invasion by the Soviet Union of Afghanistan and its continuing disrespect for human rights," he said.

The cabinet decided yesterday to support the withdrawal deadline set earlier by President Carter, Mr Clark said. Canada had previously been a strong advocate of moving the games from Moscow, rather than a boycott. The government amended its position because of the need for allies of the United States to show their support for Washington's stand, Mr Clark said. There were indications through diplomatic channels "that the Soviet Union is capable of being impressed by concerted action by a number of nations where the question of the games is at stake," he added.

There was no immediate statement from Mr Clark's chief rival for power in the February 18 general election, Pierre Trudeau, who last week opposed a boycott of the Olympics and could be prime minister again by the time the withdrawal deadline comes.

WPC PRESIDENT REFUSED ENTRY, LEAVES FOR WARSAW

LD251324 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1221 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpts] Home Secretary Mr William Whitelaw personally took the decision to exclude World Peace Council President Mr Romesh Chandra from Britain, the Home Office disclosed today. A spokesman said Mr Whitelaw's decision had been made on the basis that Mr Chandra's "exclusion from the UK would be conducive to the public good."

Mr Chandra--who flew into Heathrow from Vienna yesterday to attend a two-day conference organized by the all Britain peace liaison group--left Heathrow this morning. The Home Office spokesman said: "The situation is that Mr Chandra was refused admission to the UK and he was removed this morning on a flight out of Heathrow at 1035 am, flying to Warsaw." He had spent the night in a Heathrow detention center.

Mr Whitelaw acted himself in making the decision under powers conferred upon him by the 1971 Immigration Act. Labour MP Bob Cryer (Keighley) condemned Mr Chandra's exclusion as "shameful." It is bloody disgraceful and a complete over reaction by the government," he told the PRESS ASSOCIATION. The government has become so besotted by events in Afghanistan that they are restricting fair and free comment on behalf of those who wish to see peace prevail rather than the cold war, which the government seems intent on worsening."

BONN TO PROVIDE ARMS, ASSISTANCE FOR TURKEY, PAKISTAN

DW281207 Bonn DIE WELT in German 28 Jan 80 p 1 DW

[Heinz Vielain dispatch: "Initial Aid to Turkey: 60 Leopard Tanks"]

[Text] Bonn--As an initial measure, the Federal Government plans to let Turkey have 60 Leopard-1 tanks. The tanks are to be withdrawn from Bundeswehr stocks and transported to Ankara immediately. Reportedly, Defense Minister Apel plans to fill the gaps thus created with the more advanced Leopard-2 tanks. The total measures envisaged in the arms sector necessitate an increase in the defense budget of about DM1 billion.

On the whole, Turkey is to receive additional defense aid in the amount of DM400 million beyond the development aid of DM400 million. Added to this will be contributions in the amount of DM560 million, which had been tacitly promised to the government in Ankara at an earlier time but thus far not paid.

Within the framework of this promise, Bonn offered the Turks antiaircraft tanks and armored personnel carriers, special aircraft, trucks and trailers, machineguns, antitank systems, Cobra missiles and ammunition from Bundeswehr stockpiles. An internal government paper reveals that the navy was to contribute small craft, tugboats and fuel transporters.

What the internal government proposal discloses is that the Federal Government, as early as in 1978, voiced massive criticism against the Americans because Turkey was hardly capable of fulfilling its NATO mission in view of the U.S. arms embargo that had been relaxed only partially at the time. Bonn had decided to extend military aid to Turkey as early as in 1978 because the combat value of the Turkish Army threatened to deteriorate to a point where the USSR could have planned to use elsewhere part of the troops tied up in this region.

As an initial aid measure to Pakistan, the Federal Government plans to foot the bill for four airbus aircraft ordered some time ago in the Federal Republic. The funds thus released may then be used by Pakistan for different purposes, meaning for defense purposes. The government does not yet have any concrete plans concerning the extent of the necessary aid measures for Afghanistan or India. They do, however, anticipate aid to these four states, which may well necessitate an increase in the federal budget of about DM4 billion.

DELAYING OF EAST-WEST VISITS DOES NOT SIGNAL RUPTURE OF RELATIONS

LD281724 Hamburg DPA in German 1630 GMT 28 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpts] Bonn--In spite of a number of postponements of meetings with Warsaw Pact countries, the FRG Government does not want a rupture of relations with the East European states. Following the cancellation of a Moscow visit by Federal Labor Minister Herbert Ehrenberg, confirmed in Bonn today, it is learned from informed circles that Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's interest in the announced meetings with SED Secretary General Erich Honecker and Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev is unaffected by the various visits postponed in the last few days.

These circles also cite Honecker's continued readiness for the meeting with Schmidt arranged for the first few months of 1980. However, it is noted that the GDR side has not yet proposed a date for the meeting.

Government Spokesman Arnim Gruenewald told journalists today that there is no date yet for such a meeting and to the best of his knowledge no talks have been held on the date. It therefore remains open whether Schmidt will go to the GDR before or after his talks with President Carter in Washington on 5 March. It has been learned that Schmidt has discussed his travel plans regarding Moscow and the GDR with the U.S. President.

The Federal Ministry of Labor announced today that the Soviet side has shown understanding for the postponement and that the invitation remains open. Informed circles in Bonn proceed on the premise that the cancellation of the visit is connected with the cooling in East-West relations following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The CSSR also has cited difficulties with the date as the reason for the postponement of the visit to Prague by Foreign Minister Genscher at the end of February. A meeting of the German-Soviet Economic Commission has been postponed at the request of the USSR. A visit to Poland by Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff has also been postponed because the minister wanted to examine fresh proposals submitted by Warsaw.

However the Federal Government anticipates that the visit by Hungarian Foreign Minister Frigyes Puja in 10 days' time will take place. There is no information from Hungary casting any doubt on this visit.

It is still not clear whether the visit to Moscow by a high-level Bundestag delegation will take place. The visit, planned for some time, is due to include Bundestag President Richard Stuecklen; Bundestag parliamentary group chairmen Herbert Wehner, Wolfgang Mischnick and Helmut Kohl; as well as CSU Group Chairman Friedrich Zimmermann. This visit was twice postponed last year because of difficulties with the date, and a fresh date was due to be discussed at the beginning of 1980. Kohl has already said he will not go to Moscow if the visit were to go ahead.

CDU'S KOHL INTERVIEWED ON SECURITY POLICY, RELATIONS WITH U.S.

DW280937 Stuttgart Sueddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1145 GMT 26 Jan 80 DW

[Excerpts from reporter Reissenberger interview with CDU Chairman Dr Helmut Kohl: place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Does the oppostion still agree with the Schmidt government with regard to security policy according to the latest NATO decsions, as well as with regard to the promotion of nuclear energy?

[Answer] I cannot see that the Federal Government has abandoned its interpretation of detente policy now, an interpretation it has pursued for 10 years. That must be said in this connection. You said correctly that in matters of defense policy and in matters of safeguarding the energy base the CDU/CSU faction and the laender with CDU/CSU governments have supported the government better than the government parties themselves.

All the talk about commonality must not lead to the pursuing of an erroneous policy just for the sake of commonality. The present SPD-FDP government has made grave mistakes in the past 10 years with regard to security policy and the assessment of the possibilities of disarmament and detente. If the Federal Government were eventually prepared to admit that and to change its positions, it should be welcomed for the sake of the country, but I am very skeptical.

It is wise with regard to strategic developments in the world to have close relations, a partnership, with the strongest power in the world. The Germans ought to realize this after two world wars. We want to have a close partnership and friendship with France for historical reasons, for reasons of good neighborliness, for reasons of our European way of life. But French policy can afford, for geographic reasons, to see some things differently, things we cannot afford. We are located between the territory of the GDR, where Soviet troops are stationed, and the area of the Republic of France. On the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany, strong American units are stationed within the framework of the NATO alliance. The strategic and geopolitical situations are different. Despite all the friendly ties with the French, we must keep in mind what is most important for us.

[Question] Are you under the impression that Federal Chancellor Schmidt views the priority problems of the Western alliance the way you do?

[Answer] I do not think so. I feel this is one of the areas where more than just different nuances arise in Mr Schmidt's and my assessments of the situation.

[Question] Do you feel that there are some differences of opinion over this issue in the government, between the chancellor and Foreign Minister Genscher?

[Answer] The government is actually composed only of differences; it is being held together only by the need to stay in power. I have taken careful note of the remarks made by Genscher and Schmidt, and I have the impression that there is a more nuanced opinion on the part of the former as well as on the part of the latter. [sentence as heard]

[Question] On several occasions you have defined your stand on the question of whether Chancellor Schmidt ought to meet with GDR State Council Chairman Honecker. My question is this: Considering the developments to date, do you still see any call for warning against a Schmidt-Honecker visit?

[Answer] To begin with it is necessary to touch on the question of timing. We have spoken of solidarity with our friends in the United States. People over there are looking very closely at their friends and partners, above all in Europe, and they definitely will notice whether the first visit by the German chancellor in this situation is to Washington with President Carter or to the GDR with Mr Honecker. Even if this timing has been coordinated with the Americans, as we are told, I am positive that some segments of the American people fail to understand the sequence of events chosen in this respect. Besides, it is my view that most citizens of the Federal Republic of Germany, too, fail to understand why the chancellor does not visit his most important friend and partner in this situation first.

As for the visit itself, I have always stated that I am all for such visits provided they have been properly prepared--I do not know about this; I have no information on this from the government--and provided something can be gained for the people in this divided country.

[Question] So you assume that the chancellor intends to go to the GDR prior to his visit with the U.S. President?

[Answer] I have no idea about his schedule. This is a question which I cannot answer.

CHABAN-DELMAS ISSUES STATEMENT ON CURTAILED USSR VISIT

LD281559 Paris LE FIGARO in French 24 Jan 80 pp 1,4 LD

[Philippe de Bausset report: "Chaban: My Place Was No Longer in Moscow"]

[Text] "Loyal to its alliance for peace, France has again to play a special role in preventing war and safeguarding essential interests." This is how National Assembly President Jacques Chaban-Delmas concluded the statement which he read to the press at Roissy-Charles de Gaulle Airport last night after deplaning from an Air France flight 269 plane which brought him back from Moscow.

Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Georgiy Korniyenko, who is coming officially to Paris in order to give the Quai d'Orsay "explanations" on the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, traveled on the same aircraft.

Immediately after his arrival at Roissy Mr Chaban-Delmas read the following statement in which he explained the reasons for deciding to cut short his 10-day visit to the USSR:

"My visit was planned a long time ago with a view to developing relations of detente and cooperation between France and the Soviet Union. These relations are a result of a policy of detente conceived by General De Gaulle more than 15 years ago which was implemented by him and has continued ever since. I decided to pay this visit despite a deterioration in the international situation because I believe that all possible efforts should be made to prevent any resumption of the cold war of the fifties with its mortal threats to all peoples and, first and foremost, our own people.

"My talks in Moscow, especially with Leonid Breshnev, have confirmed my view that all aspects of the international situation, including the Afghanistan affair, on which disagreement was noted, can and must be discussed in full knowledge of the facts, that is, in the light of the fullest possible explanations.

"In this light, the mission of Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Korniyenko is meaningful.

"Having arrived in Moscow bringing with me the hopes of some families of political prisoners, a sudden and resounding event made clear to me that it was not the appropriate time for such hopes. As a guest of the Soviet leaders I could not intervene in this public case without interfering in the internal affairs of the USSR.

"Nor, by remaining silent, could I put up with this graphic impression of a system which is certainly not like ours. My place at that time was no longer there, so I returned.

"I regret most of all missing the opportunity of going to Volgograd, formerly Stalingrad, to pay hommage to those Soviet soldiers, either dead or still living, who in the terrible winter of 1941-42 gave World War II a new and decisive turn by shattering the Nazi invaders.

"Leaving Moscow like this, 3 months after going to Washington, I assert that France, true to its alliances and as a messenger of peace, once more has a fitting role to play in averting war and safeguarding essential interests."

Those close to Mr Chaban-Delmas explain his decision as essentially personal and unconnected with government policy. He did not intend creating a diplomatic incident and his abrupt return has moreover not done so. The French Government retains its freedom of action and the Paris-Moscow diplomatic dialog continues. Mr Chaban-Delmas did not warn the president of his intention to cut short his Soviet trip and the French ambassador to Moscow did not take part in his decision.

Mr Chaban-Delmas stated yesterday evening that he would add no further comment to his statement in the near future. He added: "The key issue in this trip and my return is too important and serious for glamorization or improvisation..."

At the French Embassy in Moscow yesterday morning the president of the National Assembly received Mr Aleksandrov, president of the USSR Academy of Science; Mr Zagladin, deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee international section; Mr Shitikov, chairman of the Soviet of the Union and Mr Yuriy Zhukov, chairman of the Franco-Soviet Parliamentary Group.

He announced his intention to cancel his stay in the USSR to Mr Zhukov, before immediately making the following press statement:

"The announcement of measures taken against a famous physicist leads me to curtail my trip. As the guest of the Soviet leaders I cannot intervene in this matter without interfering in Soviet internal affairs. Nor as a matter of principle can I remain silent. Unable to speak or remain silent I feel personally obliged to return to France as soon as possible."

In Moscow, the decision of the president of the French National Assembly provoked a quite casual reaction from Mr Zhukov, to whom Mr Chaban-Delmas announced his sudden departure during a 7-minute discussion.

Mr Zhukov said: "Mr Chaban-Delmas is free to decide for himself. I believe he has accomplished the main thing: He has seen Mr Brezhnev and given him his message. That was his main task. The rest of the trip was just a holiday...."

Jacques Chaban-Delmas met with Leonid Brezhnev Tuesday morning in talks described in yesterday's PRAVDA as "sincere and friendly." In fact, Mr Chaban-Delmas repeated categorically to Mr Brezhnev that France considered the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan "unacceptable" without being aware at that time of Andrey Sakharov's arrest.

The president of the National Assembly was all the more shocked to learn of this immediately after, since he was expecting to plead the cause of dozens of Soviet dissidents in Moscow.

In Moscow yesterday morning the Soviet officials received at the French Embassy by Mr Chaban-Delmas were extremely surprised at his decision to leave the USSR. They clearly have not understood it. In fact, several insistently repeated to Chaban-Delmas: "But listen: Sakharov only got what he deserved. He was warned a thousand times. What is more, we could have put him in prison but did not. Sakharov has been deported from Moscow, that is all. He is free and, moreover, allowed to carry on working as a scientist."

STIRN REVIEWS VISIT TO SOUTH PACIFIC

[P. De B. report: "France Wants To Aid South Pacific Countries in Their Development"]

[Text] On his return Saturday, 19 January, from a trip to the South Pacific [Secretary of State to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs] Olivier Stirn warned the countries of the region against any threat of "interference" by foreign powers--mentioning the Soviet Union and China by name--which would be likely to "destabilize" this part of the world. This "interference" could be the result of countries giving support to minorities living in neighboring countries. In this connection the secretary of state for foreign affairs [as published] referred to the support given by Papua New Guinea to the Melanesian separatists in New Caledonia. Mr Uruguei, a New Caledonian separatist leader, recently visited Port Moresby, while another Melanesian leader, Mr Ukeiwe, who is vice president of the Noumea Government Council, is also planning to visit Papua New Guinea to explain the viewpoint of those who support the present Constitution.

Nonetheless Mr Stirn did not succeed in persuading the Port Moresby leaders--he had talks with Deputy Prime Minister Ebia Olewale--not to raise the question of New Caledonia at the UN Decolonization Committee meeting; France, he said, will regard any decision by that body as null and void.

France intends to increase trade with the two main powers in the region, Australia and New Zealand. [Industry Minister] Giraud is due to visit Australia in May and that will be followed by a visit by [Economy Minister] Monory before the end of the year. Australian Foreign Minister Andrew Peacock will be received in Paris in May. Co-operation between France and newly independent Pacific states will be increased. A doctor and a teacher will be sent to Tonga; an agreement worth Fr20 million is planned with Papua New Guinea; further grants will be given in the spheres of agriculture, fishing and education.

France, Mr Stirn concluded, wants to increase stability in this area and help its development. Questioned on the proposal made by Japan on the eve of Japanese Prime Minister Ohira's visit to Canberra and Wellington for cooperation in the Pacific basin in the economic and strategic spheres, Mr Stirn said he is pleased "to see the Pacific organizing its economic and political affairs.... If invited, France will take part in an economic organization."

LE FIGARO: AID PAKISTAN REGARDLESS OF INDIA

LD241645 [Editorial Report LD] Paris LE FIGARO in French on 18 January 1980, carries on pages 1 and 5 a Patrick Wajsman article advocating Western support for Pakistan. Some "idealists" find U.S. aid to General Zia "intolerable," but he is the equal of his "distinguished colleagues" in Tehran, Kabul and New Delhi Wajsman says. It is "too late" to worry about annoying India, since, Wajsman says, India is "expansionist," as shown by wars from 1948 to 1975. Fears of driving India into Russian arms do not bear analysis, since a Moscow-New Delhi "axis" already exists, through India's fear of China. Wajsman questions India's nonalinement, quoting support for Moscow-backed forces in Asia and Africa, and says that as Moscow's imperialist ambitions" drive Washington and Beijing closer together and so strengthen India's "stake" in the USSR. Wajsman quotes Mrs Gandhi to show that India would "look the other way" if the USSR invaded Pakistan. If the West did not aid Zia, it would lose a little more "trustworthiness and honor"; it has already gotten into that habit recently, Wajsman concludes.

MITTERRAND, ELLEINSTEIN JOINTLY CRITICIZE PCF

NC251750 Paris AFP in French 1740 GMT 25 Jan 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Jan. 25 (AFP)--French Socialist leader Francois Mitterrand and Communist historian Jean Elleinstein joined today in condemning the support of the French Communist Party--partner of the Socialists in the French left coalition--for the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. "It is shocking to see the Communist Party falling into step with the Soviet Union," Mr Mitterrand said, likening PCF Secretary General George Marchais to Gustav Husak, head of the Czechoslovak Communist Party since Aleksandr Dubcek resigned in 1969 following the Soviet intervention there.

Mr Mitterrand speculated that Mr Marchais had been "bitten by the contagious presidential bug, which leads him to commit his party to a savage fight with the Socialist Party." In the 1974 presidential run off election, the French Communist Party asked its members to vote for Mr Mitterrand.

In their assessment, Mr Mitterrand and Mr Elleinstein said the new French Communist position "is causing some unrest within the Communist Party." Mr Elleinstein, considered to be in a "public and political struggle" against Communist Party policies, denied he was planning for the time being to oppose Mr Marchais for the party's presidential nomination next year. Mr Elleinstein said the French left must respond to the challenge of the country's center-right majority government by proposing reforms adapted to the country's economic and social crises. In the Kremlin, the army was now imposing its views on leaders who were fleeing before them, he added.

Today's joint criticism of the PCF came a day after Mr Mitterrand accused Mr Marchais of lying during a television interview on Tuesday night, over a joint Soviet Communist and French Socialist communique in 1975. Mr Mitterrand insisted Mr Marchais had added passages of his own to the communique. In a reference to this week's exiling of Soviet physicist Andrey Sakharov from Moscow to Gorkiy, Mr Mitterrand said yesterday, "George Marchais doesn't have the means in France to send me to Gorkiy, but morally it's the same thing."

OLYMPIC OFFICIAL: ITALY WILL FALL IN WITH IOC PROPOSAL

[Text] Rome, January 29 (ANSA)--The president of Italy's Olympic Committee (CONI) Franco Carraro has announced here that CONI will fall in line whatever the International Olympic Committee's (IOC) proposes on the ventilated boycott of this summer's games in Moscow.

After meeting with Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga yesterday, and chairing a session of CONI's Executive Committee, Carraro told journalists that Cossiga had briefed him on the Rome government's position on the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and the situation of the Soviet dissidents. President Jimmy Carter called for the boycott in the wake of the Afghan crisis and pressures to desert the Moscow suportfest built up when dissident physicist Andrey Sakharov was banished from Moscow to Gorkiy.

According to Carraro, Cossiga also stressed that Italy is a free and democratic country and that its sports bodies have freedom of choice on the international level. "The concern is that the Moscow games will become a source of instrumentalization in one sense or another and that taking part will mean making political choices", Carraro said. "That's why we intend to follow IOC [word indistinct] to the very end". Carraro also noted that the Rome government would seek a solution through Italy's EEC partners, while CONI will be doing the same in contacts with EEC and non-EEC Olympic committees. A first step in this direction will be an informal meeting of these European Olympic committees in Frankfurt early in the coming month, he announced.

Justifying his own personal position, Carraro said his ideological convictions lead him to see sport "as a moment of unity, otherwise I don't think it would be useful." He said his second reason was (?practical) because, with all the latent tensions existing in the world today, taking a path other than the unitary path would not lead very far".

BERLINGUER URGES EC PARLIAMENT AWARENESS OF WORLD ROLE

LD251109 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 17 Jan 80 pp 1, 18 LD

["Text" of PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 16 January address to European Parliament: "Europe Must Make A Move"--first paragraph is L'UNITA introduction]

This debate of ours is taking place at a somber and grave moment in world life which poses for us, as representatives of our countries' peoples, the problem of whether or not we can develop a positive European policy and initiative in this acute crisis in international relations.

Our stance on the Afghan events is well known and quite clear. We immediately censured the Soviet military intervention, demanding that it end at once. We were motivated in this primarily by a principled position which has always made us condemn every violation of the peoples' right to national independence and the free choice of their own development.

Ever since the war, and in recent years, this right has frequently been trampled by the capitalist countries, the United States in particular. And our voice has always been raised in censure and condemnation. Certainly, not all the political forces represented in this assembly can claim as much. The fact that the intervention in Afghanistan was carried out by a socialist country led by a communist party does not make us stray from this consistent and principled line.

Our position has been especially marked inasmuch as the Soviet intervention took place in an international situation already laden with tensions (in the Persian Gulf, the Middle East, Southeast Asia and various areas of Africa and in East-West relations themselves), causing a further deterioration in this situation.

We are now faced with a gloomy picture fraught with danger.

The first worrying element is that not only are all disarmament negotiations now paralyzed but that the very ratification of agreements already reached, such as SALT II, is in question and a further quantitative and qualitative leap in the arms race is therefore taking place. Herein lies the grave error of the decision adopted in Brussels by the NATO Council. This situation would be different if the line that prevailed had been the line proposed by ourselves and other political forces and some European governments--namely, to postpone, at least for a while, any decision on producing and deploying the new U.S. missiles and at the same time asking the Soviet Union to halt production and deployment of the SS-20s, immediately afterward opening negotiations between the blocs for a verification of the real military balances in an attempt to establish them at a lower level.

But the most frightening aspect at the moment is the deterioration in the world political climate, the evaporation of even a minimum of mutual trust and, above all, the daily exacerbation of the confrontation and harsh conflict between the two major powers, with growing temptations to use or to threaten to use military force and with various other forms of economic and political pressure. It is as if we were witnessing an intensified militarization of politics and of political thinking itself.

Let us ask ourselves, therefore: Where is all this leading? Our answer is that the exacerbation of the conflict between the USSR and the United States can only mean the end of detente. But the end of detente in a world already rendered so unstable by an increasingly grave world economic crisis, by so many imbalances and sources of crisis and conflict, would now not only mean a return to the cold war, from which, morever, Europe would suffer damaging economic and political consequences, but would also create an imminent threat of a general conflagration. In fact in today's world there are no alternatives to detente.

So for us the choice is clear: We must reverse the present trend, and immediately halt the crescendo of acts of force in response to other acts of force, of action and reprisal. We must reopen the path of dialog and negotiation.

Some forces--major forces--are already speaking and can act in this direction. When we say this we are thinking primarily of the action of endless masses of ordinary people who want to live in peace, but we are also thinking of the initiative of the nonalined countries and of lofty spiritual authorities such as the Catholic Church.

And first and foremost we are thinking of the inalienable role which this Europe of ours can and must perform.

It is times like these which put to the test the Europeanist commitment which cannot be reduced to empty words but which must take the form of a sincere and real capability for autonomous initiative. By stating this need we are not proposing our countries' detachment from the alliance to which they belong. The problem is how to live and work within this alliance.

Do we want to accept passively all U.S. proposals and decisions? This, essentially, is the position of some West European political forces, some of which are now openly aiming at tension. Or do we want to remain in the alliance while asserting our right and duty to develop and assert a joint European stance which can withstand all pressures toward a further deterioration in international relations, and while promoting, instead, action aimed at detente and cooperation? This is our position and it seems to us that it is also the position of other forces--and not just socialist forces--which feel that Europe has an essential role to play in preventing the further widening of the gap which is dangerously opening up between the two major powers.

It is always clear to us that world peace depends to a decisive extent on the policy of the United States and the USSR and on their mutual relations. But it is also clear--as the facts show--that the current dynamic in Washington-Moscow relations, irrespective of their intentions, is not leading the world toward security, detente and a posture of coexistence and cooperation. To reverse this trend and to help induce the two major powers to perform their due roles positively, a specific European policy of moderation, wisdom and constructive initiative is not only useful but indispensable.

A specific European initiative is also essential to help resolve the tragic economic and social imbalances between North and South, which would become even more explosive if the present trend toward tension between the United States and the USSR, between East and West, continues. The imbalances, injustices, the suffering, the famine and the malnutrition affecting billions of people are the tragic legacy of centuries of colonialist domination and imperialist pillage. But now these peoples and countries no longer accept the impositions of the past and the inferiority of the present. In the final analysis, as chairman of our parliamentary group Giorgio Amendola said a few days ago, "Mankind can only save itself from the disasters which threaten it is it manages to find a new system of economic cooperation which will permit the rational exploitation of all the earth's resources, starting with its most valuable resource--its inhabitants' intelligence. The creation of this universal economic order presupposes disarmament and peace."

It is in these directions that European policy must move--promoting new disarmament initiatives, rejecting every form or temptation of neocolonialism and establishing with the Third World peoples and countries a system of relations based not merely on aid but also on equality and mutually advantageous cooperation. But we must also show that we understand that the cause of world peace and justice can no longer tolerate the privileges and wastage, the lifestyles and consumption models of the industrialized societies, which are insulting and offensive to and which prompt the legitimate reaction of great masses of people and entire continents. Of course, one cannot expect anything in this context from the most hermetic sector of the dominant bourgeois groups. But it must be added that even within the West European workers movement there is not yet sufficient awareness of the significance of the necessary transformations in the kind of development and lifestyles of the industrialized countries to create social systems based on both thrift and justice.

These tasks of social transformation and building a world free from every form of oppression and prevarication, a more equitable, freer and more secure world, are the inspiration for our activity and all our stances, for our policy of the unity of the working classes and of all democratic and peace-loving forces.

RADICALS TRY TO FILIBUSTER ANTITERRORIST MEASURES

AU290918 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 29 Jan 80 AU

[Text] Rome, January 29 (ANSA)--The Italian lower house moved into what promises to be a marathon filibuster debate in the early hours of this morning as the small, but vocal Radical Party tried to block approval of a government decree introducing a series of contested anti-terrorism measures.

The decision to keep Parliament open night and day was taken by an overwhelming majority yesterday evening. The decree will expire and be struck from the law books if it is not approved by February 14.

The Radicals have tabled a grand total of 7,500 amendments to the measures and are now hoping to talk them out of court. But yesterday evening, Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga's Cabinet tied a confidence motion to the debate, which gave the other parties a chance to make the Radicals' task as difficult as possible. The Radicals have only eighteen lower house deputies.

The house's Rules Committee decided unanimously that, in order to illustrate the amendments, each deputy will be allowed to speak only once in the whole debate, even though there will be no time-limit. This means that, if deputies from no other party want their say, each Radical M.P. will have to speak for something over twenty-two hours without stopping.

This interpretation of the parliamentary rules only applies if the government raises the confidence issue before a debate on proposed amendments of pending legislation, as was the case last night after the reply of Justice Minister Tommaso Morlini.

Cossiga made it clear that the question of confidence was not being raised as regards the whole of the government's action, but only to push thorough measures it saw as vital for dealing with the law-and-order situation.

The most disputed part of the decrees is an extension of pre-trial detention to twelve years [as received], an extension of police powers of detention without calling in the suspect's lawyer, and the right to search whole blocks of buildings with no specific search warrant merely on the suspicion that a terrorist may be in hiding there.

Other measures include the life sentence for graver terrorist associations.

Also before the house is a draft bill of antiterrorist measures, but this will remain on the agenda without time-limit until the assembly finds time to discuss it.

Government decrees are operative from the moment of their promulgation by the Cabinet and publication in the official gazatte, but must receive parliamentary approval within sixty days.

LIBYAN OFFICIAL GIVES PRESS CONFERENCE IN MADRID

LD290050 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 28 Jan 80 LD

Among other things, Mr Shahati said that his country is prepared to double its sales of oil to Spain provided Madrid remains firm in its present policy of support for the Palestine cause and does not establish relations with Israel. If Madrid establishes formal relations with the Jewish state, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah would rethink all its relations with Spain. For the Libyan secretary for foreign relations, the Palestine problem would start to be solved if the Western countries would agree that all the Jews born outside Israel should return to the nations where they had their roots before the creation of the Jewish state. This historical return would, according to Mr Shahati, be possible if it were not for the fact that there is such strong racism in the West that prevents Jewish integration in their countries of origin and forces the Jews to look for a land in which to establish themselves.

Answering journalists' questions, the Libyan politician said that his country does not have relations with ETA, and anyway the Basque problem is a Spanish internal problem. As for the IRA, the Irish Republican Army, Libya stopped giving it aid when talks began between that organization and the London government. As for the Western Sahara, Mr Shahati said that Spain became closer to the Arab countries when Madrid recognized that the Saharan territory was an Arab territory and left that country. But, he added, Spain should continue to support the POLISARIO Front as any other liberation movement, until the Saharans fully achieve their self-determination.

He also said that the Libyan Jamahiriyah is a state which is alined neither with the powers of the East or the West, and the Libyans want to take part in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in order to support the withdrawal of the superpowers from the Mediterranean. And Tripoli would completely oppose those who accept the Camp David agreements as a way of solving the Palestine problem, even the PLO if it ever should happen that Yasir 'Arafat himself were to agree to join the initiatives of the agreements between As-Sadat, Begin and Carter.

NEW BASQUE PARTY HOLDS CONGRESS, ELECTS PRESIDENT

[Text] (Goyomon Real) was elected president of the Basque party Euskadiko Sozialistak Elkartza Indarra [ESEI] at the end of its first congress in San Sebastian, during which the party declared itself as socialist, democratic, class, Marxist and internationalist party. In a statement to the EUROPA press agency, (Goyomon Real) said that the autonomy process has only begun. The statute, he said, is a container for power into which this power should be poured. The commitment to put this power into the statute is not being fulfilled by the Union of the Democratic Center (UCD) since what the party gives with one hand, via the autonomy statute, it takes away with the other by means of organic laws. This, (Goyomon Real) said is creating a delicate situation which will become noticeable in the next few months.

As for violence, he said at the ESEI congress that we made our opinion on violence known quite categorically. There are no signs that it will subside in the next few months and this is unfortunate for the Basque Country. We can only hope that the parties concerned reconsider their positions, since it is a very serious subject which should be studied deeply by all those who have responsibility in the Basque regions. In his statement (Goyomon Real) concluded that the democratization of the Basque Country will come through autonomy and this democratization will proceed without violence.

BASQUE SOCIALIST INTERVIEWED ON UPCOMING ELECTIONS

[Excerpts] As we reported in earlier news bulletins, the meeting held this weekend by the National Committee of the Euskaoi Socialist Party to analyze the present situation and finalize the lists for the forthcoming elections to the Basque Parliament ended early this afternoon in the capital of Alava [Vitoria]. The political declaration consists of three basic themes. The first refers to the freezing of the activity of the Basque General Council. Mr Benegas, what can you tell us about this?

[Begin recording] Yes, indeed. The National Committee has ended its meeting after drafting the government program of the Socialist Party and its lists of candidates for the Basque Parliament. It ended about an hour ago, with the issuance of a political declaration on the present situation in the Basque Country. The first point of the declaration touches on the crisis in the Basque General Council. The National Committee has just reaffirmed the positions upheld by the Executive Committee of Euskadi, while it understands that it is a grave political error to freeze the activity of the General Council of the Basque Country by the party representing the majority as it is the only democratic organ representative of the situation in the Basque Country and there are urgent questions to be dealt with.

So, the National Committee has demanded that the Executive Committee continue to bring up the subject of an urgent meeting of the General Council of the Basque Country and maintains its view that this body cannot be frozen.

[Question] Another topic referred to in the political declaration is the creation of a Front for the Defense of Democracy. What are the basic points of this resolution?

[Answer] Well, the National Committee has issued a very long communique on this question. In the first place, it rejects any accusation of electioneering on a subject that is a common problem for all democratic parties in Euskadi--the problem of terrorism. For 6 months we have been raising this subject. And there have not been any elections in the Basque Country for 6 months. According to the National Committee the basic objectives of the Front for the Defense of Democracy are:

To be a clear point of reference for a frightened people who could regain hope and act more determinedly against terrorism;

To act as a coordinating body for the political parties in the face of any terrorist attack by coordinating and organizing appropriate responses;

To operate as a factor for mobilizing and raising the consciousness of the people against terrorism;

To work and fight, in a coordinated manner, against the practice of a revolutionary tax; and

To study the problems of public order and civilian security, to set in motion the mixed junta on public order provided for in the statute of autonomy, and to take the necessary steps to set up the autonomous police.

And, finally, if this can be achieved, and if the political parties reach agreement on these subjects, other sectors of society will have to be incorporated into this front--the most representative trade unions and management organizations, institutions, associations and so on. This is in essence the National Committee resolution passed on the subject.

[Question] Mr Benegas, in light of the way the lists are shaping up, what chances does the Socialist Party of Euskadi have in the elections to the Basque Parliament on 9 March?

[Answer] Well, we hope to improve on the results of the 1 March 1979 general elections, and, in any case, to become the second force in the Basque Country once and for all. And we will try to improve our position to the maximum. It is still too early to hazard a guess at the future composition of the Basque Parliament. But I think that it will be complex, and the Basque Nationalist Party will not get the absolute majority necessary for it to govern alone. And the Socialist Party will do well enough so that all the socialist points ir our program will get a good hearing among the people. [end recording]

NEW TERRORIST GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR SHOOTING

LD282111 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 28 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Two civil guards were not hit when they came under fire early this morning in the Port of Barcelona, capital of Catalonia. The shots fired at the civil guards came from a car that immediately left the area.

A note received by the EUROPA press agency claims responsibility for an attack, which police say must be this one. The claim came from a group which calls itself the Catalonian Resistance for the National Liberation of Catalonia [Resistencia Catalana de Liberacion Nacional de los Paises Catalanes], of which nothing had been heard up to now.

The communique says that the action was carried out in response to the death last year of separatist (Martin Marco Ibardeles). Further on, the communique warns the Spanish Government that every killing by what it calls fascist occupation forces will be answered by what it called the "three for one" campaign. The communique ends with a call for the union of all revolutionary and separatist forces.

JORGENSEN, NORDLI DISCUSS SOVIET ACTIONS, DETENTE

ID291045 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 23 Jan 80 pp 24-25 ID

[Hans E. Struckmann 22 January interview with Norwegian Prime Minister Nordli and Danish Prime Minister Jorgensen in Roskilde, Denmark: "The Soviets Are Lying, We Have Not Carried Out a Military Buildup in North Norway"]

[Excerpt] Norway and Denmark will do all they can for world detente and so for the present will not join a boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow. The Soviet newspaper PRAVDA is wrong to write that Norway has built up its defenses in northern Norway near the border with the Soviet Union.

These and many other points emerged from an AKTUELT interview with Norwegian Prime Minister Odvar Nordli and his Danish counterpart Anker Jorgensen.

The Norwegian prime minister is paying an unofficial visit to Anker Jorgensen and yesterday afternoon Odvar Nordli spoke about Europe today at the Roskilde Workers College.

Concerning the situation in the Soviet Union the Norwegian prime minister had this to say:

"There has been as easing of the harsh political climate in the Soviet Union since Stalin died. But it is still possible to regret that the development of personal and political freedom has not proceeded more forcefully. Sometimes we are simply frightened by relapses when political domination again makes headway in the Soviet Union.

Wrong Allegations

"We are all depressed by last month's dramatic development in Afghanistan, where there was a regular military invasion with the political aim of creating political domination in an independent country."

Nordli continued:

"This is a warning to everybody in Europe that there is still a long way to go before real detente and peaceful relations [forhold] are achieved in the European context."

[Struckmann] Pravda said that Norway is building up its military forces in northern Norway.

[Nordli] It is making incorrect allegations. In northern Norway we have not gone further than we ever have done. We have not reinforced in any way and there have been no incidents of any kind. There has been nothing like what was written in PRAVDA.

Favors Detente

Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen broke in:

"It is still the Norwegian and Danish view that we should do everthing we can to achieve world detente. That has always been our policy and it still is. I think Nordli will agree with me on this?"

[Nordli] I completely agree with Anker here. We want detente. It is the only solution to problems. The solution to problems is through negotiation.

[Jorgensen] We want to stick with detente and not contribute to the cold war. I was in Austria recently and had talks with Chancellor Kreisky.

He voiced exactly the same ideas. This is interesting because Austria, unlike Norway and Denmark, has the distinction of not being a member of NATO--nevertheless, we have the same view of the situation.

[Struckmann] If Norway and Denmark reject a boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow, is this in consideration of detente?

[Nordli] We are very skeptical about whether a government should put pressure on sportsmen. We hold a relaxed view of the relationship between sport and politics, although we also know that they are unavoidably linked.

At the present time we will not join in a boycott. We will wait a while and consult with our friends, particularly Denmark and Sweden.

Dissociate

[Jorgensen] We dissociate ourselves from the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan but we do not believe that a boycott of the Olympics in Moscow is the right answer. We still seek detente and we do not want to burn all our bridges. We hope this will be sensibly resolved through negotiation. It is the only practicable way, in my opinion.

[Struckmann] Norway and Denmark both participated in the nuclear arms debate. Has there been any change in the two governments' attitudes?

[Jorgensen] It is still the Danish and Norwegian view that we do not want to change our nuclear policy. We do not want nuclear arms on Norwegian or Danish territory.

[Nordli] I completely agree with that view. Our attitudes are unchanged.

DEFENSE SPENDING--The Ministry of Defense has decided on the distribution of the grants for the basic purchases of the defense forces this year. Of an allocation of almost Fmk500 million earmarked for this year, most--Fmk295 million--goes for the payments of the antiaircraft missiles and MiG-21bis aircraft bought from the Soviet Union. For the arms purchases Finland obtained a credit of about Fmk300 million from the Soviet Union in 1978. The next biggest sum will be used by the defense forces this year for the purchase of a low-altitude radar control system and of weapons for coastal defense and infantry. NORWAY

AFTENPOSTEN VIEWS FOREIGN MINISTRY AIDE'S POLISH VISIT

LD241155 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 17 Jan 80 p 9 LD

[Morten Fyhn report: "Important Holst Visit to Poland"]

Holst's visit was arranged long ago but it now acquires much additional interest because it is the first meeting to take place between high-ranking representatives of a NATO country and a member of the Warsaw Pact after the events of Afghanistan. Holst traveled direct to Poland from Brussels where he participated in talks on Western reactions to the march into Afghanistan. So it is expected that Holst will receive first hand information on how that was received and on how the Poles now assess the prospects for detente in Europe--not only since Afghanistan but also since NATO's decision before Christmas to deploy new nuclear weapons in Central Europe.

The Polish visit is taking place within the framework of the ongoing consultations Norway has in the runup to the meeting scheduled for Madrid later in the year which is to further the work of cooperation and security in Europe after the earlier meetings in Helsinki and Belgrade.

Traditionally, Norway has had good, close relations with Poland and both countries have shown much interest in giving impetus to the work of implementing the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act. Poland has kept a relatively low profile since the Soviet action in Afghanistan and has avoided defending it in the way that the GDR has, for example.

Because of major and serious domestic policy problems, primarily in the economy, Poland is in such an exposed position that the country, for the sake of its own interests, will attach great emphasis to preventing the East-West climate in Europe from cooling to the extent that detente suffers a setback. Norway, for its part, attaches great importance to agreeing with the Warsaw Pact countries on the so-called confidence-building measures and, most of all, on improving the measures pertaining to the mutual notification of military exercises. This point will be raised by Holst during the talks.

PARLIAMENT DEBATES RELATIONS WITH USSR

[Text] The prime minister today denounced Russia for revealing "a brutal disregard for accepted rules of international behavior" and said the invasion of Afghanistan was "a symbol and a warning." Opening a Commons debate on East-West relations and Southwest As'a Mrs Thatcher said the invasion and the internal exile of Professor Sakharov left "no room for illusion" about Russia's interpretation of detente.

On Britain's response she told MPs: "We shall be reviewing our aid plans for Pakistan. We and our partners will do what is in our power to improve stability in the Gulf and to reassure our other friends in the Arabian Peninsula. We are developing our relations with China. We shall develop co-operation with our Turkish ally."

Mrs Thatcher said Afghanistan was not just a far distant country which could be ignored because we faced no local crisis in Europe. "This is not the first time that the Russians have used force to invade a neighbour, used it massively, swiftly and callously in a pattern that bears the Soviet hallmark." But it was the first time since the Second World War that they had sent tens of thousands of soldiers, backed by tanks and helicopter gunships, into a country outside the Warsaw Pact.

The people fighting against the invaders were not rebels, she argued, but "genuine freedom fighters." And Mrs Thatcher warned that the Soviet invasion meant that Russia had vastly extended its borders with Iran, acquired a border with Pakistan, and had advanced within 300 miles of the Straits of Hormuz which control the Persian Gulf.

Mrs Thatcher said: "For the Russians, 'detente' has meant the preservation of their own security at the same time as they enjoyed access to Western foodstuffs and technology on easy terms, and the chance to extend, by overt and covert means, their influence and political control wherever opportunity offered." The Soviets had "meddled in our affairs" while angrily rejecting the thought that they should conduct their domestic affairs in a civilized and democratic manner.

On the U.S. Embassy hostages in Iran, Mrs Thatcher was firm: "The hostages must be released." The British Government "admired and applauded the restraint President Carter has shown in pursuit of this goal."

The prime minister warned: "The Russians would be only too willing to pose as protectors of the Iranian Revolution, or as the restorers of order in the country. We shall want both to avoid giving them any opportunity to do so and to make clear the consequences if they tried."

On the Gulf states, Mrs Thatcher said: "The oil they produce is the life blood of Western industrial societies: The Straits are the artery through which it flows. If that flow were abruptly stopped in the years immediately ahead there would be real doubt whether our societies could survive in their present form." Mrs Thatcher went on: "Of course, we cannot prove that the Soviet invasion is part of a deliberate drive to the Gulf." But she added: "To some, at least, the implications of their presence in Afghanistan are clear."

Mrs Thatcher said: We must bring home to the Russians how badly they under-estimated the cost to themselves of the invasion and how serious would be the consequences should they try the same thing again. Russia's claim to be a champion of the developing world had been "shattered."

Mrs Thatcher recalled the measures the government proposed to take against the Soviet Union--cutting back on political and official contacts, cancelling military exchanges, refusing the renewal of the Anglo-Soviet credit agreement and tightening the rules governing the supply of high technology.

On the Olympics, she said the Soviet Government hoped, as the Nazis did in 1936, that the games would give an immense boost to the state's prestige. To attend the games now would be to "give aid and encouragement to the Soviet Government in the immediate aftermath of their invasion of an independent country and their arrest and exile of one of the country's most distinguished citizens."

Mrs Thatcher sympathised with the athletes who had trained so hard and long. But she quoted runner Sebastion Coe who had said: "Athletes cannot have their heads in the sand. They cannot say 'I am a runner and, while I sympathize with the people of Afghanistan, that is not my problem!'"

"The solution is to move the games to a place or places where politics do not predominate," she said. The chairman of the British Olympic Association had agreed to propose this to the International Olympic Committee.

But the business of East-West relations had to go on. Britain did not propose to abandon arms control negotiations. Though recent events "once more call Soviet good faith into question," she hoped the SALT II treaty would be ratified in due course.

Britain would still try to get negotiations with the Soviet Union about theatre nuclear forces in Europe, carry on negotiations for a comprehensive test ban and on mutual and balanced force reductions. But she warned the Russians that "so long as they go on trying to defeat the West by all means short of war, we shall do whatever is necessary to counter their policies. "We shall strengthen our relations with the whole non-communist world. We shall look to our defences. If we are vigilant and steadfast, our democratic values will outlast the sterile dictatorship and the spurious theories of Soviet Marxism."

Opposition leader Mr James Callaghan said the Russian invasion demonstrated that Russia was prepared to move "swiftly, ruthlessly and powerfully" in the furtherance of her own interests. "The Soviet Union has brought down on herself the condemnation of the overwhelming majority of members of the United Nations in an almost unprecedented manner," Mr Callaghan said. He said the invasion had strengthened China's relationship with the United States, brought economic aid for the Government of Pakistan, united rival groups within Afghanistan, undermined the position of the Cubans and brought "restrained but firm" action from the Americans.

Mr Callaghan said President Brezhnev's decision had "made the world a more dangerous place." It had placed the "shadow of the Soviet Union" over countries from Turkey to Pakistan and they could not be blamed for wanting to increase their military strength, Mr Callaghan said.

Unless the Soviet Union accepted that the West's economic interests depended on continuing supplies of oil there would be "growing tension" in the Middle East and no basis for understanding between Russia and the West, Mr Callaghan added. But he backed the Russian criticism of the U.S. for not signing the SALT 2 agreement. "It would provide confidence that would lead on to fresh negotiations between the two superpowers," Mr Callaghan said.

His criticism also extended to Mr Brezhnev, however, for using the recent NATO decision to modernize its theatre nuclear weapons as a reason for refusing to negotiate on the withdrawal of nuclear weapons.

Russia was itself responsible for altering the balance of forces in recent years, Mr Callaghan claimed.

"There is a need for urgent discussion to control proliferation of nuclear weapons to the nations that don't have them," said Mr Callaghan.

He also urged that strenuous efforts were made to take in hand the work on development of nuclear technology in Middle East countries.

"It is necessary to secure their cooperation if we are to have new and effective agreements," Mr Callaghan said.

To an intervention from Salford East Labour MP Mr Frank Allaun, that the measures Mrs Thatcher had proposed would create an "unbridgeable gap" between East and West, Mr Callaghan said: "We are not out to punish people, but to secure peace in the world, where we can live in justice."

He said he hoped that there would be a summit of the world's seven major industrial nations later this year. The summit of industrial nations in 1978 in Bonn had proved "most effective" and benefitted the world, he added.

Lord Cranborne (C [conservative] Dorset South) then intervened to ask Mr Callaghan whether he had "abandoned all hope of taking short term remedies to encourage the Soviet Union to withdraw from Afghanistan".

Mr Callaghan replied: "I don't abandon all hope, but I must say realistically the prospects are not very good of them getting out. The moves of the United States Government are valuable in showing the Soviet Union that our attitude will not quickly and quietly die away.

"We must be ready, in due course, for discussion with the Soviet Union about the prospect of constructing a new set of understandings and relations. The time for that is not yet, but it must come soon, or the situation will deteriorate and eventually drift to war," Mr Callaghan said.

FOREIGN MINISTER RETURNS FROM OFFICIAL VISIT TO SPAIN

AT251320 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0500 GMT 25 Jan 80 AT

[Text] Foreign Minister Rallis returned from Madrid last night where he paid an official 3-day visit. Rallis said that he has invited his Spanish counterpart, Oreja, to pay an official visit to Greece and it is envisioned that the Spanish minister will visit in the spring.

During his official 3-day visit to the Spanish capital, Rallis had political talks with Spanish Prime Minister Suarez, Foreign Minister Oreja and Minister for Relations with the EEC Calvo Sotelo.

Meanwhile, yesterday's newspapers in Madrid published a lengthy report on the Greek minister's visit, stressing that during Rallis' talk with Spanish Prime Minister Suarez it was ascertained that the two countries see eye to eye on principal international issues.

EL PAIS Interview

LD251617 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 22 Jan 80 p 6 LD

[Pablo Sebastian interview with Greek Foreign Minister Yeoryios Rallis: "Tension in Central Asia Poses Further Difficulty for Madrid Conference"; date, place not given]

[Text] Question: What is the condition of and prospects for a Spanish-Greek dialog?

Answer: Relations between Greece and Spain are evolving satisfactorily, particularly from the political viewpoint since the reestablishment of democracy in both countries. The two countries' cultural past and shared interests in the Mediterranean area facilitate this dialog. Also, the fact that both countries are moving toward the EEC will help to strengthen the existing ties, not only in the political field but also in the economic and trade field. At present there are no problems in Madrid-Athens relations, only favorable prospects for cooperation.

Question: Is there any possibility for immediate cooperation in the process of Spain's EEC entry?

Answer: Greece supports Spain's EEC membership. We believe that European unification cannot be complete without Spain and that this country's membership will help to consolidate democracy in the Mediterranean. On 1 January 1981 Greece will become the 10th EEC country, and from that position it will contribute to Spain's entry, though it will also defend its own interests within the EEC.

Question: What is Athens' position with regard to the Madrid CSCE conference?

Answer: In our opinion, the essential objectives of the conference should be to strengthen and consolidate the spirit of detente. Efforts in this direction must not be restricted to purely military aspects but must embrace other areas of human relations, such as cultural contacts, the free circulation of ideas and information, and so forth. Furthermore, the conference must objectively analyze the degree to which participant states are implementing the principles of the Helsinki Final Act, learning from the experience gained at the Belgrade conference. The climate of tension created by events in Central Asia poses a further difficulty for the Madrid conference. We hope that, with everyone's efforts, we will manage to reestablish confidence in Europe--at least, this is what Greece will try to do.

Question: What is the condition of the Greek-Turkish crisis over Cyprus?

Answer: We believe that the problem was caused by the occupation of 40 percent of Cypriot territory by a foreign power, which created a major focal point of danger to peace in the Mediterranean and Europe. Greece opposes the use of force and the violation of the Republic of Cyprus' territorial integrity and independence from outside or by any other state. We are in favor of resolving the problem on the basis of the UN resolutions and negotiations among the sides concerned. We regret the fact that hitherto negotiations between the island's communities have yielded no result, despite the efforts of the Greek Cypriot side. Greece wants the UN secretary general to take an initiative to help reestablish the dialog between the communities in the quest for a just and lasting solution to the problem.

"In favor of Strengtheing NATO"

Question: How do you view Spain's possible entry into NATO?

Answer: Greece considers the Atlantic alliance a purely defensive political and military organization. Our country is in favor of all initiatives aimed at strengthening its members' defense capability and the security of a friendly country.

Question: Will there be any rivalry within the EEC between Spain and Greece with regard to agricultural issues and the free circulation of workers?

Answer: The high level of production of two or three agricultural products in Spain and Greece must not lead us to the conclusion that our agricultures conflict. On the contrary, the two countries' agricultural structures could lead us to carry out fruitful cooperation within the EEC. Certain sectors will have to be restructured and rationalized, but we believe that all this will be possible within the framework of a spirit of solidarity between the two countries. In the labor sector, there are no major problems, since we have a low level of unemployment. Furthermore, the EEC has set Greece a 7-year transition period.

Question: What is the state of our trade exchanges?

Answer: From 1975 through 1978 Spain's exports to Greece increased 70 percent to a level of $158 million. There is a $67 million trade deficit in Spain's favor. We hope to restore the balance through sales of Greek goods such as minerals, hides and cotton.

EEC MINISTER RETURNS TO ATHENS FOLLOWING BRUSSELS TALKS

AT261352 Athens NEWS in English 26 Jan 80 p 1 AT

[Text] The Greek minister for the EEC, Mr. Y. Kondoyioryis, left Brussels yesterday, returning to Athens after what are described as very fruitful discussions with members of the European committee. "The Community is functioning with Greece as its 10th member" said Mr Kondoyioryis and he repeated previous statements that all the services which have had contact and co-operation with the Greek delegation have said that Greece has taken her place now in the European Community.

The Greek minister continued by reminding his listeners that the spring will see Greece participating in many of the Community's committees and in October the permanent Greek representative for the EEC, Ambassador K. Oikonomidhis, will take his seat on the permanent representative's council.

Mr Kondoyioryis explained that financing for the education and workers' training program would be made available from the common fund. The precise program will be submitted in October.

In the matter of energy, the minister confirmed that Greece is "in step" with the other Community members and close attention had been given to EEC and on the development of domestic sources to reduce imports of fuel.

Finally, Mr Kondoyioryis announced that, during 1980, measures will be taken to improve the situation regarding Greek textiles.

At the conclusion of his visit to Brussels, Mr Kondoyioryis accepted an invitation from the Dutch foreign minister, Mr Van der Klaauw to visit The Hague, probably at the end of February.

CP'S ADOPT RESOLUTIONS ON INTERNATIONAL CRISIS

KKE (Ext) Resolution

AT271650 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 27 Jan 80 p 3 AT

[Resolution of the KKE Central Committee plenum on current developments; date not given]

[Text] 1--A sudden deterioration of the international situation occurred recently. For some time now NATO and U.S. imperialists, in their effort to stop promotion of progressive changes in the world, started supporting an increasingly hostile position toward detente. They pursue a policy of intensifying the armaments race and cultivate a militarist psychosis. [paragraph continues]

This policy, which increases the danger of war, was expressed through a series of cold war measures such as a huge increase in NATO's military expenditures, establishment of new U.S. military bases in the Middle East and the Indian Ocean, NATO's decision to install cruise and Pershing-2 missiles in West European countries, "freezing" of the SALT II agreement and creation of the U.S. "immediate intervention" force.

By expanding this policy to a dangerous degree and by using Afghan developments as an excuse for returning to the cold war, they commenced an unprecedented anti-Soviet propaganda campaign during the end of 1979. This campaign is accompanied by ever increasing cold war activities and measures. At the same time they attempt to establish a new anti-Soviet coalition with the particiaption of China, the leaders of which have openly proceeded toward military cooperation with U.S. militarists against existential socialism and against all the revolutionary forces of our times.

Propaganda Is Being Proved Wrong

Imperialist propaganda presents Soviet Union assistance to Afghanistan as an intervention which threatens peace. This is argued by those whose very history is full of war and interventions such as that in our own country, in Vietnam and in numberless other countries. They are the ones who since World War II girded the globe with bases. The very history of imperialism deprives it of the right to make such accusations. This right is also taken away by the fact that it is imperialism which today attempts to return humanity to the era of the cold war.

Imperialist allegations about Soviet assistance are actually denied by the developments which are now taking place in Afghanistan. It is the imperialists and their Chinese allies who were attempting an intervention in this country in an effort to reinstate the feudal reactionary regime and in order to turn Afghanistan into a war bridgehead against the USSR. The advance of a limited military USSR force to Afghanistan was undertaken on the request of the country's legal government on the basis of the 1978 Soviet-Afghan agreement. This is a form of international assistance to the people of Afghanistan to help them oppose the imperialist intervention and to protect their revolutionary conquests. Together with this it also strengthens peace in the area.

2--The above anti-Soviet campaign in our country is being supported by the reactionary forces, by their press, the state radio and television services. The leaders of the so-called KKE (Interior) in cooperation with various Maoist and anarchist-leftists groups, insistently present the same arguments used by the imperialist reactionary forces.

They even organize special meetings on Afghanistan. In this way and through such activities these revisionists help the struggle of imperialism against the people of Afghanistan, against existential socialism and against peace and in this way they also harm the interests of our people.

3--The KKE expresses its solidarity with the Afghan people who, under the leadership of their People's Democratic Party and with the unselfish internationalist assistance of the USSR, fight against the feudal reactionary regime and the imperialist intervention for the defense of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of their country, for the defense and expansion of the conquests of the April Revolution.

The Peoples Have the Strength

4--The progress of international imperialism, headed by the United States, toward cold war affects the vital interests of the peoples of the world and endangers their very existence. [paragraph continues]

History, however, demonstrates that no matter how dangerous imperialism may yet be it no longer has the strength to bend the will of the peoples of the world. Through their struggle the people of the world have the strength to frustrate these imperialist cold war plans and to defend the policy of detente and peace, which responds to their own interests. The KKE calls upon the Greek people to contribute toward this struggle with all their strength.

5--Within the framework of their more general campaign against detente and peace the U.S.-NATO imperialists and their Chinese allies are also methodically attempting to revive cold war tension in the Balkans. Using the health of Marshal Tito as an excuse they are attempting to revive the myth of the "Soviet threat," to cultivate a climate of confrontation among Balkan countries and to indirectly intervene for establishment of an anti-Soviet Balkan axis.

The KKE, by stressing the serious dangers stemming from such an imperialist intervention, calls for a struggle against such an imposition and for the defense and development of peaceful coexistence and cooperation in the Balkans.

The Greek Government, being faithful to its dogma of "we belong to the West," supports this anti-Soviet cold war campaign thus harming national interests and the interests of international peace.

At the same time the Greek Government promotes negotiations for our country's return to NATO's military wing under pressure from the U.S.-NATO imperialists who demand that this calamitous return take place immediately and without conditions, so that our country may actively join the anti-Soviet bloc and place its territory under the service of their war adventurism, for the operations they plan against the people of Iran and other peoples of the Near and Middle East.

It is obvious that such a policy fosters a serious threat to the country's independence and sovereignty, that it directly harms our peoples' interests exposing them to terrible dangers. This obliges our people to refuse to cooperate, to demand from the Greek Government to reject the above mentioned U.S. and NATO pressures, not to participate in the cold war measures and "reprisals" of Carter, to struggle for preventing installation of U.S. missiles in Europe and in Greece, for full Greek withdrawal from NATO and full removal of U.S.-NATO bases from its territory, for implementation of an independent peaceful foreign policy.

The Communists are called upon to pioneer in the development of such a struggle by informing the peoples masses, using all available means, about the threatening dangers.

The "New Democracy Policy"

6--Over the same period there has been a deterioration of the internal situation. First of all this is due to the policy of the ruling party as well as to international influences.

The progress of the country's economy deteriorated primarily due to high prices which have already taken unprecedented dimensions and which increase daily. At the same time there has also been an increase in unemployment. The "New Democracy" government is primarily resposible for the deterioration of the worker's life and for the difficulties of small and medium business, as a result of its plutocratic policy of one-sided austerity for the people and its favoritism toward the monopolies. This is a policy which will lead to further deterioration as a result of our accession to the EEC.

In its effort to cope with the peoples' struggle against its policy and exploiting the international situation the government cuts down trade union and democratic liberties, adopts additional authoritarian measures. At the same time and thanks to the freedom it has given to the royalist-junta apparatus it assists the different forces of anomaly to climax their plans for undermining democracy. The recent murder of two policemen is an act of provocation by sinister forces both overseas and at home. It is aimed at creating a climate favorable for antidemocratic action and is primarily directed against the left wing and the labor and democratic movement.

The Real Problem

Thus the struggle against the anti-Soviet cold war campaign and for the defense of peace, the struggle for the safeguarding and development of democratic freedoms of the Greek people and the struggle for the protection of the living standard of the people are objectively interconnected and must be conducted with coordination.

The problem facing the people is not whether the prime minister will pass on to the presidency or whether elections will be held sooner or later. The efforts of certain circles to convince the people that this is where the real problem lies are only aimed at diverting the workers' attention from their struggle for their demands, which is the only way toward their solution.

The problem is that "New Democracy's" policy has failed and that at these difficult moments the country requires a different policy, a policy of national independence, peace, democratization and true caring for the people. This must be a policy which will rid the people and the country of U.S.-NATO bases, for the country's full withdrawal from NATO, its detachment from the EEC, for equal cooperation with all peoples and nations irrespective of social systems. Consequently, the real problem is how the objective factor that will enforce this different policy is to develop. This other factor is none other than the unity and the struggle of the anti-imperialist democratic forces. It is in this direction that the KKE will work with increased strength.

Front Against High Prices

The basic front of the united struggle of the peoples masses at this very moment is the front against high prices and for the protection of their deteriorating living standard.

The KKE calls upon the working people to demand, with a fighting spirit and with unity, that the government adopt immediate measures against high prices; that it stops increasing the price of bread, milk, meat, cheese and other basic food items; that it stops increases in the cost of electricity, mass transportation and other utility services; that it stops the mounting increases in rents and prohibits evictions; that it decrease indirect taxation on basic consumer goods and take measures against profiteers; that it continues with the system of subsidies which it abolished on EEC recommendations; that it abolish tax exemptions and other subsidies to the monopolies.

In conjunction with the struggle for the above demands which affect all the workers, the working class must struggle for adoption of the system of automatic adjustment of salaries, wages and pensions based upon the cost of living index. The farmers must struggle for the adjustment of prices for agrarian goods on the basis of the cost of production and the cost of living index; for tripling agrarian pensions; for measures against the middleman's profiteering and for cheap cultivation tools and agricultural supplies. The professional artesans will increase their struggle for control of prices of industrial and exportable products; for protection of professional premises; for decreased taxation and for solution of their other demands. Other working classes will do the same.

The Central Committee calls upon the leading members, members and followers of the party to develop initiative action for the success of the struggle against high prices and the policy of one-sided austerity.

KKE (Interior) Resolution

AT271815 Athens I AVYI in Greek 27 Jan 80 pp 1, 9 AT

[Resolution adopted by the Central Committee of the KKE (Interior) on the international situation at its meeting on 21 January]

[Text] The following resolution was approved by the Central Committee of the KKE (Interior) at its meeting on 21 January 1980:

We are faced with an exceedingly serious and dangerous crisis. On the international horizon and particularly in U.S.-USSR relations there is an amassing of elements which undermine detente and the agreements on disarmament. They also threaten to disrupt the positive progress in international relations established after many years of struggles by the peoples, by the progressive and peace-loving forces of the entire world. Thus we run the danger of returning to a climate of cold war and of broader confrontations which in turn increase the threat of more general and even war-like clashes.

At the base of this crisis there is the effort of the U.S. imperialists and of NATO to overthrow the international balance of power which has changed at their expense, particularly after the blow they suffered in Iran and in their effort to overcome the deep structural crisis of the imperialist system by promoting aggressive goals and cold war activities. They have attempted to stop the developing struggles of the people of the world who are ridding themselves of the imperialist overlordship, as demonstrated by the Iranian Revolution, the liberation movement in Africa, Asia and Latin America and the struggle of the Third World countries for an international economic order.

In this direction the imperialists proceed to a new anti-communist and anti-Soviet campaign, they refuse to sign the SALT II agreement, they increase their armaments, they tighten their military alliances and establish new ones particularly in the area of the Middle East and Central Asia. They decide on the installation of "Pershing" and "cruise" missiles in West European countries. They adopt reprisals against the Soviet Union. They concentrate their fleets in the Persian Gulf and they form special forces for immediate interventions in Iran and elsewhere. All these are serious steps in the climaxing of aggression against detente.

Under these conditions the USSR military intervention in Afghanistan burdened the international situation with an additional new qualitative element which made it deteriorate even further.

The framework which gave the imperialists the ability to achieve such a back-tracking in international relations for the purpose of promoting their own aggressive plans consists of the system of world confrontation between the two superpowers and their coalitions, of the return to the bipolar way of thinking which is historically outdated.

Yet this bipolar system which basically serves the United States and prevents the autonomous development of other countries is now being accepted by the USSR because it now serves its own hegemonistic policy.

The Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan falls within this logic of the confrontation of the two superpowers. This action hinders the struggle of the peoples of the world against imperialism, for peace, democracy and socialism. [paragraph continues]

This is because it strikes against the principles of independence, of national sovereignty and nonintervention in the internal affairs of other countries which inspired this struggle and upon which the policy of peaceful coexistence was based. It also provides new excuses and new possibilities to imperialism in its effort to promote its goals against the independence of the people of the world and against social progress.

The Soviet intervention also hinders the struggle of our own people for the country's independence and integrity, against the chauvinist claims of the Turks who at the same time occupy half of Cyprus as well as against the interventions of the American imperialists who are the main danger facing both our country as well as the entire world.

The KKE (Interior) as stated right from the start by the secretary of its Central Committee, Bambis Dhrakopoulos, is emphatically opposed to the above action by the Soviet Union. It believes that the socialist and national liberation revolution is, first of all, the affair of the people of each individual country and that the plots and machinations of imperialism cannot justify such flagrant interventions which, on the contrary, tarnish the image of socialism and the scintillation of its ideals.

At the same time the KKE (Interior) expresses its full opposition to any plans for military cooperation between the People's Republic of China and the United States which may be directed against the USSR, in the same way that in the past it has opposed and today continues to oppose any effort to keep the People's Republic of China out of the international community and to prevent its economic-technical equipping.

The KKE believes that it is imperative to abandon the logic of military coalitions and to establish in the international arena a new balance which will be based upon a new international democratic framework with the participation of all states, small and large, on the basis of the principles of the United Nations and the spirit of Helsinki. Only in this way could there be conditions which would permit prevention of the dangerious confrontations between coalitions thus protecting peace and detente which today are essential prerequisites in the struggle for independence, democracy and socialism.

Our country is situated close to the areas where the most dangerous and threatening clouds are being concentrated. At the same time, however, and in the name of a deteriorating international situation U.S.-NATO pressures for bases and for military use of Greek territory and for our return to NATO continually increase.

Greece, by staying far from the logic of the cold war, which U.S. imperialism wants to impose upon it, has a duty to undertake or participate in initiatives for a restoration and promotion of the cause of detente. Particularly in the sensitive area of the Balkans it is important that it works toward an international ratification of the current international status of frontiers in the Balkan area as a first step toward conversion of this area into a zone of peace with nuclear weapons and foreign bases.

United, our people must fight against our country's involvement in imperialist adventures and for the defense of peace so that a real and mass peace movement may be formed which, if it will be able to play its part, must be autonomous, free of attachments both from any particular party as well as from the foreign policy of any country. At the same time it must be sensitive toward national issues, toward Cyprus and the Turkish invasion.

The people must emphatically express their will on the following:

--The government must withdraw its approval for installation of "Pershing" and "cruise" missiles in West Europe. At the same time it must state that Greece will not become involved in a war except only if its territorial integrity and national independence are threatened.

--Our country must follow a truly multifaceted foreign policy. The government must not give in to American pressures for our return to NATO's military wing, and our withdrawal from it must be finalized simultaneously with the abolition of foreign military bases.

--A diligent activity must be undertaken for promoting Balkan cooperation and for the conversion of the Balkans and the Mediterranean into zones of peace.

--A policy of international detente must be staunchly supported on the basis not of an increase but of decrease of armaments and for a balance at all and the most lower levels.

--Dialog between the two sides must continue so that new missiles are not installed in Europe and that the SALT II agreement is signed by the United States.

--That Soviet troops withdraw from Afghanistan and that U.S. fleet and military forces withdraw from the Persian Gulf. U.S. pressure on Iran and in the area of the Middle East must be stopped.

--The demand of the Palestinians for their own independent state must be satisfied because this is a key to peace in the Middle East.

--Our country must contribute to the struggle of the nonalined and all progressive forces for a more just international economic order.

In face of the serious deterioration of the international situation the KKE (Interior) stresses the necessity that all communist, socialist, social-democratic parties of Europe should proceed to a joint search for and preparation of a political and peaceful way out of the international crisis. It calls upon the people to defend detente, on its broadest basis, together with peace and the autonomous progress of the country. It once again appeals to the democratic parties on the need for joint initiatives for the defense of independence and the establishment of peace under the spirit of the broadest possible national cooperation on these issues. PUBLIC POWER CORPORATION EXAMINES ENERGY PROBLEMS

[Text] Eleven, 300 megawatt steam-electric powerplants will be supplied with fuel from the lignite beds in the Ptolemais area where lignite mining has been increased. During 1979 the Ptolemais lignite mines produced 16.1 million tons of lignite from the main mines as well as from the Kardhia area. Utilization of the south field is scheduled to start soon. Work to uncover the lignite-bearing layer is already in hand.

Prospects of increasing the use of lignite, maximizing this products' contribution to the country's energy balance, were examined at a meeting yesterday at the Public Power Corporation [DEI] chaired by the minister of industry and energy, Miltiadhis Evert. In general the meeting examined the country's energy problems and specifically the question of economy in the consumption of energy. It was reported that the Public Oil Corporation restored cooperation with Yugoslav, Romanian and Soviet corporations, on the basis of agreements already signed and others which will soon be signed, for geologic, geophysical and seismologic research and for drilling operations.

Voicing the attitude of the countries which support the former viewpoint, the Libyan delegate said: The outcry created following the Afghanistan events is merely a maneuver aimed at distracting public opinion from the U.S. imperialists' genuine plans of aggression in various regions in the world. The real problem facing the Islamic countries is the presence of the U.S. aggression bases in these countries. This problem, which greatly interests all Islamic countries, should be discussed during the meeting.

The representatives of the latter viewpoint attempted to use the dais of the Islamic conference as a tool to suppress the national liberation struggles of the Islamic peoples, to perpetuate the aggressive plans of U.S. imperialism and, with this aim in mind, to exacerbate anti-Sovietism and anticommunism, thus proving their subordination to their masters.

The foreign minister of the pro-American and pro-martial law Demirel government, Erkmen, was one of the representatives of the latter viewpoint. Through his speech at the conference, this man proved again that he is merely a puppet controlled by Washington. Referring to the events in Afghanistan, Erkmen unshamedly talked about goodneighborliness, freedom and independence. He reverted to the weapon of anticommunism and anti-Sovietism. It is not at all surprising that Erkmen is speaking out in such a manner in favor of the aggressive policy and the interests of U.S. imperialism. He is not speaking for himself; he is reading the text prepared at the NATO headquarters in Washington [as heard] and approved by the Beijing administration. Actually, the only representatives of aggressive NATO at the Islamic conference are the satellites of U S. imperialism such as Erkmen.

The subject of goodneighborliness is unbecoming for this man. Is Erkmen not one of those who signed the slavery agreement [defense cooperation agreement with the United States], which envisages Turkey's involvement in aggressive NATO and its transformation into a springboard for imperialist attacks against our neighbors and the peoples of our region? Filling Turkish soil with U.S.-NATO bases of aggression equipped with nuclear weapons to be used against the Soviet Union and the peoples of the region is not compatible with goodneighborliness. On the contrary, these (?implementations) only hinder goodneighborly relations, peace and friendship between peoples, and oppress the freedom and national liberation struggles of the peoples in our region. Examples of this are evident. What was the attitude of the Turkish Government when the United States sent troops to Lebanon during the national liberation war waged by the Algerian people against the French colonialists? [sentence as heard] The reactionary and pro-American governments in Turkey adopted a [word indistinct] stand in a bid to crush the peoples' national liberation wars. The same situation prevails today. The aggressive bases in our country have always been used and are still being used to crush the national liberation war of the Palestinian and Arab peoples against the Israeli militarists.

At the Islamic conference, Erkmen--the lackey of the United States--babbles about the Afghanistan events and speaks of freedom and the peoples' right to determine their own future in a free manner. The Afghan people have requested assistance from their friends in order to freely choose their own regime, not to become a satellite of U.S. imperialism, and to contribute to regional peace in the face of attacks by U.S. imperialism, NATO and Chinese hegemonists. Undoubtedly, such a development amazes the satellites of U.S. imperialism like Erkmen. This is why Erkmen acts as the mouthpiece of U.S. imperialism at the Islamic conference.

Erkmen also demands the implementation of UN resolutions. A better example of demagogy and hypocrisy is hard to find. Is it not the Turkish Government which is not implementing the UN resolutions on the Cyprus issue? What are the Turkish troops doing in Cyprus? Is this not tantamount to trampling on the sovereignty rights of an independent country?

Why is the foreign minister of the pro-American and pro-martial-law Demirel government forced to speak such (?irrelevant) lies at the Islamic conference? This is closely related to the internal policy of pressure and antipeace foreign policy of subordination pursued by the Demirel government.

POLISH TRADE DELEGATION ARRIVES IN ISTANBUL

TA280542 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 28 Jan 80 TA

[Text] A 12-man delegation headed by the Polish Foreign Trade Deputy Minister Antoni Karas arrived by air in Istanbul at 2200 last night as the official guest of the Turkish Commerce Ministry. In an airport statement Karas said the delegation's goal was to promote trade and economic relations between the two countries. Pointing out that bilateral imports and exports will be assessed during talks in Ankara, Karas said: We hope to export to Turkey more than just the goods we sell in other world markets and to import some new products from the developing Turkey. He added that the delegation would conduct some investment studies in certain industrial installations during its visit in Turkey. The Polish trade delegation will leave Istanbul for Ankara today. The delegation's visit to Turkey is expected to last a week.

FINANCE MINISTRY ANNOUNCES $7 BILLION IMPORT PROGRAM

[Excerpt] The new import regulations for fiscal 1980 were published in today's official gazette. The Finance Ministry's decree on this subject envisages total imports of $7 billion. Finance Minister Halil Basol said the new import regulations would greatly benefit the national economy within the framework of the announced new economic measures. Basol added that production, which was affected by lack of [raw material] imports, would recover and reach the desired level. Basol was speaking at a news conference he held in Ankara today.

Commenting on imports for fiscal 1980, the finance minister said that, out of the $7 billion envisaged, $6 billion was programmed while $1 billion was not included in the program. Basol noted that $5 billion was allocated to intermediary goods, while $1.825 billion was for capital goods and the rest for consumers goods. Basol said that imports in fiscal 1979 reached about $5 billion, and that he believed that the foreign exchange needed to acquire the envisaged imports would be insured by the latest economic measures.

GOVERNMENT TEMPORARILY CLOSES EMBASSY IN TEHRAN

LD282234 Montreal International Service in English 2200 GMT 28 Jan 80 LD

[Text] The Federal Government announced today that it has temporarily closed its embassy in Tehran and withdraw the ambassador and all Canadian personnel. However, it says the move does not mean the actual suspension of relations with Iran. It says bilateral relations will be handled through the Iranian Embassy in Ottawa. David Roberts has the details:

The withdrawal of Canadian diplomats from Tehran began about 3 weeks ago when the commerical section of the embassy was shut down. Then, about a week and a half ago, the immigration section was closed. A spokesman for the minister for external affairs says in both cases there simply was not enough business to justify the presence of the diplomats in a situation where their personal safety could be threatened. In the official's words, normal diplomatic amenities were unavailable in Tehran. This left four people at the embassy, including the ambassador, Kenneth Taylor. The spokesman says the final decision to move them out did not follow any specific incident, it simply reflects the dangerous situation in Tehran and the lack of diplomatic activity.

The immigration officers who were in Tehran have been moved to Kuwait and the commercial officers are expected to start work in another Gulf state in the near future. Ambassador Taylor is on holiday in Europe. External Affairs says diplomatic relations with Iran will be carried on through the Iranian Embassy in Ottawa and through Canadian diplomats elsewhere in the Middle East.

There may also be periodic visits by Canadian officials to Iran when this is required. There are about 50 Canadians living in Iran and arrangements have been made for them to be represented by the embassy of New Zealand. These people have stayed in the country throughout the Iranian Revolution, despite the recommendation of the Canadian Government that they leave. External Affairs says that it is monitoring the situation in Iran closely to decide when and if the Canadian diplomatic presence will be returned to the country.

SIMONE VEIL COMMENTS ON OLYMPIC BOYCOTT ISSUE

LD291050 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 29 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] Two more statements have been made against the Olympic games: by Simone Veil, president of the European Parliament, who thinks that participation in the games would mean approval of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and Soviet violations of human rights, and by the 36 Islamic countries taking part in the Islamabad conference.

Here are the explanations given by Simone Veil to our correspondent Denis Poncet:
[begin recording]

Taking into account the political meaning given to the Olympic games by the Soviet Union--a very strong political meaning indeed--and since they will forge from them an instrument of prestige, I would support a boycott. But I think it is too soon to take a position. I think it is up to Olympic committees to assess the situation as a whole and to see how the situation in Afghanistan develops, how the human rights situation develops: the situation of Sakharov and other Soviet personalities who are being discriminated against--even more than that. I think all this must be taken into consideration and that there is no need to take a decision immediately. What is important here is that one cannot separate an attitude in this area from politics. ITALY'S COSSIGA VISITS UK FOR EEC, BILATERAL TALKS

ID292047 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 29 Jan 80 ID

[Text] Prime Minister Cossiga is in London for talks with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Before leaving, Cossiga had a long meeting with President Pertini. Cossiga apparently also had a telephone conversation with FRG Chancellor Schmidt. The prime minister returns to Rome tomorrow afternoon. Here is a report on Cossiga's first day in London by our correspondent Gualberto Ranieri:

The agenda of the talks is very crowded. It includes an examination of bilateral problems and the themes which dominate the international scene in general and the EEC scene in particular. Cossiga, who is accompanied by Foreign Minister Ruffini, is in London primarily in his capacity as president of the EEC Council in this intense first quarter of 1980. Italy aims at elaborating a common political line within the Community. During the talks this afternoon, which will be followed by a working dinner, the participants examined the controversial problem of the British contribution to the EEC which deadlocked the Dublin meeting of the nine heads of government.

Cossiga reported on his talks with American President Carter. Great Britain assumed a very harsh attitude following the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, proposing among other things the boycott of the Moscow Olympics and offering to host some events here in London.

To conclude, Buckingham Palace officially announced that Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip would visit Italy from 14 to 18 October at the invitation of President Pertini.

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher tonight held the first session of talks with the Italian prime minister, Senor Francesco Cossiga, who is on a two day visit to Britain. Snr Cossiga was afterwards a guest at dinner at Downing Street. A further session of talks will take place tomorrow before Snr Cossiga returns to Rome.

Italy is the current president of the Common Market and Snr Cossiga is engaged in consultations with the other Common Market heads of government to discuss prospects for a settlement of Britain's demand for a substantial reduction in its budgetary contribution. It is thought unlikely that any formula for a settlement will be agreed at the Downing Street talks.

It now seems clear that Britain's demand for an early new year Common Market summit, probably in February, will not be met. Italian officials said today that a March summed seemed to be the earliest prospect.

Snr Cossiga and Mrs Thatcher will discuss the prospects of an agreed European response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. In particular they are expected to concentrate on whether a common line can be agreed on a boycott of the Moscow Olympics.

ARAB LEAGUE'S CHEDLI KLIBI: ARABS TORN OVER AFGHANISTAN

AU282145 Vienna KURIER in German 26 Jan 80 p 5 AU

[Otto Klambauer, Heinz Nussbaumer and Manfred Strauss exclusive interview with Arab League Secretary General Chedli Klibi recently in Vienna--no date given]

[Text] KURIER: Saturday, 26 January 1980--That is an important day for the entire Middle East. The archenemies Egypt and Israel establish full diplomatic relations, open their airspace and frontiers. What does that day signify for you, the "father" of the Arab world?

Klibi: That day is not merely important--it is sad and dangerous. It symbolizes the gap that has opened between Egypt and the Arab brothers. Naturally we all want peace--but not a peace that is so infinitely far away from a true solution of the conflict. The solution, however, is justice for the Palestinians.

KURIER: Are the ranks of the Arab front really so closed? Do not many Arabs condemn the initiative only in words, but support it in their heart? Is As-Sadat not a kind of political test pilot?

Klibi: I would not know why the Arabs should not be sincere in their rejection, why they should hush up their true feelings.

KURIER: Perhaps some of them are afraid of the Palestinians....

Klibi: I have talked with all Arab leaders, publicly and in strict privacy, and perhaps some of them actually might have given As-Sadat some period of time during which he could have proved the correctness of his mission--by bringing about at least a tiny mini-state for the Palestinians. But between Egypt and Israel nothing serious has been negotiated at all--thus it can only end up in failure.

KURIER: If your assumption is correct, the question arises: Why under the circumstances did As-Sadat want that peace?

Klibi: I can only tell you my personal opinion. I believe that As-Sadat has made a--possibly seductive but ultimately wrong--calculation. He believed that America could exert certain pressure on Israel to grant the Palestinians their human rights. Thus he wanted to impress the U.S. President and the West by ordering Soviet advisers out of the country, by flying to Jerusalem and launching his peace initiative. The pressure on America was intended to produce effects both on Israel and the Palestinians.

KURIER: But it was certainly a sound approach in principle?

Klibi: It was perhaps intelligently conceived--but the truth looked quite different. As a result of the government change in Israel it was Menahem Begin rather than the Socialist Peres who was in power. Do you remember how As-Sadat in Jerusalem spoke of the great common future--and Begin spoke about nothing but his political secondhand shop? And Jimmy Carter did not feel strong enough to exert the hoped-for pressure on Israel.

Thus As-Sadat's hopes for the Palestinians were completely shattered. He had to put up with something that was little more than nothing: an internal autonomy, self-administration for people, but not even for the territory in which they live. As-Sadat is most certainly a disappointed man.

KURIER: Why, then, has he not given up, if what you say is right?

Klibi: That probably belongs to the realm of psychology. Perhaps self-complacency and desire for recognition prevented him from abandoning the adopted path. Perhaps he also believed Egypt would get lots of money from America. But America has plenty of financial problems of its own. The $18 billion originally hoped for eventually dwindled to $1.5 billion. Nevertheless As-Sadat--probably prompted by haughtiness and defiance--is continuing on his old course. But at some point he will recognize the truth. He is, I think, a man who would even consider turning back.

KURIER: Here in Vienna you have seen Chancellor Kreisky, who regards the Egyptian-Israeli peace at least as a starting point for a Middle East solution. Have you been able to make him change his mind, or has Kreisky convinced you?

Klibi: May I answer you indirectly, in view of the confidential nature of that talk: I do not know any Western statesman who at this time really believes that the Egyptian-Israeli peace agreement has a genuine chance of success and of survival.

KURIER: Thus, in order to permit a return to the course that in your opinion is the right course, is it first necessary to overthrow As-Sadat?

Klibi: It is merely necessary to recognize the PLO as an equal partner that is being taken seriously, and it is necessary from the very beginning to negotiate on the basis of founding a Palestinian state.

KURIER: Are you not afraid that the rejection front against the Egyptian-Israeli peace will quietly collapse--in view of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan it does seem as if the Arab world is moving closer to the West. There, however, a clear majority is supporting As-Sadat's policy of peace.

Klibi: First, it is the West which fears for its interests and hopes that the Arab world will adopt a certain attitude against the Soviet Union.

KURIER: But, it also serves the Arabs' national interests....

Klibi: The Arabs are torn. On the one hand, morality, their conscience, speaks for condemning, for damning the events in Afghanistan. On the other hand, there are the political interests in the Palestinian question. Like Afghanistan, Palestine is also a part of the Middle East, an area that is suffering from aggression. On whom can the Arabs count at this time? The Europeans are at present not yet willing to support the cause of Palestine. The Americans unconditionally support Israel. Only the Soviet Union supports the Arab cause.

KURIER: But Islamic leaders certainly know very well that there can be no "fraternity" with Soviet communism in the long run....

Klibi: I have already said that driving many Arabs into an alliance with the Soviet Union was the West's fault. Had America adopted a more balanced position, then it could have played a far more important role between the Arab world and Israel. And, as most Arabs belong to Islam, they would have been sure from the very beginning in turning against communism and toward the United States.

KURIER: It has been said that the post of UN secretary general is the most difficult office on earth. Don't you find your own office even more difficult--with the constant wars and crises within the Arab world?

Klibi: One should not overlook that the people in our region are southerners, where words count much, where language is harsh and strong. I can understand the difficulty experienced by Western countries in getting their bearings in Eastern politics, because they do not have the same temperament. [paragraph continues]

What sometimes appears to be a genuine conflict is actually of no consequence. After violent verbal battles the contestants embrace one another again.

KURIER: But again and again people are dying on account of that hot temper, does it not constitute a problem?

Klibi: Sometimes that is true. But often there is only one injured party: the self-complacency, the high opinion one has of oneself. But that is not a serious injury.

KURIER: In Saudi Arabia the internal Arabian conflicts have recently manifested themselves particularly clearly: in the struggle over the Mosque in Mecca. Many Europeans are worried over the security of the kingdom--are you worried, too?

Klibi: In Saudi Arabia there has been a complete change in the external way of life in the past 15 years. The men in power--most of them trained in Europe or America--have worked hard and are tremendously competent experts. They have coped very well with the certain convulsions that followed the events around Mecca. They have analyzed the causes and are about to draw conclusions--including political ones. The crown prince has already announced that.

KURIER: Are the events in Saudi Arabia in some way a continuation of the Persian development?

Klibi: No, because in Saudi Arabia, there is no injustice. The riches derived from oil are not withheld from the people. Nor is there anything like the notorious SAVAK.

KURIER: Where do you see--apart from Israel--the great future hotbeds of crisis in the Orient?

Klibi: The big problem extends from the Atlantic to the Gulf: the problem of social justice, education, cultural unity and the concern that this region might lose its own values and might import alien ideas, rather than relying on Islam's own moral values.

KURIER: In other words, you are a champion of Islamization?

Klibi: I am not another Khomeyni.

EXTENSIVE MINERAL DEPOSITS DISCOVERED SINCE 1977

AU291701 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 29 Jan 80 p 7 AU

[Summary] In a press conference on Monday in Vienna, Austrian Trade Minister Staribacher announced that since 1977 7,000 mineral deposits have been located in Austria, only 400 of which are currently being mined. Aeromagnetic surveys have revealed the existence of extensive tungsten deposits--the sixth largest in the world--near the town of Mittersill. Trial drillings near the village of Zistersdorf hit upon natural gas deposits. More than 60 million tons of coal are waiting to be mined. Oil and natural gas reserves are estimated to amount to 60 million tons each. A major obstacle to economic exploitation is presented by the great depths--some of the hydrocarbons are expected to lie at a depth of 6,000 meters.

VAN DER KLAAUW EXPRESSES OFFICIAL CONCERN ABOUT SAKHAROV

LD281433 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 24 Jan 80 p 1 LD

[Political correspondent report: "Unanimous EC Protest, Van der Klaauw Summons Ambassador"]

[Text] The Hague, 24 January--The nine EC member states have decided to take steps in Moscow to protest against the arrest and deportation of Russian dissident leader Sakharov. The ambassador of Italy, which now has the chairmanship of the Community, will probably have talks with [Soviet Foreign] Minister Gromyko on this matter today.

[Dutch Foreign] Minister Van der Klaauw summoned Soviet Ambassador Tolstikov this morning to "inform him of the feelings of indignation and condemnation expressed by the government, Parliament and the Dutch people in connection with the steps taken against Sakharov." The ambassador was asked to inform his government of this.

In reply to joint questions from all parties, except the Communist Party of the Netherlands and the Democratic Socialist Party, Van der Klaauw told the second chamber this morning that the government does not want to interfere in the Soviet Union's internal affairs.

However, the minister said that the steps taken against a prominent scientist and man of integrity such as Sakharov, whose international prestige won him the Nobel Peace Prize in 1975, has effects reaching far beyond the borders of his own country.

He stressed once again with great force how concerned the government is about the fact that Sakharov's internal exile is a violation of the fundamental principles of human rights and freedom as laid down in the Helsinki Final Act and in many other international agreements. Van der Klaauw said he greatly regrets the reprisals taken against individuals like Sakharov who have done nothing more than use the right to free speech and thought.

"Such actions do not favor the detente process and constitute a serious hindrance to that process. Detente is not simply a matter for states and governments but also for the individual citizen and I told that to the Soviet ambassador this morning," Van der Klaauw said.

"Irrespective of where such steps are taken, the Netherlands Government will continue to press for respect for the principles of human rights," he said.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON CURRENT STANCE TOWARD USSR

DW281140 Munich Bayerischer Rundfunk in German 1700 GMT 26 Jan 80 DW

[Heinz Baeuerlein interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher--date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] Surely you are always a busy man, what with your government office and your position as party chairman. Yet last week you were in greater demand than ever. Following your return from Washington you took part in the chancellor's talks with the opposition leaders. You received official visitors from Thailand and from two African countries. The Soviet ambassador to Bonn, Vladimer Semenev, called on you yesterday. Is this routine business, or is this part of crisis management?

[Answer] All these oral contacts are necessary. They have a special weight, however, in a political situation such as we have right now. By that I mean the effects of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. It is becoming plain here that the Federal Government stands by its principle that talks are necessary, especially in this situation of course, with our allies, the United States, since the solidarity between the European allies and the United States is an inalienable basis of our security and of the Western alliance's ability to act. It is necessary to talk with the states of the Third World, with the nonalined states, because they consider the intervention in Afghanistan a challenge, especially to the countries of the Third World and their independence, their national identity, and a challenge to the principle of nonalinement. It is necessary to talk with the representative of the country which has carried out this intervention.

We have always advocated the view that the exchange of opinions and the explanation of our own concerns and objectives are most important, especially in such a situation. We must not deal with each other solely through the media. Naturally it is a fact that each side also makes its stance public; but it is just as important to make it clear, also in the dialog with the representative of the Soviet Union, how we assess the situation that has emerged and what we deem necessary, namely the pullout from Afghanistan, and that we are determined to hold to our policy of close integration in the Western alliance and in the European Community, of strengthening the independence of the states of the Third World.

Hence it would be an illusion were someone in Moscow to assume that they might be able to separate the Europeans from the United States in this situation, were someone to assume that the Europeans are defining their interests differently from the United States. What we have here is a common challenge to the United States, the Europeans and the Third World. For this reason it is perhaps symptomatic that we underscored our contacts with our American friends this week with my visit to Washington and held talks in Bonn with representatives of important Third World states from Africa and Southeast Asia.

[Question] I realize you cannot divulge what you discussed with Soviet Ambassador Semenev. But you could perhaps reveal one thing: Did he have a message to convey to you or did you give him something to pass on to Moscow?

[Answer] I would violate the confidential nature of the talks were I to divulge especially what the Soviet ambassador said. But you may proceed on the assumption that this dialog, which lasted for an hour and a half, naturally served the purpose of expounding our views and listening to what the other side had to say. This is part of what is needed to properly assess motives, action and the importance of actions. I repeat, we advocate the view that it is necessary to talk particularly now. There must not be the least doubt on the Soviet side about how seriously we--and by we I mean our allies and ourselves--assess the current situation.

By the same token there must be no doubt that we are determined to continue the policy of safeguarding peace. This is why not only the Federal Government but also all our allies, the United States as well as our other allies, are saying this: We want the proposals concerning arms control and disarmament adopted by NATO in December to be negotiated. What we want is to show in this situation, especially in this situation, that the West wants to do its share to create balance; and in our concept it would be best if this were a balance on a lower level of armament. We have done our part. It is now up to the Soviet Union to take up the proposals on negotiations advanced by the West in December, for a policy of arms control, a policy of disarmament, can be successfully implemented only if both sides are prepared to pursue it. The same holds true for detente policy as a whole. The desire to mitigate tensions is there; yet it also depends on the other side, in this particular case the Soviet Union and its allies, whether this will be possible.

[Question] You made a public statement on the Olympic games in Hamburg yesterday, and you said that the Soviet Government should try to create the preconditions for participation. Did you expound this idea to Ambassador Semenev as well?

[Answer] You can assume that I will not make different statements in public than I have made in those talks. As regards my public statement, it is indeed as follows: I stated that we respect the autonomy of sports and also the independent decisions of the National Olympic Committee of German sports associations and of the International Olympic Committee.

We appeal to the Soviet Union to create the prerequisites to allow athletes from all states to take part in these games--which would correspond to the actual meaning of these games. The Soviet Government, as the government of the host country, has a special responsibility in this respect. I think we must not reverse the causes. The fact that discussions are taking place at all about whether the games should take place and who ought to take part in the Moscow games is a result of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. It is probably also the consequence of the fact that a man like Sakharov has been removed from Moscow. I believe that this, too, is not in line with the spirit in which the Olympic games ought to take place. So it is now up to the Soviet Union to exploit its possibilities to create the prerequisites for--I will say it again--permitting athletes from all states to take part in the games.

[Question] Mr Genscher, you, that is the Federal Government, have agreed with the allies that we, that is Bonn, within the framework of a certain division of labor, as a German contribution to crisis management, ought to take over intensified support of Turkey and other states such as Thailand and Pakistan. How far is that supposed to go? Will the military also be involved? A foreign paper mentioned German soldiers in Turkey, and an opposition politician apparently can imagine the presence of German Navy units in the Persian Gulf.

[Answer] I said in the Bundestag that we have an important task with regard to safeguarding central Europe. We will fully take care of that mission. I think it is good that CSU Chairman Strauss has made it clear that according to his assessment, the Bundeswehr should not be used outside the area of the alliance. I wish he could succeed in making all CDU/CSU politicians follow that line. This is such an important issue that clarity really ought to exist.

But we must not view the present problem, the fact that the Third World has been challenged also, from the standpoint of East-West relations; we must make it clear that the Third World states fear for their independence--and there are many of them, not merely the Islamic states. This pertains to Africa as well as to Southeast Asia.

You mentioned the visit of the deputy prime minister and foreign minister of Thailand, an ASEAN member state--an organization of states that want to preserve their independence. Upon our initiative close cooperation has been agreed on between them and the European Community. All these states expect us now to help them solve their difficult economic and social problems. One simply needs to realize that resolving the great issue--the great social issue of the rest of this century--namely, overcoming famine and misery in the Third World, is also a most important contribution to the stabilization of these states.

What we consider a moral task, a peaceful task, a task involving safeguarding peace in the real sense of the word--overcoming the great difference between North and South, helping to overcome famine and misery--naturally will also be a contribution through the strengthening of economic, social and political stability toward making these countries less susceptible to interventionist and expansionist efforts, as was just demonstrated by the Soviet Union with regard to Afghanistan. In doing this, the USSR demonstrated its readiness to use military armed forces in a most offensive manner.

[Question] Could we define German participation in Western measures to repel the Soviet advance by saying that Bonn will not so much take part in the sanctions, that is, retaliation measures, but will concentrate more on backing possible future victims of Soviet expansionist efforts?

[Answer] I would not speak of sanctions and punishments but of a Western counterstrategy that is supposed to bring about stability in the endangered regions. In the framework of such a general strategy, the solidarity among individual member states will be demonstrated, as well as solidarity with the United States, with full adherance to the mission involved.

I think it is important to say in this connection that it also means we must accept the fact that there will be additional burdens. I am certain that our citizens will have the courage to take on responsibility, the courage to preserve freedom together with us, and that they will realize that it will be necessary in this way to make our contribution to safeguarding peace in the world. Nothing will work without peace.

[Question] You mentioned a general strategy. Did you mean the entire West, or did you also mean a general strategy at home, that is, a common policy of the Bundestag parties?

[Answer] It turned out in the talks we had that there is agreement at least with regard to the fact that we have to fulfill our mission within the framework of the alliance. The Bundestag debate also demonstrated that all Bundestag parties, including the opposition, realize that this can also mean bearing additional burdens.

I consider it correct, and I still do, that the parties must talk to each other, whether they belong to the government or the opposition; we must know the aims and the differences. There certainly are common positions with regard to foreign and security policies. That was demonstrated by the debate in December 1979, when I reported on the NATO conference.

Different positions exist in other fields, but I find that in a position like ours we must not conceal the existing agreement. Naturally we must also withstand the temptation to pretend there is agreement where none exists.

At any rate, it is important to have responsible talks. I believe that a statement on the existence of agreement on certain positions is a good basis for everybody living up to his responsibilities, be it in parliament or in the government, responsibilities for the common fate of our nation--which means responsibility for safeguarding peace. With regard to this aim, there is no difference of opinion between the parties of the Bundestag.

GEN BASTIAN JUSTIFIES OBJECTIONS TO NATO ARMS DECISION

DW291236 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 28 Jan 80 p 36 DW

[Text] There are reasons not to regard the Soviet modernization program as a fundamentally new threat with a resultant compulsion for actions of our own. Hence it is bound to be all the more surprising that it was possible for the protagonists, nearly without opposition, to narrow down the security policy debate in the Federal Republic of Germany preceding the NATO decision to the smooth, seemingly logical formula of "advance armament--arms gap closure," and how obviously the debate, apart from the worried voices of some individuals, was mostly waged with arguments that no longer indicated what decisive shift of direction actually was to be effected....

After all, today is not the first time Europe has been threatened by Soviet medium-range missiles with nuclear warheads. For nearly 20 years now Europe up to the Pyrenees has been in the effective range of Soviet SS-5 missiles, which, by virtue their number and nuclear charges, have always been capable of destroying targets in the region covered.

Nevertheless, the stationing of an equal U.S. medium-range potential in Europe was not deemed necessary because nobody doubted the determination of the United States to also put up its strategic nuclear potential against the SS-5 threat and to retaliate for any destruction in Europe with an equal damage to the USSR.

The credibility of deterrence has always presupposed solely the equality of the attainable effect but not the equality of the available means of waging war. Hence I fail to see why the modernization of the Soviet medium-range potential with respect to range, accuracy, multiple effect and mobility of the systems should change anything in this....

The effect of deterrence, therefore, must not be based on an enhanced nuclear role of the Europeans in the future; rather it must, as before, be guaranteed by the credible determination of the United States to use its available strategic arsenal whenever and however required, also for the protection of its allies....

With all due respect to the gigantic feats of the United States for the alliance, it is also necessary to point out--and expect understanding from the Americans for this--that their central European friends react extremely sensitively to any intensification of risk deemed unnecessary, for they would be in a miserable position in any kind of great war....

If deterrence should not work, the Germans would be the first to endure war in their own country as soon as the first shot was fired.

Even without the use of nuclear arms, the consequences would be devastating. The use of nuclear combat arms, which cannot be ruled out, would first of all devastate central Europe. Only when this war came to involve the territory of the superpowers in a higher escalation step would comparable damage take place there. Even in the present state of distribution of means of war, central Europe would not be spared further nuclear strikes.

In the new distribution of nuclear capacities, decided in Brussels on 12 December 1979, the chances of the central Europeans surviving would be even less if deterrence did not work--they would be nil.

It is therefore neither egotistical nor shortsighted for European allies to consider a change in the distribution of tasks within NATO as unnecessary or even dangerous, a distribution which from the very beginning delegated the role of Western nuclear power to the United States, and for them to want nuclear deterrence to be guaranteed as before by the strategic potential of the United States.

The onesidedness with which closing the arms gap has been propagated in this country, and with which the NATO decision has been viewed as an indispensable prerequisite for the continued balance of forces, seems, therefore, hard to understand.

The Soviet intervention in Afghanistan does not change anything here. It was aimed at a USSR border country that has been in the Soviet zone of influence for a quarter of a century and has generally been accepted as such--naturally the Soviets must not be permitted to carry their thrust beyond Afghanistan, if they ever try it.

Neither this fear, however, nor the Soviet tanks in Afghanistan permit retroactive justification of the Brussels decisions.

One could much rather assume that NATO on 12 December 1979 was bidding unnecessarily high, thus facilitating the Kremlin's final decision to use its own power rigorously in view of a Western declaration of intent that it considered a challenge, to use it more rigorously than it otherwise would have considered advisable.

The almost triumphant statement of the federal foreign minister--"those who hesitated with regard to closing the arms gap must now change their stance"--is therefore unfounded.

Not the adversaries of closing the arms gap must change their way of thinking, but solely the advocates of the unrealistic idea that detente can be achieved worldwide or not at all.

SYRIAN EMBASSY BOMBING DAMAGE REPORTED; KHADDAM ARRIVES

Two Explosions

LD291158 Paris Domestic Service in French 1130 GMT 29 Jan 80 LD

[Text] An outrage was committed this morning against the Syrian Embassy in Paris: The second floor of the embassy was destroyed. Bertrand (Vannier) reports from the scene:

[Vannier] The second and the first floors of the embassy were seriously damaged by two consecutive blasts at about 1130 this morning. The two blasts not only destroyed the premises but also injured a dozen or so people. It is reported that one of the injured has just died at the [name indistinct] hospital. At present, it is now know exactly what happened. It appears that responsibility for the outrage has not been claimed so far. Apparently the first explosion occurred on the second floor where the ambassador's office is situated, and there was another explosion a few seconds later on the first floor in the visa office, near a counter, where a young girl was very seriously injured. It is probably she who died a few moments ago at the hospital.

One Dead, Eight Injured

[Text] Paris, Jan. 29 (AFP)--One person was killed and eight others injured when a powerful bomb exploded in the Syrian Embassy, less than two hours before the Syrian foreign minister was due to arrive here on a visit. The explosion wrecked the whole of the ground floor and part of the first floor of the building in the Boulevard Suchet, in the capital's high-class 16th District. The victims included a pregnant woman and police said that two of others were in a serious condition. Police said that many embassy staff were on the premises when the single bomb exploded, apparently in the department where visas are issued.

An embassy maid who was on the third floor when the blast occurred said it was so violent she was thrown against a wall. Dazed and shocked she managed to reach the stairs, where she found the lower floors "devastated". Syrian sources said that all the victims were employed at the embassy. Four were found initially and the remaining five under the rubble later. A Syrian diplomat said that no warning or threats had been received beforehand and the public had free access to the ground floor area. No responsibility was immediately claimed for the explosion.

Foreign Minister Arrives

[Text] As a result of the outrage against the Syrian Embassy in Paris today which, let me remind you, killed one person and injured eight others, security measures have been reinforced for the visit to Paris of 'Abd al-Halim Khaddam, Syrian deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs. By the way, he has just arrived at Roissy Airport from Damascus.

These security measures concern, among others, his bodyguards, the CRS [French riot police] and the policemen detailed to cover his movements in France. Let me remind you that 'Abd al-Halim Khaddam is to take part in the European Council debate on the Middle East to be held in Strasbourg on Thursday. Before being received by Valery Giscard d'Estaing he will have luncheon with Jean Francois-Poncet tomorrow.

It is reported that the person killed by the bomb explosion was the third secretary of the Syrian Embassy. There has been a first Syrian reaction to the outrage: Damascus accuses agents of Israel and U.S. imperialism.

Three Groups Claim Responsibility

NC291926 Paris AFP in English 1921 GMT 29 Jan 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Jan. 29 (AFP)--Three groups separately claimed responsibility for a powerful bomb that devastated the Syrian Embassy here today, killing one person and injuring eight. The groups named by anonymous telephone called are "the Palestinian Resistance", "the Jewish Brigades" and "the Afghan Collectives". None had previously claimed responsibility for bombings.

But police said they did not know who was responsible for the bomb that exploded only two hours before Syrian Foreign Minister 'Abd al-Halim Khaddam arrived here on an official visit.

No reasons were given by a caller to a radio-television office here who claimed the attack for the Palestinian group. But a caller told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE that the Jewish Brigade set the bomb to "oppose the facism, anti-semitism and persecution" of Jews in Syria. Another called to AFP said the Afghan Collective set the bomb because Syria is a "lackey of the Soviet invaders" in Afghanistan. "It is only the beginning of the actions", the caller threatened.

One witness said he say two men--one tall and rotund, the other a small Arab-speaking man with curly hair--in the embassy's corridors only minutes before the explosion. The two appeared to join a third man before leaving the embassy, the witness said.

USSR'S KORNIYENKO TOLD AFGHAN INVASION 'UNACCEPTABLE'

LD291413 Paris LE FIGARO in French 25 Jan 80 p 4 LD

[H.K. report: "Afghanistan: A Firm Reminder of the French Position"]

[Text] The Soviet coup in Afghanistan and the scientist Sakharov's internal exile were discussed yesterday at the Quai d'Orsay by Jean Francois-Poncet and USSR Deputy Foreign Minister Georgiy Korniyenko. Jean Francois-Poncet asked Mr Korniyenko to give him an assurance that Soviet forces would be withdrawn from Afghanistan. He also asked Mr Korniyenko to state, insofar as he could, the date of this withdrawal. Finally, the French minister requested details of the withdrawal procedure.

In its 28 December note to the French president, the Kremlin simply indicated that it had intervened at the Afghan Government's request and that it would leave as soon as conditions allowed. This explanation was considered too vague, and the French Government was seeking clarification.

Mr Korniyenko's answers yesterday shed little light on the Kremlin's intentions. They were hardly expected to do so. However, the Franco-Soviet talks enabled the French foreign minister to restate France's position with great firmness. Thus Mr Korniyenko heard once more that Paris found the Soviet intervention unacceptable.

The French Government is indeed anxious to preserve detente, but it will not be pursued unconditionally. France will judge the Soviet Union's desire to maintain East-West detente by the speed of its troop withdrawal from Afghanistan.

The ball is thus in the Soviet court now. The Paris-Moscow consultations have taken place in accordance with the 13 October 1970 protocol between the two countries, allowing for talks on matters causing grave international tension. An appeal to this procedure showed that France considered Afghanistan a serious impediment to detente.

Later Jean Francois-Poncet stressed that the Sakharov decision ran counter to the spirit of the Helsinki Final Act and was a disturbing sign in current international development. In fact, chapter 7 of the 1 August 1975 Helsinki final statement said: "The participating states respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of thought, of conscience and of belief for all, without discrimination by race, sex, language or religion."

Mr Korniyenko spent the day at the Foreign Ministry. He was received yesterday morning by Bruno de Leusse [secretary general in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs] and lunched with him in private before talks resumed in the afternoon. Mr Korniyenko was received by Mr Francois-Poncet at the end of the afternoon. Paris-Moscow consultations could possibly continue in the coming weeks.

USSR ECONOMIC REPORT EVIDENCES POOR PERFORMANCE

[Editorial: "The USSR's Economic Problems"]

[Excerpts] The USSR economic report for last year which was published by the Central Statistical Administration on Friday, 25 January, confirms that the Soviet economy is passing through a period of decline.

The ills from which the system is suffering are well-known and have often been denounced by officials: low productivity, dispersion of and poor return on investments, delay in building industrial complexes, disorganization in the transport section (especially railroads), waste, lack of responsibility, corruption and so forth. However, the Soviet leaders do not seem capable of remedying the situation either because of a lack of imagination--the solutions proposed are frequently based on old recipes of increasing discipline and ideological work--or because of an inability to implement the reforms which have been decided. From this viewpoint Mr Brezhnev's speech to the Central Committee resolutions which have come to nothing.

In the present state of affairs it is difficult to see how the leadership team could get back on course: Military spending is to have higher priority than ever before not only because of the invasion of Afghanistan--an operation which is within the USSR's financial means--but especially because of the probable resumption of the race in the most expensive arms if the SALT II agreement is not ratified and if this race spreads to Eurostrategic weapons. The economic and trade sanctions decreed by the United States will also increase the medium-term food problems of a country in which, of course, people are not dying of starvation but in which food poses a daily problem.

Finally, the possible halt in supplies of Western technology will not help Moscow to avoid a deterioration of the present situation even though the USSR's ability to "assimilate" and take advantage of these "transplants" has been greatly exaggerated.

PCE'S CARRILLO INTERVIEWED ON TALKS WITH BERLINGUER

LD262322 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 26 Jan 80 LD

[Text] PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo has returned to Spain after holding talks with his Italian counterpart Enrico Berlinguer in Rome. Our correspondent Rafael Ortega interviewed him at Fiumicino Airport:

[Begin recording] [Question] Mr Carrillo, what were the main results of the meetings which you had this morning in the Italian capital?

[Answer] I think that in the first place there was complete agreement between Berlinguer and the Italian Communists and the PCE in the way we view the events which have taken place lately, including, of course, the entry of Soviet troops into Afghanistan.

[Question] Can we then speak of Eurocommunism having regained momentum?

[Answer] What we can say is that the PCE and the PCI remain firmly committed to their Eurocommunist positions and that they are going to take initiatives together with all democratic forces, and in the first place, socialist, social-democratic, and Christian socialist forces, to take actions aimed at forcing back the danger of cold war which exists today and to insure a policy of peace and of real respect for the sovereignty and stability of all peoples. In relation to this we think that Europe has a role to play in its own right, independently of Soviet policy or of American policy. And I personally think that Spain, with ever more reason, should play an active role for detente and for peace in order to overcome the crisis which the world is going through at the moment.

[Ortega] As a final result of these meetings, which lasted less than 6 hours since they began this morning here in Rome at the PCI headquarters we can say that both Berlinguer and Carrillo have relaunched the idea of Eurocommunism, but this time with only the two of them. This is what political observers think, without, that is, the collaboration of Marchais, the secretary general of the French Communist Party. [end recording]

PAJETTA HITS USSR FOR AFGHANISTAN, SCORES WESTERN RESPONSE

LD281033 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 22 Jan 80 pp 1, 19 LD

[Renzo Foa undated interview in Rome with the PCI Central Committee International Affairs Department Chief, Gian Carlo Pajetta: "We Propose Collective Action To Halt Thrusts Toward War"]

[Excerpt] Rome--[Question] Is this the end of detente? Are we regressing 30 years to when the cold war split the world and brought it to the brink of disaster?

[Answer] I believe that the objective facts of the situation are in no way comparable to the facts then. But the situation could become extremely grave unless we do not take positive advantage of this difference and believe--as many irresponsible people now believe--that we can recreate that climate and play dangerous cards which could halt the detente process or make moves which would bring us nearer to the threat of war.

[Question] In other words people are failing to approach the situation from the viewpoint of dialog and negotiation?

[Answer] If, for instance, we issue a request for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Kabul and issue it within the framework of a more general policy of guarantees and detente, if within this framework we regard the arms race as a spiral which could lead to disaster, as could the thrust toward gaining "more favorable" strategic positions, then, faced with this danger, it is the path of negotiation which must be pursued. It must not be the path of ultimatums, faits accomplis and reprisals, which follow a perverse logic.

Ultimatums, gaining strategic positions in a purely military sense of the term, attempts to extend the bloc policy--all this means simply a dangerous logic of force. We condemn the Soviet intervention and we are also calling for the promptest possible withdrawal of troops, but we are not unaware that this is taking place within a situation of exacerbation whose origins date back a long way, and we are not ignoring the fact that this condemnation is also being issued by the Western governments and political forces which have already embarked on the path of reprisals, of the threat of digging new trenches, and which allow themselves to be tempted by a policy of encirclement and are returning to a cold war climate.

[Answer] This response will certainly not persuade the Soviets to withdraw their troops from Afghanistan or create the conditions for this to take place as soon as possible, which is what we want. On the contrary, it is becoming a response destined to prompt further reprisals. For instance, if a boycott of the Moscow Olympics is proposed I do not see how Moscow could be asked to continue supplying gas or oil. When you halt grain supplies or when you plan to pursue a blockade policy in the Persian Gulf you are adopting the viewpoint of the so-called nuclear reequilibrium, which leads to an arms race on both sides. When you have in mind a longer and longer list of reprisal measures, I do not see how you can consider achieving any other result than the further aggravation of international relations.

[Question] Is this not also the sense behind the motion approved by the center-right majority in the European Parliament?

What Does the Christian Democratic Party [DC] Want?

[Answer] It is a motion which has aspects which I regard as bordering on provocation and which on the whole I consider very dangerous, because it envisages hypotheses which cannot be controlled and which could even escape the control of those who could have accepted or submitted to the policy of hermeticism essentially for propaganda reasons or domestic politics or with a disregard for their nation's real interests.

[Question] Even the Italian DC approved this motion, with an attitude which reflects an absence of initiative and responsibility. This is in fact the same line of conduct as the Italian Government's.

[Answer] The Italian Government is maintaining an attitude which confirms once again its spirit of submissiveness with regard to foreign policy, which is all the more serious at a time when it holds the duty chairmanship of the EEC. This was another missed opportunity to make its influence felt. Its attitude and the way in which the new foreign minister was chosen cannot fail to cause concern. And another cause for concern is the fact that this government is allowing itself to be led by certain statements and moves to the extent of the absurd refusal to allow a Soviet oceanographic vessel to dock at Genoa and the witholding of experts and economic representatives. These are petty, irresponsible gestures. They are moves without any weight which deprive Italian diplomacy of authority and which can have only one meaning: to present the United States, on the occasion of Cossiga's imminent visit, with the rather stupid proof that Italy too is capable of irritating the Soviet Union and its allies. Very well, but I wonder whether this is a foreign policy.

[Question] But the debate in the Strasbourg assembly and stances adopted by other Western forces and governments have revealed very different concerns for the fate of international relations.

[Answer] Yes, we have seen, as I have already said, the convergence between the positions of the PCI and of the European socialist and social democratic forces; there have been statements and decisions from heads of state such as Giscard and Schmidt, who do not want to identify with Carter's statements and decisions. There is a Europe which is reflecting, following this brusque reminder of the future of detente. We hope there will be an opportunity for positive responses which will permit a resumption of the East-West and the North-Southdialog.

[Question] Does this not seem to you to be a requirement rather than an opportunity?

[Answer] I believe we should state clearly that we are in a situation in which it is difficult to talk about a stalemate or a lull. Either we start again and move forward and the present obstacles are overcome or we will move backward, dangerously.

[Question] This situation did not begin in Kabul. Do you not feel that too many people have forgotten that the past months have been dominated by the conflicts over the "Euromissiles?"

[Answer] The "Euromissiles" affair is particularly revealing with regard to one component of White House policy that seems increasingly clear to me: U.S. leadership circles are somewhat unenthusiastic about a possible balance and believe that their guarantee lies solely in their superiority. This factor is accompanied by the prevalence in the United States of an outlook based on the belief that peaceful coexistence has been an entirely wasteful price for that country to pay, as if stock had been taken of a harm which must at last be remedied. Hence has stemmed the trend toward rearmament, with an increasing expenditure for advanced methods and technologies and which has reached the proportions of an out and out economic war, though many observers are unaware of this. I do not believe there is any other way of looking at this attitude of regarding a kind of rivalry with the Soviet Union in the arms race as desirable. Some people believe and state openly that it means slowing the USSR's development and rendering ineffective its system of international cooperation and thus its relations with its allies and the Third World countries.

[Question] Do you therefore regard the issue of rearmament and the West's "Euromissiles" decision as a crucial one?

[Answer] It might even have prompted a Soviet response as if to show they were not intimidated, that they could reply with or announce new weapons and, above all, that they could seek advantages elsewhere. But this increases our concern. Both sides would become imprisoned within a logic of gaining advantageous positions in which to deploy missiles and from whence to launch them. As if all anyone now had to do was to choose more advanced military positions. We reject this logic: We want this arms race to be halted.

[Question] Moving back in time, Afghanistan, "Euromissiles," Iran.... For years now crisis points and causes of conflict have accumulated both in East-West relations and in the more concealed, but no less dramatic, tensions between North and South.

Before Kabul

[Answer] I would go back to when and how the detente process began. Because it must not be forgotten that strategy is not only a matter of the balance of military forces but also a political issue. The guarantees offered or requested are therefore involved. When the Soviet Union withdrew its troops from Austria, which was certainly an important strategic point for the military, it created a breach in the cold war front. Moscow "lost" something in terms of position, quartering and lines of communications, but a great deal was gained by Europe and international relations--including the Soviet Union's. Those who believed in detente and wanted to gain in terms of disarmament were on the offensive.

Pajetta recalls this episode to emphasize that "what worries us most now is that politics is being underestimated as a decisive element in strategy, especially if this strategy must be the strategy of defending peace. In any case the detente years did not follow a straight course: suffice it to recall the Vietnam War, the coups in Indonesia and Chile, the African crises and the Middle East. These are conflicts involving the new protagonists who emerged with the erosion of bipolarity and the emergence of an international situation in which many sides had something to say. The two major powers did sometimes manage to yield and to pay certain prices, but they decided to keep the framework of the general balance unchanged."

But if one is seeking the moment which marked the end of mutual trust between the two major powers and of the desire to resolve this or that problem within the context of relations of coexistence--which has, moreover, withstood several blows, among which Pajetta pointed to the Soviet intervention in Czechoslovakia--then one must reflect on the fact that "first Kissinger and then Brzezinski believed that detente meant accepting the crisis of imperialism, the failure of the attempt to replace decolonization with neocolonialism. From this angle, a turning point came when U.S. diplomacy in the Middle East began trying to impose its own solution, excluding the Soviets and sabotaging the agreement already reached through the Geneva Conference."

[Question] Of course it is useful to reexamine all this at a time when we must try to lead Moscow and Washington back to an essential dialog, because their relations are still predominant despite the multipolar disposition of the world, in which other major protagonists, including China and Europe, have entered the concatenated machinery of reactions and counter-reactions. But what is to be done?

[Answer] We have never regarded the detente process as the path for extending the socialist bloc, as a process favorable to one group of countries and damagint to another. We have regarded, and still regard, detente as a precondition for a process of world liberation--primarily from the threat of total destruction and thus from the blocs' stockades, from dependence and backwardness. A return to cold war would mean the end of future growth from mankind, whose only alternatives are barbarism or disaster.

The past few days' events show that the energies for smashing the spiral of the logic of force do exist. At the United Nations we have seen the nonalined countries, including friends of the USSR, abstaining or voting against a Soviet act which they considered inconsistent with the interests of peace and detente, the very interests which we continue to consider preeminent also for the USSR, for the development of socialism, for the emergent nations' progress and for safeguarding mankind. In the West we can see forces opposing the decision to ignore all other paths except the escalation of weapons and military measures or measures of economic warfare. This path must in fact be blocked before the threat of a conflict becomes irreversible.

Conditions for Peace

We Italian Communists have not only posed an inalienable question of principle and justice. This is the question of peace, of a world order whose balance can be guaranteed by every nation's independence and by the guarantees that progress and thorough social transformations will take place with every people acting as a protagonist under and according to their own specific conditions and capabilities. The aim is to reestablish a form of international coexistence based on the observance of the peoples' rights--sovereignty, independence and development--and on a dialog which is the only way to avoid disaster, as we have seen when it has been interrupted.

[Question] But the outcome of the UN vote and the current polemics, even within the workers movement, seem to deny this possibility.

[Answer] We refuse to consider homogeneous the votes of those within the United Nations who deplored the Soviet intervention and those who abstained while refusing to justify it. This was no "front" under U.S. leadership, though certain sectors of the press decided to portray it as such. The world did not split into two camps. The nonalined countries which abstained pointed out that Havana reasserted a principle of independence which they refuse to abandon. Many of those who approved the motion certainly did so in the same spirit: suffice it to recall that they included Yugoslavia. There is therefore a positive element to be taken into account, as there is in the position of the Spanish, Japanese, British and other communists. This is a warning from forces which want to act as protagonists in the great battle for peace and refuse to consider themselves spectators of a conflict affecting the major powers or to renounce making their own effective contribution to the anti-imperialist struggle.

PSI OFFICIALS URGE PRESSURE ON DC FOR 'EMERGENCY GOVERNMENT'

ID291057 [Editorial Report ID] The Italian Socialist Party [PSI] Rome daily AVANTI on 17-19 January carries reports on proceedings at the party Central Committee meeting. Among prominent critics of Secretary Craxi's opening report, PSI Economic Bureau chief Fabrizio Cicchitto said: "The secretary's report is unacceptable because it blurs the political proposal to the extent of adopting a fence-sitting attitude with respect to the Christian Democratic Party [DC], which is not being pressured by a specific proposal for an emergency government; it also substantially ignores the PCI and even its recent foreign policy stances; it presents a socioeconomic analysis which conflicts with the emergency and it fails to approach the party's crisis in political terms."

Both Secretariat member Landolfi and Directorate member Aniasi demanded that greater pressure be brought to bear on the DC to agree to an "emergency government" right away.

DIAMOND FACTORY NATIONALIZED IN REPRISAL AGAINST ANGOLA

LD301106 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0800 GMT 30 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Portugal's relations with Angola seem to have entered a difficult period. Last week the Luanda government nationalized the Angolan manganese and diamond mining companies--or rather, nationalized Portugal's state and private holdings in those companies. The Lisbon government immediately summoned the Angolan ambassador to the Foreign Ministry to protest the step and its discriminatory nature, since neither South African nor British holdings have been nationalized.

Last night the Council of Ministers issued a communique stating that the government had decided there was no justification for the People's Republic of Angola to hold shares in the Portuguese diamond cutting and polishing company DIALAP. Therefore, the shares held by the Angolan state in the DIALAP company will become the property of the Portuguese state immediately through an act of nationalization.

The communique concludes by expressing the government's regret that Luanda's attitude should have opened up a new contentious issue between Portugal and Angola at a time when broad cooperation prospects are opening before the two countries.

AMARAL COMMENTS ON REACTION TO RECENT SOVIET ACTIONS

[Excerpts] Freitas do Amaral, Deputy prime minister and foreign minister, returned from Strasbourg yesterday.

The deputy prime minister stressed the great interest and concord with which European circles see the clarity, determination and affirmative character of Portuguese foreign policy. He said that this policy is in tune with other European countries as regards such important matters as the invasion of Afghanistan and the Sakharov case. [Begin Amaral recording] Briefly, we note that the international reaction against these two recent attitudes of the Soviet Union is still growing and is showing no sign of halting.

Not only the United States and West Europe, but also the majority of Third World countries, namely the Muslim countries, and even some communist countries, such as the PRC, Romania and Yugoslavia have all clearly expressed themselves against these condemnable attitudes of the Soviet Union. MELO ANTUNES CRITICIZES, AMARAL DEFENDS NEW FOREIGN POLICY

Melo Antunes Criticism

LD291004 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0001 GMT 29 Jan 80 LD

[Begin Antunes recording] There is some apprehension in certain circles at what is regarded, to an extent, as a return of Portuguese foreign policy to theses which were prominent a few dozen years ago. [words indistinct] A certain return as well to the language of cold war, so to speak. This is not at all propitious for what should be the concern of the world's leaders. That is, to insure peace and detente as essential conditions of human life.. [end recording]

Amaral Response

LD292301 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1930 GMT 29 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpts] Freitas do Amaral arrived today from Strasbourg where he chaired the meeting of the ministers of the Council of Europe. The deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs spoke in reply to Melo Antunes.[begin recording] It is not part of the duties of the Council of the Revolution, nor its individual members, to pass public comment on Portugal's foreign policy which, according to the constitution, is under the government's jurisdiction, not that of the Council of the Revolution.

The government will not relinquish its right to conduct Portuguese foreign policy in the way that it considers best suited to the national interest and in keeping with the program submitted to, and approved by, the Assembly of the Republic.

At the same time the government holds that the present international situation constitutes criticism of the Soviet Union and not criticism of those who criticize the Soviet Union.

The Third World countries themselves severely criticize the Soviet Union at present. Can it be that we have among us personalities who are more Third World than the countries of the Third World themselves? Or can it be that identification with the Third World is after all a cover for the defense of pro-Sovietism?

Contrary to what has been stated, the government does not in any way desire--nor would it be able to promote--a return to the cold war. But it feels that the so-called detente cannot be a unilateral movement in one direction only. The pro-Soviet concept of detente must end once and for all. This concept envisages that it is the West which must always retreat and the Soviet Union which must always advance, even when this is done in violation of international law.

I would like to draw the attention of Portuguese public opinion to the following: If the simple fact of the government clearly stating that it is pro-European and pro-Western and also that it clearly condemns the Soviet Union for acts which the whole world also condemns, are cause for incredulity on the part of some people in Portugal then this demonstrates that our foreign policy hitherto has been illegitimately used by some people against the interests of Portugal, against the interests of the Western world and in favor of the interests of the Soviet Union. If this was the case, then I wish to state very clearly on the government's behalf that this has come to an end. While this government is in power, it will not happen again.

[Word indistinct] formally reject the accusations made about the government regarding the Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo affair, and the bad faith in comparing it--even (?in a passive way)--with the Sakharov case. Any government has the right to propose the replacement of any non-career ambassadors and this government will not abdicate this right. On the other hand, the Sakharov case is too serious and dramatic to have [word indistinct] and distorted speculations made about it. The Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo situation does not have the smallest international repercussion. Yesterday, during the session of the European Parliament, when a deputy of the Portuguese Socialist Party raised this question, a French deputy--amid general applause and laughter--informed him that he should not confuse the Rhine with the Tagus and should not bring to Strasbourg a problem which might be of great interest to the Lisbon government but is of no interest whatsoever to the parliament of the Council of Europe.

In a word and to conclude, I consider the statements made by Lt Col Melo Antunes lamentable. [Word indistinct] the member of the Council of the Revolution Melo Antunes, because he lives in a country whose government respects democratic liberties--where fortunately there are no Sakharov cases--knows that he can criticize the government at will and in freedom. The government will answer him. And since Lt Col Melo Antunes was at many times the main force behind the previous foreign policy which the present government fought while in opposition and promised to replace, the more Lt Col Melo Antunes criticizes the government the more the government will feel that it is following the right path. [end recording]

On arrival Freitas do Amaral also spoke about Portuguese membership in the EEC.

[Begin recording] I did not say that the process was delayed, what I said was that there were difficulties in the process due to lack of political will on the part of some previous governments, and this is true. [end recording]

PSOE CRITICIZES UCD'S POSITION ON AUTONOMY

LD260404 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 25 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE], said today in Seville during a press conference, at which Alfonso Guerra, Luis Yanez and Rodriguez de la Borbolla also took part, that the position of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] on autonomy is incoherent, puts forward insurmountable differences and has not been sufficiently explained. He added that the PSOE unconditionally supports a yes vote in the Andalusian referendum. The secretary general said the following: [read by announcer]

The 180 degree turn which UCD has made on the autonomy subject has not been sufficiently explained. The reasons given up to now have not been clear. The socioeconomic situation of Andalusia cannot wait, and this subject cannot be separated from the subject of autonomy. The UCD has not understood the importance of the autonomy process; behind it is a rejection of the development of the Constitution. The PSOE unconditionally supports a yes vote in the Andalusian autonomy referendum and thinks that it is necessary to increase support for the campaign. The PSOE intends to redouble its efforts and to increase the maximum the possibility of (?coming out ahead), a prospect which the 28th of February really offers. It is impossible that a no vote should result in Andalusia. In any case, it will not reach 50 percent. If UCD does not respect the commitments made previously with other political forces, I do not think it will guarantee access to full autonomy via article 143. The position of UCD to call the Andalusian referendum and then to advocate abstention is a stance more appropriate of Herri Batasuna. It is also incoherent and creates insurmountable differences.

PCE'S CARRILLO CALLS FOR UNION OF LEFTISTS

[Text] ETA's terrorism has reached a stage of genuine madness and the response which socialists and communists have just made in forming a united front to fight it is the only way to put an end to it. This is what Santiago Carrillo, PCE secretary general, said on the island of Arosa, Pontevedra, at the closing session of the second conference of the Galician Communist Party.

The communist leader does not think conditions in Spain could produce a coup d'etat--something which he says is unthinkable especially while the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] government is moving toward the right. In the face of this, the communist leader said, we need a union of the forces of the left because the positions of the right in this country are leading to situations in which freedom is being restricted. The evidence of UCD's turn to the right can be seen, according to Santiago Carrillo, in the workers statute, the statute for centers of education, the brake being applied on autonomies, and the leaning toward the Atlantic alliance. Carrillo added that the brake on autonomies especially affects Galicia for which the same statute attained by the Basques and the Catalonians should have been prepared. It is precisely this, he added, which imposes upon us communists the obligation to say no to the autonomy statute.

The PCE secretary general said finally to a question asked by the EFE agency, that at the moment there is no possibility of an all-party government [gobierno de concentration] in Spain just as there was none before when we asked for one. But he added: Logically an all-party government would be good for the country and help it to get over the difficult crisis situation which it is experiencing.

CP'S WERNER 'DEPLORES' USSR ACTION IN AFGHANISTAN

LD290931 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 24 Jan 80 p 6 LD

[Kaa Eneberg report: "Far From Cold War"]

[Text] Strong forces are working for a return to the cold war. If such a situation arises it may be of interest to reconsider security issues, and then increased expenditure on the Swedish Armed Forces may be discussed.

That is what Lars Werner of the Left Party-Communists [VPK] said at a press conference Wednesday. It has been arranged that the VPK's motions would be presented. Among them is the annual defense motion. This year's motion demands a reduction of military expenditure by almost 2 billion Swedish kronor.

It also demands that production and further development of the Viggen system be halted. In addition, the government ought to instruct the defense committee to reduce further military spending.

"We continue to demand reduced military expenditure since we consider that we are still far from a cold war situation," the VPK leader later explained to DAGENS NYHETER.

Lars Werner, who was quick to publish his condemnation of the Soviet Union's incursion into Afghanistan, believes that "detente trends" are dominant in Europe. It is only globally that a deterioration has taken place, Werner opines.

He drew attention to the fact that the FRG's Helmut Schmidt has raised a warning finger against President Jimmy Carter. Even the French continue to support the policy of detente.

As regards Europe, the "forces of peace" are still stronger than those who are working for a return to the cold war of the fifties, Werner believes.

Among the forces of peace Lars Werner counts the labor movement in capitalist countries, the socialist states and the progressive forces in the Third World.

Lars Werner would also include the Soviet Union among the forces working for peace. The incursion into Afghanistan was a deplorable digression from this policy, clearly a wrong decision, Werner said.

Yes, it deplorably discredits the Soviet work for disarmament and clearly makes it difficult to continue work in this sphere.

"But Jimmy Carter and the U.S. administration have no right to try to assume a moral role. In recent decades the United States has tried to keep the cold war alive and has played the role of world policeman around the world."

O AGON: TURKS TRYING TO EXPEL GREEKS IN STROVILIA

NC270840 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 27 Jan 80 p 1 NC

[Text] The Turks have demanded that the inhabitants of Strovilia, near Famagusta, supply them with particulars and photographs in order to issue them "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" identity cards. In essence, this would mean recognition of the Denktas "state." This coercive move by the Turks is aimed at compelling the inhabitants of Strovilia to abandon the area, with the ultimate goal of putting it under their direct control. According to authoritative reports, the people refuse to give in to the demands of the Turks, who continue to insist.

The Cyprus Government is aware of this Turkish action and has briefed the peace force and UN Secretary General Waldheim's special envoy in Cyprus, calling on them to protect by all means the Greek Cypriot inhabitants of Strovilia. The Strovilia area is considered to be part of the buffer zone, but until now its inhabitants had been free to enter the area. Strovilia is the last advanced "post" where Greeks are living prior to Famagusta. It is on the old Nicosia-Famagusta highway in the Ayios Nikolaos area, which is a British base.

PLO'S QADDUNI CONCLUDES ATHENS VISIT, DEPARTS

Statement Issued

AT291020 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 28 Jan 80 AT

[Text] The Greek Government agreed in principle on establishing a PLO bureau in Athens. This is mentioned in a statement issued on the talks between Foreign Minister Yeoryios Rallis and PLO representative on political affairs Faruq Qaddumi. Qaddumi arrived in Greece yesterday on an invitation from Rallis.

The statement also mentions that Rallis and Qaddumi exchanged views on the Middle East issue and specifically on the Palestinian problem. Rallis reiterated Greece's position on the Middle East and stressed that Greek support of the national rights of the Palestinians is not an innovation adopted under the pressure of developments but is a firm political line based upon traditional Greek-Arab friendship.

Qaddumi assessed the Palestinian problem and its latest developments and expressed thanks for the position adopted by Greece on this problem and for the support of Palestinian positions in international forums and in inter-governmental contacts.

In a toast during a luncheon given in honor of Qaddumi, Rallis stressed that the visit of the PLO representative on political affairs offered an opportunity for hearing the weighty and significant views of this organization on the Palestinian problem and on the methods with which it is being handled. This is of interest to our country not only because of its well known traditional ties with the Arabs but also because Greece believes that uncertainty creates dangers for the area and world peace.

I particularly believe, Rallis said, that under today's conditions in the Middle East, which create concern, the necessity for a solution to the Palestinian problem appears more imperative than ever before. In conclusion Rallis expressed the wish for the successful outcome of the PLO's aspirations for recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people.

Replying to the toast Qaddumi said that the Arabs and the Greeks are connected by traditional ties and that the Palestinians are a peaceful people. Despite this they have remained without a fatherland for the past 30 years. In conclusion he lauded the spirit of mutual understanding and trust and expressed thanks for Greek support and assistance on the Palestinian problem. Qaddumi was visited by PASOK Chairman Papandreou in the afternoon.

APOYEVMATINI REPORTS USSR RENEGING ON OIL DEAL

AT281550 Athens APOYEVMATINI in Greek 28 Jan 80 p 24 AT [Text] In the end we will not receive 2 million tons of oil from Russia as agreed upon between the two countries during Karamanlis' visit to Moscow last October. Instead we will limit ourselves to the 1-2 million tons which the Soviet Union supplies annually.

Cancellation of this agreement was announced to the Greek Government by businessman Mamidhakis, who transports Soviet oil to our country, immediately upon his return from a recent visit to the Soviet Union. Mamidhakis stressed to the appropriate government representatives that the Soviet Government will continue supplying our country with 1,200,000 tons of oil every year as it has done in the past.

Cancellation of the agreement heightened Karamanlis' interest. After being informed he immediately summoned the Soviet ambassador to Athens and handed him a personal protest stressing that the Greek Government based its programming for the supply of liquid fuels for 1980 onwards upon that agreement.

An authoritative government spokesman who was asked about the matter confirmed the report, adding that as yet there was no information on the Soviet Government's response to the Greek prime minister's protest.

As is known the agreement for the increase of the quantity of oil our country obtains from the Soviet Union from 1.2 million tons to 2 million tons was agreed upon last October between the prime ministers of the two countries, Kosygin and Karamanlis, during the latter's visit to Moscow.

[Text] The Greek Government considers the agreement with the Soviet Union, for the supply of 2 million tons of oil, as still in force. This was reported yesterday by an authoritative government source who denied an afternoon press report about a Karamanlis protest to the Soviet ambassador because "Moscow reneged on the agreement." The same source added that the Greek Government is waiting for the Soviet side to set the date for handing over the oil and the facts pertaining to the quality of oil to be supplied.

U.S. PRESIDENTIAL OLYMPICS DELEGATION ARRIVES IN ATHENS

AT291339 Athens NEWS in English 29 Jan 80 p 4 AT

[Text] Ms. Anne Wexler, heading the US delegation for the Olympic torch ceremony, said on arrival in Athens Monday: "It is a great privilege to lead this presidential delegation to Greece--a delegation which will have the honor of carrying the Olympic flame from ancient Olympia to the XIII Winter Olympic games in Lake Placid.

I believe it is fitting that we make this pilgrimage to the birth place of these games in order to be given this flame symbolizing the Olympic ideal, an ideal which inspires us all.

"President Carter has reaffirmed the commitment of the United States to the principles and purposes of the Olympic games. In these difficult times, it is exceedingly important that the true noble spirit of the Olympics be preserved. Therefore, he also urged that a permanent home for the summer games be established in Greece. I know this is a position with which your government concurs. The Olympics are a special part of the heritage of which you are so justly proud. On behalf of all the members of this delegation and on behalf of all Americans, I wish to thank you for permitting us to share it with you."

KARAMANLIS ADDRESSES PARTY PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

AT261540 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 26 Jan 80 pp 1, 3 AT

[Text] Karamanlis is still pondering whether to remain prime minister or try for the presidency. He stated this himself yesterday while speaking to the New Democracy parliamentary group, and this is the first time that he has spoken officially about a possible move to the state's supreme office next May when Tsatsos' term expires. Karamanlis said that his final decision will be determined by this duty to the country and by developments in our national life, and that for this reason he could not make "premature decisions." At the same time, the prime minister once again declared that the current parliament will exhaust its 4-year term, that the issue of a change in the electoral system will not arise, and that the democratic organization of New Democracy guarantees its cohesion and longevity. After the meeting of the parliamentary group, the following statement was issued:

Speaking about the international situation, the chairman of the party stressed the following: "The international economic crisis has already become a political crisis and is developing in a way that is creating dangers even for world peace. In view of this crisis, one would expect increased prudence, responsibility and vigilance by all citizens, first because this is the only way to limit the dangers which threaten our economy, and second because, for reasons beyond our control, some of our national issues remain in suspense. Instead, a competition can be observed by egotistical and demagogic claims which increase difficulties and threaten our economy with dislocation. These manifestations have now become fashionable and many times have acquired the form of open provocation to the state.

"However, it is time everyone realized their responsibilities, both those who provoke strikes and especially those who follow them and subjugate national solidarity to trade union solidarity. Everyone should understand that by their behavior they do not hurt the government, which is merely the administrator of the country's affairs, but that they hurt themselves and the country. They threaten to rock the economy and to weaken democracy.

"Referring to the economic situation, the chairman of the party used specific figures to analyze the progress made in the last 5 years and the difficulties which the international economy--and especially the energy crisis--caused the Greek economy. Karamanlis stressed that the government's incomes policy contributed to inflation because by aiming for a quick increase in national income, it provided remuneration twice as high as the cost of living. It is true that our country's per capital income rose from $2,160 in 1974 to $4,080 in 1979, but it is equally true that this policy has contributed to the overheating of our economy and to the exacerbation of the inflationary spiral.

"These truths should not be forgotten by the people who are putting forth claims that are incompatible with current reality. They also should not forget that a further increase in the budget as a result of excessive expenditures will hurt them too, because it will dissipate the increases they will receive. Those people who ask for absolute freedom of imports should think likewise, because if our foreign exchange reserves are exhausted their shops will not remain closed for only 24 hours, but permanently.

"The measures the government is taking are similar to measures by other countries, the prime minister stressed, and they are not creating perceptible difficulties in daily life. They aim at limiting excesses and at averting painful and irreparable deprivations in the future. I am obliged to stress at this point, Karamanlis said, that if the critical nature of the circumstances is not understood and if the atmosphere created by trade unionism and political demagogy is not changed, we will naturally have a deterioration in all sectors of our national life, and the avoidance of this danger is not the responsibility only of the government, but of all citizens.

"In connection with the political situation of the country, Party Chairman Karamanlis emphasized: "At this moment Greece has political stability and social tranquility. However, these benefits cannot be taken for granted in the future, too. Their fate will depend on the behavior of the people and the country's political forces.

"In any case, he added, the dominant presence of New Democracy on the country's political scene will always constitute a guarantee for the normal development of our national life. It is precisely this which increases the responsibilities of all of us toward the party and, consequently, toward the country. It compels us to forge the party's unity and struggle for the expansion of its already great and stable popular foundation. Certainly this is made easy for us by the party's democratic organization which, regardless of developments, guarantees not only the party's cohesion but also its long life.

"And because recently, the prime minister concluded, there has been a lot of talk about my own course, I should tell you that I have no personal aspirations. If I had, the policy I have followed since I returned to Greece would have been different. My course has been determined by my duty toward the country and my duty has been determined by the developments in our national life. Granted this, I cannot and I am not entitled to make premature decisions on this issue.

"The chairman of the party then recommended that the deputies increase their efforts to propagate the party's principles and publicize the government's task. He also recommended that the deputies undertake a broad counterattack of enlightenment to protect the people from deception. Finally, in reply to a relevant question by a deputy, Prime Minister Karamanlis made the following statement: For the government, the issue of premature elections and the issue of a change in the electoral system do not exist."

ERKMEN, TFSC'S DENKTAS RETURN FROM ISLAMABAD CONFERENCE

[Text] A draft resolution denouncing the Soviet intervention in independent and sovereign Afghanistan and calling for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan was discussed at the Islamic countries foreign ministers conference, which met in extraordinary session. Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen, who represented Turkey at the conference, and the president of the Turkish Federate State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, who attended the conference as the special guest of the Islamic Conference Secretariat General, have returned to Turkey. Erkmen and Denktas made statements to the TRT about their impressions on the conference. Erkmen said the following:

[Begin Erkmen recording] During my 3-day stay in Islamabad I held many bilateral contacts. Among my contacts the one which might seem most interesting to you is the one with Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Al Sa'ud. During our meeting we discussed the activities of the Islamic conference as well as issues concerning the two countries. During the meeting Prince Al Sa'ud said that Turkey might benefit from the OPEC fund, which is not the case now. Turkey was unable to benefit from this fund, which aids undeveloped countries affected by the increasing oil prices, because it was not considered an undeveloped country. Al Sa'ud told me that a decision has been made to enable Turkey to benefit from this fund to alleviate the difficulties it encounters due to its (?foreign exchange deficit). Thus, Turkey will be exempt from the additional increase in the price of oil. We will have the opportunity to purchase oil at more convenient prices.

At the meeting I held with the Iranian deputy foreign minister we discussed the difficulties between Iran and the United States. We both share the view that these difficulties should be solved through peaceful means. At the meetings I held with the foreign ministers of other countries, the activities of the Islamic conference and the global situation was discussed. [end recording]

Denktas said that the Islamic conference had achieved its aims and that it had been very beneficial. Denktas expressed his views as follows:

[Begin Denktas recording] I held bilateral talks. These talks were very beneficial. I hope that the outcome of these talks will soon be felt. The Islamic world is gradually grasping the realities of Cyprus. I invited the representatives of many countries to Cyprus. They will come officially or unofficially and observe the realities on the spot.

The recent events in Afghanistan also occurred some time ago in Cyprus, in 1963, when the Greek Cypriots invited Greece to Cyprus and they jointly attacked the Turkish Cypriots. History has repeated itself. Had the world, and especially the nonalined group, been aware of the Cyprus realities, had the Islamic countries within the nonalined group seen the Cyprus realities on time and had they taken the necessary measures, then the events in Afghanistan might not have happened. The whole problem is one of approach in such issues. The issue is to understand the situation and to struggle against the attack in unity and solidarity. I hope and wish that the Afghan people will soon attain their freedom, that the Soviet Union will withdraw from Afghanistan, that the United States will lift its pressure on the region and that our Muslim brothers will be left free to determine their rights [as heard]. [end recording]

Erkmen Opposes Economic Sanctions

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen has reiterated that the situation in Afghanistan is contrary to the principles of international law and of self-determination. Erkmen, who participated in the Islamic foreign ministers meeting, which met in extraordinary session in Islamabad, returned to Turkey early this morning. In a statement in Istanbul, Erkmen said that in his address to the Islamic conference he had asked for the immediate withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. Referring to the issue of Afghan refugees in Pakistan, Erkmen said that there were close to 600,000 refugees in Pakistan. He said: Women, children and elderly people make up 85 percent of the refugees. Therefore, this issue is very important for humanitarian and seasonal reasons. Undoubtedly, it is the duty of all to resolve this humanitarian issue.

Erkmen said that he had also pointed out at the conference that the economic sanctions being imposed or which might be imposed on Iran would not be beneficial and that Turkey would not participate in any sanction against Iran.

LOAN AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH UNITED STATES IN ANKARA

TA281756 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 28 Jan 80 TA

[Text] A Turkish-U.S. loan agreement totaling $98 million, which is the second part of economic aid worth $248 million the United States has promised to extend to Turkey within the framework of the OECD, has been signed in Ankara. The agreement was signed by Finance Ministry Under Secretary Turhan Kivanc on behalf of Turkey and by the U.S. charge d'affaires in Ankara, Robert Dillon, on behalf of the United States.

Speaking at the signing ceremony, Kivanc said that the agreement constituted another step forward in the developing Turkish-U.S. cooperation. Recalling that Turkey had taken the necessary measures to surmount the economic difficulties it is facing, Kivanc expressed the belief that the United States will continue its financial contribution.

Dillon said that his country will exert every possible effort to help Turkey solve its economic difficulties. He noted that with the recently announced economic measures Turkey had shown its determination to solve its problems.

Of the $98 million being extended $63 million will be a loan and the remaining $35 million will be a grant. The loan will be paid within 20 years at an interest rate of 5 percent with a grace period of 5 years. The aid will be effective immediately.

DEMIREL FURTHER EXPLAINS RECENT ECONOMIC MEASURES

TA281242 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 28 Jan 80 TA

[Text] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel continued his explanations today regarding the economic decisions made by the government. In his second news conference on the subject at the prime minister's office today Demirel announced that the echelle mobile system will be implemented in order to reduce the adverse effects of inflation on salaried persons; taxing will be amended to secure a more just system; the decree--which carries the weight of law--on the nationalization of mines will be annulled and the private sector will be allowed to manufacture cigarettes.

During the first part of his news conference, Demirel explained the measures, which he regards as essential targets in order to overcome the economic crisis. Later he briefed the journalists on the new economic decisions which were made in view of these targets.

Pointing out that the foreign currency rate was determined in accordance with the accelerated rate of inflation since the end of 1977 and with the addition of a certain margin, Demirel said that this will increase exports and foreign currency income from Turkish workers abroad. Noting that the reduction of the import stamp duty from 25 percent to 1 percent will curb price increases and provide a relative advantage for exporters, Demirel stated that the economic decisions include measures which grant facilities to exporters and industrialists and which provide a new and simple system enabling Turkish workers abroad to purchase housing and business facilities.

Commenting on the measures that will eliminate the black market and the two-price system, Demirel explained that subsidies have been largely eliminated and that the prices of certain products and services will be set by public economic enterprises. Demirel noted that the elimination of subsidies and the readjustment to market prices will ease the pressure on the Central Bank and the state budget, will drain the sources directed to the black market and will encourage new investments by increasing income from taxes.

Referring to the government decision on oil explorations, Demirel said: A very large part of oil licenses are granted to the Turkish Petroleum Corporation. The Turkish Petroleum Corporation and Turkey's resources are not suited for intensified exploration in all these fields. Digging 1,000 wells annually is costing a minimum of $2 billion. The economic measures will invite experienced foreign companies, provide possibilities for cooperation with the Turkish Petroleum Corporation as well as encourage speedy new agreements.

Demirel said that these measures will straighten out the economy to a large extent, however, certain measures will only be implemented after ratification by parliament and work is under way on this matter.

[From "Insight Into the News" program]

[Text] RPP leader Sulent Ecevit held a news conference at the parliament today and expressed his views on the new economic measures and replied to the views expressed by Prime Minister Demirel at a news conference yesterday. Ecevit said:

[Begin Ecevit recording] Honorable Prime Minister Demirel created a bitter and clear picture at his news conference yesterday. He said that the recent price hikes and measures, which have made life intolerable for the majority of the population, were implemented out of responsibility to Turkey. He added that these measures were taken because he was a conscientious statesman and because Turkey's interests took precedence over government and party interests. He noted that his conscience did not permit him to enjoy life in the face of the bitter realities. Honorable Demirel is now trying to portray as an example of courage the bitter medicines he is offering the people. He pronounced as madness the much weaker medicines we were obliged to force on the public in a bid to cure the deep wounds in our economy caused by the Demirel governments. Is Demirel, who was talking about conscience at his news conference yesterday, feeling the least guilty for the names he called us during our term in government? Demirel, criticizing the much milder price hikes which the RPP government had introduced, said: These are not price hikes; this is a robbery. Once you kill citizens with these price hikes you cannot revive them.

Now Demirel is saying that there is no way out and that those who know another way out should come out and say it. A month before he assumed power, Demirel said that when the RPP government is eliminated so will be our problems. After forming the government he promised something close to paradise within 100 days. However, on his 77th day in power the problems have not been eliminated. On the contrary he has acknowledged the fact that the economy is paralyzed.

The truth is that those who claimed that all problems would be solved with the elimination of the RPP government have introduced to the economy a period of total obscurity. Factories are being closed down one after the other, production has been greatly reduced, exports have regressed and the amount of foreign currency secured by our workers abroad has drastically dropped. With the temperature at 20 below zero, citizens are shivering in hospitals and their homes. They are shivering because there is no heating. Schools were closed because of the heating oil shortage. Transportation has been greatly affected as well. The people's suffering--due to shortages and price hikes--has grown like an avalanche since the day the Justice Party government was formed. The recent chain of price hikes has made life intolerable for the majority of the population.

The economic and financial decision which the Justice Party government began to take on its 75th day in power will create crises and problems even beyond those created by the devaluation and the price hikes. The government policy determined by these decisions is not yet fully apparent. In my news conference today I feel obligated to draw attention to this attitude which might endanger democracy, drag the country into worse crises and totally eliminate the state's role in the economy. This attitude ignores one of the basic principles of our Constitution, namely the concept of a social state. The state can no longer function as a state. Even in countries in which the capitalist system is fully exercised, the state has certain basic economic and financial functions and duties. However, with the government's present attitude these functions are, to a great extent, being transferred to a powerful branch of the private sector. In short, the state is being eliminated from the economy. It is being eliminated in a way which is alien even to countries that have a fully capitalistic system. From now on certain big capital circles and the foreign firms with which these circles will cooperate will, to a great extent, be administering and giving direction to the Turkish economy and society.

A more extreme version of the system which has gone bankrupt even in South American dictatorships is now being imported to Turkey. The state of anarchy that the honorable Demirel is frequently complaining about will now reach frightful dimension in the streets as well as in the economy. The mounting anarchy in our economy will undoubtedly fuel the anarchy in the street and the society. As a matter of fact, honorable Demirel also acknowledged this reality for the first time yesterday. While streets, schools and government offices are being surrendered to the grey wolves [Nationalist Action Party emblem], the economy is being surrendered to other wolves.

Honorable Demirel said: There is nothing else to be done. If anyone knows of another way out let him speak up. Having observed the measures taken and the political decision made until now, we believe that the Demirel government has taken the riskiest and most rash path. Instead of increasing the role of the state at this time of shortages and economic crisis, the Demirel government has chosen to make the state ineffective. It has surrendered the economy and even the state to certain powerful interests. It has almost destroyed the production and investment opportunities of a large sector of farmers and industrialists with limited power and possibilities. A more irresponsible, primitive and dangerous attitude than the one that brought Turkey to the brink of bankruptcy at the end of 1977 is being adopted. The Turkish state and people have no tolerance for such an adventure at a time when Turkey, the region and the world are going through such a grave crisis. Waging an effective struggle within the framework of democratic principles has become essential if democracy, the state and the people are to be protected. The RPP will make all efforts to fulfill its duties on the issue. [end recording]

COMMISSIONER VIEWS COOPERATION BETWEEN EC, YUGOSLAVIA

DW300900 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0641 GMT 29 Jan 80 DW

[Excerpts from interview by reporter Burchardt with Wilhelm Haferkamp, commissioner of the European Community, in Brussels--recorded]

[Text] [Question] For years it was impossible, at least it seemed to be, to conclude a cooperation treaty between Yugoslavia and the European Community. Is some outside political pressure necessary always before something happens, as now with the Afghanistan crisis and its possible consequences for Yugoslavia, before the European Community makes up its mind to step matters up?

[Answer] It is correct that we have been discussing it for a long time. I would say that the other important consideration is the fact that the acceleration that has taken place was due to world political events. In effect, the discussion here in Brussels between national experts with a view to certain products and sectors is suddenly being viewed from the political side. We are grateful that the governments have told their experts from the economic and agricultural ministries to step matters up a bit.

[Question] Within what period of time do you think it will be possible to sign a treaty?

[Answer] A number of positions are still open, but we will try hard to take care of that quickly, which means finding solutions that will be acceptable to both sides. The decision of the foreign ministers of the Community has given us the opportunity, thank God, to speed matters up. Yugoslav member of the Executive Council Andov has agreed to meet and discuss our mutual positions if we deem it necessary. That may very well be the case on Friday in Brussels.

[Question] How do you think the cooperation treaty will develop in the next 5 years?

[Answer] In the field of trade it will certainly open up chances for Yugoslavia to eliminate the deficit it has vis-a-vis the European Community--after all, it is $3 billion annually--without this creating dangers for our economy in sectors that are difficult anyway. Certain procedures have been agreed on with the Yugoslavs in this respect, such as mixed final consultation s and the like. It is important for us to appear honest partners with equal rights. We and the Yugoslavs must accept each other as partners with equal rights. I think we have achieved that in the texts we have prepared. In addition, there will be chapters dealing with financial cooperation which will involve the investment and credit bank of the European Community.

There will be cooperation in the field of transport, the development of tourism and so on. There will be a mixed commission. The European Parliament made the request for parliamentary cooperation also. So something is under way here that will go beyond the exchange of merchandise. Cooperation with Yugoslavia will take place on a much broader basis, and between partners with equal rights.

SCHMIDT-HONECKER MEETING NOT TO TAKE PLACE 'FOR TIME BEING'

[Text] Bonn--The meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SED General Secretary Erich Honecker, which they had both agreed would take place early this year, will not take place for the time being. Government Spokesman Armin Gruenewald told the press in Bonn today that Schmidt and the chairman of the GDR Council of State had agreed "not to set the date for the planned meeting."

Gruenewald said, however, that an agreement on the planned meeting, which both sides considered desirable and in their mutual interests, was possible in the course of the year. According to Gruenewald, the GDR wanted "to remain flexible with regard to the date." The Federal Government appreciated this.

Gruenewald's statement suggested that the initiative for the postponement of an agreed date at the present stage of tension in East-West relations came from the GDR. Gruenewald said the agreement between the chancellor and Honecker took place "via the usual contacts." They had not spoken to one another on the telephone.

Gruenewald said the important thing with regard to the future discussion of a date was that the meeting must take place "under the most favorable conditions possible," particularly in view of the progress in relations that Bonn was striving for. He did not want to define these "favorable conditions" more closely, but said that this included the fact that conditions in the course of the year might be more favorable than they are now.

According to Gruenewald, Schmidt and Honecker are convinced that the meeting will benefit the development of goodneighborly relations between the two German states in the interests of peace and the people. Therefore, the two sides could "certainly agree on a date suitable for both sides in the course of this year."

Gruenewald did not rule out a visit to the GDR by the chancellor even during the federal election campaign this fall. He did not consider the election campaign to be an important criterion. If a suitable date fell within this period, there would be a meeting with Honecker despite the election campaign.

Gruenewald declined to link the postponement of the meeting between Schmidt and Honecker with Schmidt't meeting with Soviet party and state held Leonid Brezhnev in the Soviet Union, which is also planned for this year. In contrast to the GDR, there had been no discussions with the Soviet side about a date. It was international practice for the host to make the first moves on proposing a date.

It is thought in Bonn that Honecker's desire to postpone the agreement on a date did not come as a surprise to the Federal Government. It had been rumored that the chancellor thought that in view of the crisis in East-West relations, Honecker's scope in the relationship with Moscow might be restircted in the area of inter-Gemeran relations.

GENSCHER OPPOSES BREAKING OFF CONTACTS WITH USSR

LD301258 Hamburg DPA in German 1118 GMT 30 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has come out against the demand by some opposition members that the Soviet Union should be punished for its intervention in Afghanistan by the breaking off of contacts.

In an interview for the weekly newspaper DIE ZEIT, prereleased by the FDP, Genscher says today that especially at a critical time it is necessary to utilize as many contacts as possible to avoid conflicts through misunderstandings. "It is not positions that are clear and firm that are dangerous, instead it is the nurturing and arousing of false hopes and fears."

Genscher opposes the view that the cancellation of his planned visit to Prague is a sign that the crisis is beginning to affect the core of detente. He stresses that the cancellation by the Czechoslovaks changes nothing in his basic view, which is that all available opportunities for talks should be utilized. This also applies to the meeting between Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker and to the CSCE followup conference in Madrid.

On the offer of a "joint foreign policy" made by Franz-Josef Strauss, CSU chairman and opposition candidate for the chancellorship, Genscher says that in the wake of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, it was certainly sensible to make the common positions of the governing coalition and opposition parties apparent, but he does not see this as a kind of "cogoverning by the opposition." However, there was a "joint responsibility" in the differing functions of government and opposition.

Genscher considers the proposal by some opposition politicians that the Federal Republic participate in a NATO "intervention corps" to be "politically dangerous, legally impermissible and strategically false." The Federal Republic's important task in the alliance was in central Europe.

COMMENTATOR VIEWS UPCOMING HUNGARIAN FOREIGN MINISTER'S VISIT

DW301109 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 30 Jan 80 p 4 DW

[Commentary signed JR: "Budapest Weather Report"]

[Text] Prague has canceled Genscher's visit, Lambsdorff called off his trip to Warsaw and Ehrenberg told Moscow he would come later. Whether the federal chancellor will be welcome to Honecker in February and to Brezhnev later this spring--who can know that? The political tourism of Bonn's ministers does not depend merely on their free time, nor on the desire of the presumed hosts to see them, it now depends also on the solidarity they must now show vis-a-vis the United States. Perhaps, however, the Americans will permit a softer position, and if the federal foreign minister says that the political instruments that have been created between West and East must stand the test, particularly in the present crisis, everybody will know that Genscher is sitting on packed bags.

But where to? At present it is a matter of waiting because one cannot be a guest whenever one wishes. Hungarian Foreign Minister Frigyes Puja is supposed to come to Bonn on 7 February. That will be a very important event if it really takes place. It was said in Bonn that if Puja comes, it will be a sign indicating the interest of the East bloc in continuing contacts with the West. Perhaps, however, it would be just further evidence of the undisputed talent of the Hungarians for making the best of everything, and for not rejecting the second best solution either. Did not Janos Berecz and his deputy, Gyula Horn, who are directing foreign policy in the Central Committee apparatus, say so nicely about Carter that he has returned the king's crown to Hungary and that Hungary was given most-favored-nation status, that he does not want war and that nothing could be felt in Budapest of the President's tough measures against the Soviet Union?

Well, so one can bet that Hungary also does not want to have war, one can also bet that Puja will come to Bonn if that can be arranged. But one cannot bet that the weather in Moscow will be the same as it is in Budapest.

DEFENSE MINISTER, OTHERS OUTLINE STRATEGY FOLLOWING AFGHANISTAN

Apel Interview

DW310940 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 1240 GMT 30 Jan 80 DW

[Correspondent Manz interview with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The fall of man has come: The Red army is in Afghanistan. Can NATO strategy and the Bundeswehr's role within NATO remain as they have been in the past 5 years?

[Answer] Beyond any doubt the Soviet Union has created a highly dangerous situation by its invasion of Afghanistan, a situation which may well entail further complications. This is why it is very important to react with all determination, especially to make it clear to the Soviet Union that we cannot tolerate what it has started in Afghanistan. On the other hand, nothing specifically has changed for the alliance. Here in central Europe, in this particular region, the Bundeswehr is living up to its mission, and the defense capability of the alliance continues. NATO's December decisions on eliminating the deficit in the medium-range sector remain valid. This is also why no measures can be directly derived from the events in Afghanistan. Of course we know that we are called upon to contribute to the stabilization of that region, albeit not with military means.

[Question] On a medium-term basis, however, the transport routes for raw materials will be imperiled. Let me just mention oil as an example. Can we be so calm about this? Must we leave it up to the Americans to maintain security in that respect?

[Answer] Surely there is a sort of division of labor here among the countries that depends on the oil supply from that region. But it is necessary in this connection to emphasize the following point: All developing countries, all Western industrial nations and Japan receive their oil from that region. This alone makes it evident that NATO cannot be called upon to insure the oil supply by istelf. Besides, there is just one country in the world, namely our leading power, the United States, that has the military potential and political options to exercise a protective role in this field. This makes it clear that it is not up to NATO, that the treaty area of NATO must not be expanded. By the same token, it must remain clear that this challenge cannot be answered in a military way alone. The important thing is to stabilize the regions economically and socially as well, we must contribute our share to this end.

[Answer] It would be sensible for the Union parties eventually to make up their minds in this respect on what they really want. Several opposition speakers have made conflicting statements in this respect. You quoted Dregger. Strauss maintains much more restraint in this matter. We would like the opposition to know what it wants. Our positions as the coalition, and also as Social Democrats, are clear: No Bundeswehr soldiers outside the NATO area, no extension of the NATO area, but sympathy for the actions of the Americans, solidarity with the Americans and necessarily also consideration for how we might help the Americans somewhere else if need be.

[Question] In our talk you twice mentioned stabilization of the countries involved in the Third World, stabilization with other than military means. How is that supposed to work?

[Answer] Military means certainly always play a role, particularly when an aggressive imperialist power such as the Soviet Union is involved, but this alone does not suffice. Countries like Pakistan, India and Turkey mainly need social and economic aid. The military cannot resolve the problems in the long run. We, as one of the richest countries of the world, are called upon to make the necessary contribution.

[Question] How far can we go with regard to Pakistan, for example? Pakistan is building the bomb, as one hears everywhere. Can we continue to supply arms?

[Answer] We do not supply any arms at all. We will stick to our arms embargo policy forbidding the supply of arms to areas of tension. But as before--we have been pursuing a sensible and continuous policy--we can help Pakistan to master its social and economic problems. Besides, information on whether or not Pakistan is building the bomb is more than dubious.

SPD, Union Officials

[Text] Bonn--Following the election of the new Iranian president, Bani-Sadr, the SPD has proclaimed its readiness to cooperate with Iran, according to foreign policy expert Marie Schlei, in her party's press service. The Iranian people have made an unequivocal, democratic decision. "If the new government wishes, it will find us ready for reliable cooperation."

SPD disarmament expert Alfons Pawelszyk refuted speculations regarding alleged U.S. plans to speed up the modernization of medium-range nuclear missiles, decided on by NATO, due to the Soviet march into Afghanistan. SPD foreign policy spokesman Peter Corterier welcomed the Islamic Foreign Ministers Conference's "strong condemnation" of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. He concluded that the Federal Government and coalition are right in pointing out that the important thing now is the reaction of the directly affected Third World countries.

In the view of the Union's foreign policy expert, Werner Marx, the West must show the Soviet Union its determination not to accept any further military actions. Any further step, for example, in the direction of Pakistan, Iran or Yugoslavia would bring war in its wake. Matthias Wissmann, chairman of the Young Union, has come out against further credit agreements with the Soviet Union.

The inevitable consequences of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan should not be borne by athletics alone, he said.

The Union's defense policy expert, Willi Weiskirch, welcomed the drastic increase in U.S. defense expenditures. The Americans are thus demonstrating that they are living up to their leadership role in the alliance. The European NATO partners, for their part, cannot exclude themselves from assuming new burdens and sacrifices.

COSSIGA HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE FOLLOWING LONDON TALKS

ID302119 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2000 GMT 30 Jan 80 ID

Cossiga and Mrs Thatcher expressed the hope that Europe will take a common stand on the international crisis, but certain differences have also emerged. In Cossiga's view solidarity between Europe and the United States is necessary but it should be in the framework of the policy of detente, which is meant to be a search for peace. Cossiga, who stated that he shares the position on Afghanistan taken by L'UNITA, the Communist paper, appeared to be concerned about the consequences of a response to the USSR like the one indicated by Mrs Thatcher. The British prime minister confirmed her government's hard line and Britain's intention to adopt measures of retaliation not only regarding the Olympic games but also in the economic field and the delivery of high technology.

As regards EEC problems, the London government was less intransigent in their renewed request for a reduction in contributions to the EEC, and Cossiga pledged that the Italian Government will consider the matter and that it will be willing to attempt to lessen the differences among the various European partners.

PCI-PCE COMMUNIQUE ON BERLINGUER-CARRILLO TALKS ISSUED

ID301603 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 27 Jan 80 p 17 ID

[Text of 26 January PCI-PCE joint communique--first paragraph is L'UNITA introduction]

[Text] Rome--The following communique was released at the end of yesterday's conversations between Comrades Santiago Carrillo and Enrico Berlinguer:

Within the framework of periodic PCI-PCE consultations, Comrades Santiago Carrillo and Enrico Berlinguer met yesterday in Rome at the PCI Directorate headquarters. The meeting was attended by the following comrades: Manuel Azcarate, for the PCE and Gian Carlo Pajetta, Paolo Bufalini and Antonio Rubbi for the PCI.

During the conversations, which took place in the atmosphere of cordiality and friendship which characterizes relations between the parties, a broad exchange of information and opinions took place on the situation in both countries, the respective parties' policy and the latest grave developments in the international situation.

The Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, with regard to which both parties confirmed their shared verdict of censure, is the latest episode in the exacerbation of political and military tensions.

Both delegates stressed that the greatest concern is prompted by the latest thrust toward new weapons, especially following the grave decision taken in Brussels by the Atlantic alliance in connection with the "Euromissiles" and the U.S. shelving of SALT-II ratification; the accentuation of the conflict between the two major powers; the aggravation of tension in various areas of the world and the increasingly frequent tendency to intervene with acts of force in international relations, which increases the threats to world peace.

The U.S. threats of reprisals in various fields, to the extent of boycotting the Olympics and President Carter's avowed intention to propose U.S. supremacy in world affairs and in the quest not for military balance but for military superiority constitute a disturbing factor in the exacerbation of international relations and the deterioration of relations between the two major powers.

All this is having negative repercussions on the climate of international relations, on the process of detente, on economic and cultural cooperation among states and peoples, and on the possibility of a new economic order. It is having severe repercussions in the countries' internal life, with the reemergence in Western countries of rigid tendencies, hermeticism and splits among the democratic forces and in other countries--as the Sakharov case shows--of the recourse to authoritarian and repressive measures damaging to the freedoms of expression.

Both delegations maintain that in this situation it is necessary to develop the utmost effort to insure mobilization, initiative and cooperation among all pacifist, democratic and progressive forces, so as to salvage detente and safeguard world peace.

The initiative must be aimed primarily at containing all military thrusts, at reestablishing conditions of full sovereignty in every country, at regulating current conflicts and tensions through political negotiation, at resuming the path of negotiation on nuclear and conventional weapons for their balanced and controlled reduction and at encouraging a policy of international cooperation in all fields.

An important role in pursuit of these objectives and for the reestablishment of East-West relations and the development of North-South relations can and must be played by Western Europe, by its workers and democratic, communist, socialist, social democratic and Christian-inspired forces.

In this context the PCI and PCE point out how these events emphasize the topicality of a strategy--the Eurocommunist strategy--centered on an understanding among the forces of the West European workers and democratic movement and the need to develop it further.

This is all the more urgent now that there is an extremely pressing need for action to salvage detente and peace and to tackle--in the interests of the great masses of workers and the defense and development of democracy--the increasingly grave crisis affecting Western Europe whose effects are being felt throughout the world. The PCI and PCE agree on the need to develop their close cooperation in this direction.

L'UNITA VIEWS IMPLICATIONS OF SAKHAROV'S EXILE

LD301515 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 24 Jan 80 p 18 LD

[Carlo Benedetti commentary: "Why Did They Want To Hit Sakharov?"]

[Text] Moscow--How long will Andrey Sakharov's period of restricted residence last? Will the official reasons for the measures taken against him be announced? What will the main charges be? Will there be a trial? Will the academician's wife also be involved? How will the members of the Academy of Sciences react? These are some of the many questions being asked now in Moscow. People are also wondering about the hastiness [dinamica] of the arrest and subsequent exile of the Soviet dissident leader. Indeed, following a rapid questioning at a rayon police headquarters, Sakharov was ordered to leave Moscow "immediately" and to settle in the city of Gorkiy with his wife.

The news, announced by the academician's mother-in-law Ruf Grigoryevna Bonner, has now been confirmed by the KGB and IZVESTIYA, which carries an article containing violent attacks on Sakharov.

But there are also other questions concerning the repercussions of this event. In Moscow it has always been said that Sakharov enjoyed--and still enjoys--respect and friendship within the Academy of Sciences, the top scientific body, composed of scholars and experts from the most important disciplines including the humanities and politics. But Sakharov earned this respect and friendship both through his scientific work (confirmed by several official forms of recognition, among other things) and through a form of conduct which made him "number one" dissident but also a leader who, from the outset, strove to take part in the domestic and international political debate in his own way. In short, a political man who waged a battle centering on the issue of the defense of human rights and the growth of a more flexible civic society.

In any case Sakharov has been--and still is--part of, and an original manifestation of, what we could describe as a kind of internal debate between the distant Kremlin leadership and a grassroots--admittedly not large--which speaks not only in terms of an attack on the government or of observing rights, but also in terms of efficiency, of the utilization of Soviet society's human, cultural and intellectual resources. The thread of this debate--characterized by tragic knots called trials of dissidents, imprisonment and expulsions--has, however, been suddenly severed. Its links with the international situation during the period of detente were obvious; it is equally obvious that the exacerbation of tension between the two major powers marks the reversal of a trend. IZVESTIYA accuses Sakharov of having "betrayed the country's interests," of being "an advocate of cold war," of being "a weapon in the psychological war which the United States is waging on the USSR" and of maintaining "unofficial" contacts "with the U.S. Embassy in Moscow."

To return to the administrative measures--that is, his exile--it could be said, perhaps, that something has broken in the relations which, for better or for worse, Sakharov established with the government, even managing to retain intact the privileges dictated by his position: academician's housing, honorific titles, use of a car and a guaranteed very high salary. We do not know exactly what happened. What is certain is that the IZVESTIYA writer does not help to shed any political light. So Sakharov's freedom of action is being limited for the time being. Not to mention the decision taken by the Supreme Soviet and the Council of Ministers to deprive him of all his decorations and state awards. This too is an exceptional measure (few similar instances can be recalled) which must have been the result of a decision taken not only at the top levels of the Soviet leadership but also within the Academy of Sciences itself.

OTHER PARTIES DO NOT FAVOR PR FILIBUSTER ATTEMPT

AU310858 Rome ANSA in English 0800 GMT 31 Jan 80 AU

[Excerpts] Rome, January 31 (ANSA)--A Radical Party [PR] proposal to withdraw the 7,500 amendments it has tabled to a government decree on antiterrorist measures on the condition that the government withdraw its request for a confidence motion has not received wide consensus among the other political parties.

As it stands now, it is most likely that the confidence motion and decrees will be approved in time.

A Socialist bid to hammer out a joint line for all the leftwing parties, including the Radicals, failed on Monday morning when the "PR" refused to give up its planned filibuster.

The Communist and Socialist parties met Tuesday and agreed that they would back the government in the confidence motion.

The Cossiga Cabinet is a minority coalition of the premier's own Christian Democrats (DC), Social Democrats (PSDI) and Liberals (PLI) with the parliamentary abstention of the Socialists (PSI) and Republicans (PRI).

Speaking with newsmen Wednesday, PCI lower house whip Ferinando Di Giulio said the communists' objective "is that the decrees be approved because otherwise it would score a success for terrorism and (the Radicals') obstructionism. The former is a tragic phenomenon. The latter is a dangerous phenomenon", Di Giulio said.

Meanwhile, the parliamentary debate on terrorism has not distracted the parties' attention from what is dubbed the "post-Cossiga" government alternatives, in connection with the PRI's proposed meetings among all the parties after the mid-February DC national congress.

PRI Secretary Giovanni Spadolini met yesterday with PSDI Secretary Pietro Longo whom he told that the Republican Party proposal is aimed at opening up a confrontation on a platform without prejudices on its possible outcomes since the PRI initiative "is totally independent from the catala of forumulas in which everything degenerates".

Communist Party leadership member Gerardo Chiaromonte criticized the PRI proposal and said that the party is willing to take part in the talks but will not accept manouevers of any kind. "We do not set any conditions, but we are not the ones who will have to make 'concessions' to be given the right to govern", Chiaromonte said.

INDUSTRY MINISTER: GOVERNMENT WILL DEFEND LIRA

AU310842 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 31 Jan 80 AU

[Text] Rome, January 31 (ANSA)--Industry Minister Antonio Bisaglia has confirmed the government's committment to defend the lira. Speaking before the Senate Budget Committee Wednesday, Bisaglia said that the European Monetary System (EMS) which went into effect in March of last year, is doing better than had been predicted.

Foreign Trade Minister Gaetano Stammati had made the same assessment of the Italian currency a few days ago saying that the lira is steady and strong in the "EMS" serpent.

"Reports of imminent devaluations are circulated purposefully by powerful debtors who hope for a devaluation", Bisaglia said.

AMARAL NOTES EUROPE'S 'GROWING INDIGNATION' AGAINST USSR

LD301834 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 30 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpts] On arrival from Strasbourg yesterday, the deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs, Freitas do Amaral spoke to reporters at Lisbon Airport.

[Begin Amaral recording] I had the opportunity of noting in Strasbourg the great interest and sympathy with which international circles--with the sole exception of the communists--are praising Portugal's new foreign policy for its clarity, its resolve and the strength of its positive character.

I also had the opportunity of noting in the Council of Europe, in the diplomatic missions accredited to the Council of Europe, and among the French public, a growing indignation and resolve against the attitudes adopted recently by the Soviet Union on both Afghanistan and the Sakharov affair. The condemnation of those attitudes in my Strasbourg speech as chairman of the ministerial committee of the Council of Europe was received with much applause. And if in the case of Afghanistan my words were merely a reiteration of the stand already taken by the ministerial committee, my remarks with regard to the Sakharov case constituted the first official pronouncement of the Council of Europe on the matter. And I had great pleasure in having the opportunity to speak them.

During the meeting we noted the Islamic countries' position adopted at the Islamabad conference--a position of outright condemnation of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and preparations for a decision to boycott the Olympic games. The countries represented in the Council of Europe will shortly be holding a conference of their ministers for sport with a view to considering the matter jointly and seeking to define a common stand. Portugal has not yet defined its position on the matter; it will be participating in the conference and in due course the Portuguese Government will make its position known.

In short, it is therefore apparent that the international reaction against these two recent attitudes of the Soviet Union is still growing and shows no signs of abating. Not only the United States and West Europe but also the great majority of Third World countries, namely the Islamic countries, and also some communist countries like the People's Republic of China, Romania and Yugoslavia--to name but three--have all clearly come out against the condemnable attitudes of the Soviet Union.

Similar reactions have been forthcoming from communist parties not totally alined [with the CPSU] such as the Italian and Spanish communist parties and from several well-known leftwing intellectuals not always associated with criticism of the Soviet Union such as Jean-Paul Sartre in France.

Virtually only the satellite countries of the USSR and the communist parties totally alined with Moscow have failed to react in this manner. The same thing, in fact, is happening in Portugal where condemnation has been expressed by the government, by the parties of the Democratic Alliance and by the Socialist Party; only the Communist Party has so far not condemned the Soviet Union's intervention. MAJOR OTELO ORGANIZES NEW POLITICAL PARTY

The organization proposed by Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho will be composed of the popular masses that do not identify themselves with any political force--be it that of the Portuguese Communist Party [PCP] or that of the Socialist Party. It will thus be a force that, benefitting from the experience of previous initiatives launched by Major Otelo--such as the creation of the Popular Unity Movement and the Workers Unitarian Organization--will seek to play an effective role in every area of the national political scene, and especially in the front of the electoral struggle for representation in the Assembly of the Republic.

The Popular Unity Force has thus been launched and will contest the next elections.

This morning Otelo made an appeal for organization: [Begin Otelo recording] Let us organize the Popular Unity Force. I urge you all to work in the organization of the great Popular Unity Force--a force that already exists in our country on a dispersed form. Let us be active in the countryside and in the factories; in the offices and civil service departments; on the docks and in the mines; in the schools and social clubs; in the urban districts and the rural villages; so that, on the basis of our force, we may contribute to building a new society.

However, if we are to have a unitarian and broad activity, we must position ourselves correctly within the context of internal and international circumstances that characterize the present moment. Let us mobilize ourselves toward concrete goals. To this end, I propose to all [words indistinct] who wish to commit themselves to the organization of the Popular Unity Force that they mobilize themselves around three central goals that can be described as follows: A new democratic practice; new economic and social policies; a new world role for Portugal. [end recording]

That was Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho who in his news conference also criticized the roles of the Socialist and Communist parties--and indeed described himself as an ideological enemy of the PCP leadership.

DENKTAS ARRIVES IN NICOSIA, COMMENTS ON ISLAMBAD CONFERENCE

TA102101 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 30 Jan 80 TA

[Text] President Denktas, who participated in the extraordinary meeting of the foreign ministers of Islamic countries on Afghanistan, as the official guest of the Secretariat of the Islamic conference, arrived on the island today. Pointing out that the magnitude of threats confronting the world were discussed in the Islamabad conference, President Denktas said that there was a similarity between events in Afghanistan and Cyprus. He recalled that as Greece was invited to Cyprus in 1963 under the pretext of a Turkish Cypriot uprising and had caused sufferings to the Turkish Cypriot community for 11 years, under the pretext of responding to the request for aid by the Afghan Government to deal with factions accused of being rebels, the Soviets had occupied Afghanistan. If this is a valid process, President Denktas said, then it is possible that AKEL could also engineer a coup in Cyprus, could accuse the Cypriots of being rebels and could invite the Soviets to Cyprus.

Pointing out that during his visit to Islamabad he had achieved constructive results from bilateral discussions, Denktas said that with the assistance of the Turkish foreign minister they had explained the Cyprus problem in detail. He added that the liberation struggle waged and being waged by the Turkish Cypriot community was appreciated by the Islamic countries. Denktas continued: We must take our place in the Islamic world.

Denktas was received at Ercan State Airport by Turkish Cypriot legislative assembly President Oguz Ramadan Korhan, Turkish Ambassador to Lefkosa [Nicosia] Inal Batu; Turkish Peace Forces Commander Lt Gen Kemal Yamak, acting Prime Minister Irsen Kucuk, Security Forces Commander Brig Gen Atilla Erdogan, ministers and other officials.

Atakol pointed out that these views were presented verbally and that no written document was handed to him. Atakol said that after assessing these views, he would announce the views of his government. He added that he could not add anything on this issue now.

AKEL LEADER HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE, EXPLAINS RESOLUTION

NC291848 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 29 Jan 80 NC

[Text] Speaking at a press conference today, AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou handed to journalists and analyzed for them the resolution of the recent fourth regular plenum of the AKEL Central Committee and the Central Control Committee.

Among other things, the resolution says that every assistance and facility must be consistently continued and given to the UN secretary general to aid in achieving resumption of the intercommunal talks, which must be carried out in a continuing and sustained manner and which must be substantive and constructive. The resolution adds: So that the efforts of the UN secretary general may be effective, the Greek Cypriot side must firmly insist on the four guidelines and on the statement of the president of the republic on 14 January 1980 calling for a biregional federation solution. The Greek Cypriot side must also proceed--with the assistance of constitutional experts--to work out comprehensive constitutional proposals for a biregional federation. These proposals should be submitted for discussion at the suitable moment during the intercommunal talks.

The resolution of the AKEL Central Committee and of the Central Control Committee endorses the measures of the president of the republic for rapprochement of Greek and Turkish Cypriots and suggests that they be implemented and that an overall program for rapprochement be devised and announced.

The resolution also favors real unity and a joint struggle based on the line and tactics charted by the National Council and the Council of Ministers, but objects to the participation of coupists and of supporters of a NATO'ite solution in such a front of unity. Finally, the resolution favors further internationalization of the Cyprus problem, holding an international conference on the external aspects of the problem and strengthening the defense organization.

PAPANDREOU INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN DEVELOPMENTS

AT281417 Athens KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 27 Jan 80 pp 1, 11 AT

[Exclusive interview granted to KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou on current developments; date not given]

[Excerpt] The Replies

Papandreou's replies to questions submitted by KIRIAKATIKI ELEVTHEROTIPIA on home and foreign developments and prospects were the following:

Papandreou--"What is characteristic of PASOK and what explains the impressive response of the Greek people to its policy is the movement's consequence and sincerity. The specific positions adopted by PASOK both inside as well as out of the Chamber of Deputies on the country's current problems are the result of a strategy which is developing on the basis of the proclamation of 3 September (1974). As a result PASOK is not likely to deviate from its basic program positions. Consequently it does not intend to make 'concessions' in order to facilitate its own advent to authority and its function as a government. Its basic and fundamental strategic goals are and will remain: national independence, achieving people's sovereignty and the social liberation of the workers.

"We have repeatedly stressed that the specific measures which PASOK will undertake when it takes over the government of the country must have the broadest possible support of the Greek people--and they must stem from the people's active participation in their formulation. PASOK is not going to enforce a bureaucratically prepared program within concentric limits. On the contrary it will promote processes for the people's participation within the limits of a fundamental decentralization.

"It must also be clear that the rate of implementing our program will also depend upon the more general balance of forces as it develops in time."

Foreign Affairs

In answer to a question on whether he foresees speedy developments in the Balkans, what NATO's role will be and what problems Greece will have to face, Papardreou replied:

"My view is that no dangerous developments should be expected in the Balkans in the immediate future. Tito's presence both in Yugoslavia and in the Balkans more generally as well as within the nonalined movement is, without a doubt, a stability factor. This is why we all wish that he will remain at the helm during this exceedingly difficult and dangerous period which is characterized by the speedy return to the cold war and all its consequences.

"I believe that the problems we are faced with in the Balkan peninsula may become more severe as a result of the cold war atmosphere without, however, leading either to a clash or to outside intervention--unless, of course the cold war becomes a hot one.

"The foundations for the unity of its people have been firmly set in Yugoslavia. Its national defense, based upon the mobilization of all its citizens, has effectively armed the country against intervention 'from the outside.'

"Naturally there is the serious dispute between Yugoslavia and Bulgaria over the 'Macedonian' issue. It is, however, difficult for me to believe that a 'solution' will be sought within the limits of a clash between these two countries.

"There is also the question of the independent foreign policy which Romania has implemented for many years always within the framework of the Warsaw Pact. I believe that an effective balance has been struck in relations between the USSR and Romania.

"Naturally I have made no mention of the two vast Greek national issues, the Cyprus issue and the Aegean, which our country is facing as a result of the chauvinist policy of Turkey supported by the United States and NATO. Nobody can dispute that Turkey, at some phase, could advance its claims through military means. This, naturally, is an existing danger. If this Turkish (NATO) threat is implemented, it is in a position to overthrow the balance of forces in the Balkans.

"It is, therefore, critical that our country establish an independent national and defense policy outside NATO's framework. In order to defend its independence and territorial integrity our country must not be involved in the maelstrom of the cold war."

DEMIREL REPLIES TO QUESTIONS ON FOREIGN POLICY

TA301539 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 30 Jan 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, Jan 30 (AA)--At the end of his press conference Tuesday, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel replied to questions from foreign journalists on foreign policy. A journalist asked Demirel what Turkey expected from the U.S. "in order to be strong against any eventuality." In his reply, Demirel recalled the great harm the U.S. arms embargo against Turkey had done to Turkey's defense and stressed that the American public opinion should not think that a strong Turkey would harm Greece. "The only thing we expect is that they should fulfill their pledges [words indistinct] to a great extent. The U.S. public opinion should not look at Turco-American friendship and relations from the Greek point of view," Demirel said.

Afghanistan and Iran events increased Turkey's problems, Demirel said, in reply to another question, adding: "Now, naturally, we have to be more attentive. We cannot go on the way we used to with the current inflation which is ruining the (?state). Prime Minister Demirel stressed that in the past, an unannounced economic embargo against Turkey had adverse effects on the Turkish economy "but Turkey, despite all this, has been trying to develop under the democratic regime."

DENKTAS LEAVES FOR CYPRUS, MAKES AIRPORT STATEMENT

[Text] Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] President Rauf Denktas, who arrived in Istanbul yesterday after attending the Islamic conference in Islamabad, left for Cyprus today. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport, President Denktas said that the superpowers were engaged in activities--around the natural resources of the Islamic countries--for their own interests that would threaten all mankind. Recalling that the Islamic conference in Islamabad had called on the Eastern and Western countries to abandon their oppressive and aggressive policies toward the Islamic countries, Denktas said that this proved the determined and courageous stand of the Islamic countries.

Referring to the resumption of the intercommunal talks in Cyprus, President Denktas said that it was out of the question for these talks to be held under the umbrella of the UN resolutions. President Denktas noted that the TFSC was confronting various economic difficulties, and added that some measures were being considered in a bid to overcome these difficulties.

PALME, WERNER CONDEMN USSR INTERVENTION IN AFGHANISTAN

LD301406 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 30 Jan 80 LD

[Text] The Social Democrat opposition leader, Olof Palme, opened the general political debate in the Riksdag this morning by again condemning the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Palme said that Afghanistan is now an occupied country and declared that Sweden must support the independence of the small countries. Palme pointed out how the relations between the big powers have gradually deteriorated. There is a danger of a worse collision course which may lead to hasty actions and perhaps war. Therefore, the Swedish policy of neutrality must stand firm, said Palme.

He criticized the presence of South African troops on Rhodesian territory and stressed also that the representatives of the Patriotic Front are meeting difficulties during the current election campaign.

Palme described the situation in Kampuchea as the death struggle of a people and a nation.

Another speaker was the Communist Left Party [VPK] leader, Lars Werner, who also began by speaking about the international situation. He criticized the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and demanded that the Soviet troops withdraw from the country as soon as possible. At the same time, Lars Werner accused the United States of using the Afghanistan crisis as an excuse for launching a new cold war. The VPK leader expressed his support for the Social Democratic proposal recently for a Swedish initiative for a European disarmament conference, which he described as a positive contribution to the broad movement mobilized for detente, disarmament and peace.

THATCHER VISIT TO PRC SCHEDULED FOR AUGUST

LD301117 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 30 Jan 80 p 1 LD

[Clare Hollingworth report: "Thatcher To Visit China"]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher, the prime minister, is to visit China in August. Although the dates have yet to be decided, she will spend four or five days in Beijing meeting chairman Hua Guofeng and vice premier Deng Xsiaoping, before she embarks on the traditional provincial tour.

Meanwhile, the military band in the Great Hall of the People will rehearse "God Save the Queen," Auld Lang Syne and the two or three traditional British songs, while the cooks try their hands at blanchmange and steak and kidney pie.

But despite the importance attached to the prime minister's visit by the Chinese, it is most unlikely that she will be able to revive Beijing's interest in acquiring Britain's Harrier vertical take-off aircraft.

Since chairman Hua refused to see the Harrier put through its paces when he was in England last summer, the Chinese have shown practically no interest in buying it.

It is hoped that Lord Carrington, who is also invited to China on an official visit, will accompany Mrs Thatcher.

Even if the Harrier deal is scrapped, the Chinese want to acquire high-grade weapons to modernize their 3 million-strong army by the turn of the century.

CP PRESIDENT VOICES 'GRAVE CONCERN,' OVER SAKHAROV EXILE

LD291425 Brussels LE SOIR in French 24 Jan 80 pp 1, 3 LD

[Unattributed report: "Sakharov's Exile: Storm of Indignation of World Opinion"]

[Excerpt] Belgian Communist Party President Louis van Geyt issued the following statement:

"It was with grave concern that we learned of the measures taken against Andrey Sakharov by the Soviet authorities.

"Our concern is not simply based on the fact that our party has long clearly opposed the socialist states' use of administrative or legal sanctions which are incompatible with respect for individual freedom against nonviolent political opponents.

"We are also bound to point out that the announcement of such measures is likely to be a severe blow to broad sections of democratic opinion which, especially in European members of the Atlantic alliance, are resisting and reacting to the new escalation of tension."

Mr Van Geyt concluded: "It is also because we are determined to pursue and intensify our efforts to unite all forces which aspire to halt the revival of bloc policy that we are anxious to clearly express our disapproval of the measures announced in Moscow."

LE SOIR SAYS CARTER ADDRESS NOT NEW 'DOCTRINE'

LD301627 Brussels LE SOIR In French 25 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Jean Pochet dispatch: "A Firm Tone, No 'New Doctrine'"]

[Text] Washington, 24 January--President Carter's speech was bound to please Congress and public opinion--it was firm in tone and restrained in essence.

Nothing new in the measures announced and, certainly, no shadow of doctrine. What strikes you is the absence of any political line. When Carter referred to human rights, he carefully avoided any allusion to Sakharov's exile which was the event of the day. When he referred to a European regrouping against the invasion of Afghanistan, he prudently avoided any mention of either Tito or the possible fate of Yugoslavia.

He was not--or only just--applauded when he talked about improvement in relations with the PRC, his policy in support of human rights, aid for Pakistan and his hope that the SALT agreements will survive the present international crisis.

But he was applauded long and loudly when he mentioned the possibility of military intervention in the Gulf. A possible reintroduction of the draft, an increase in the defense budget, a certain freedom for the CIA to resume clandestine operations and a possible boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow.

No domestic problem was mentioned except the energy problem. In fact, it was a speech on the state of U.S. relations with the USSR rather than on "The State of the Union." The 50 American hostages were hardly mentioned and when they were it was only to confirm what the State Department had already stated, namely, that their importance has been eclipsed by the gravity of Soviet presence on the Afghan-Iranian border.

The President failed to give even the ghost of his legendary smile throughout his speech. He looked grave and determined. He played the card of Congress which is in session again after a 1-month break. [paragraph continues]

He has certainly restored the U.S. people's confidence in their legendary strength. He reassured and soothed.... He threatened the Soviets but in a restrained manner. He has certainly won another election "round."

He has certainly not formulated any "doctrine."

Queen Addresses Subjects

LD312001 Hilversum Domestic Service in Dutch 1900 GMT 31 Jan 80 LD

[Statement to Dutch people by her majesty Queen Juliana carried live by Dutch television, radio and the world broadcasting system]

[Text] This evening I would like to make a statement to all Dutch people. This evening is the birthday of our daughter Beatrix.

Everyone who grows old sooner or later is faced with the hard fact that one's strength is ebbing and that one is no longer able to discharge his task as previously. Then there also comes a moment when staying in office is no longer justified. So, I feel that for me the moment is approaching to resign as your Queen.

My successor, our daughter Beatrix, is well prepared to take over this task, and she will assume this task. In consultation with her, I am hoping to abdicate on 30 April, on my birthday. My daughter and I are aware that this arrangement must entail changes in our many engagements in the course of this year and we will try to find good solutions for this.

This evening I would like to keep to these matter-of-fact statements. I feel I have made the right decision and I hope that you will be understanding. We are staying among you, my husband and I, and I hope to be able to experience the satisfaction of still being able to somehow make myself useful in the future in our society.

Now is not yet the moment to give expression to the feelings which are alive in me; therefore, I would like to restrict myself to the sober facts alone. All I would like to ask is that you give your support and trust to your Queen after my abdication. [national anthem played]

[Text] Bonn--Next week's visit to Bonn by Hungarian Foreign Minister Frigyes Puja has been postponed at the request of the Hungarian side, a foreign office spokesman announced today. He said that the postponement has been "mutually accepted."

The Hungarian side said that the postponement of the visit, which is nothing unusual in international practice, should not create any doubt about the fact that Budapest continues to attach continuing importance to relations with the Federal Republic. The German side should see the announcement in this light. The spokesman stressed that the Hungarian Government also expressed the hope that the foreign minister's visit to Bonn will take place at a later date and will be successful.

Diplomatic circles regard the Hungarian request for a postponement of the visit as indicating a certain interruption in high-level contacts, which reflects a consistent pattern of behavior by the Warsaw Pact states. They point, however, to Hungary's continuing interest in talks. This squares with Bonn's intention to continue the dialog with the East European states. Here they stress that the Hungarian side has announced that the German-Hungarian consultations of security conference experts, planned to be held in Bonn in February, will go ahead.

It was also stated in Bonn that Hungary has also [word indistinct] the visit by the president of the Hungarian National Assembly planned for early February.

STATE SECRETARY GAUS COMMENTS ON FRG-GDR NEGOTIATIONS

LD311818 Hamburg DPA in German 1641 GMT 31 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpt] East Berlin/Bonn--The current inter-German negotiations will continue despite postponement of the meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR Council of State. The head of the Federal Republic's permanent mission in East Berlin, state secretary Guenter Gaus, told press representatives today (Thursday) that the negotiations he has been conducting since October, and which have gone "very positively" are proceeding smoothly and that both sides want to achieve positive results.

Gaus said that the first fruits will probably be seen shortly. The negotiations concern, among other things, the Wartha-Herleshausen frontier crossing point, enlarging inland waterways to accomodate ships of the Europa class, improving railway traffic between the Federal Republic and West Berlin, the desalination of the Werra and questions relating to water protection in Berlin.

FOUR CHARGED WITH SPYING FOR USSR ON U.S. INSTALLATIONS

LD011044 Hamburg DPA in German 1003 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Stuttgart--the Stuttgart Prosecutor General's Office has preferred charges for espionage on behalf of the Soviet Union against four persons. The four, who have been in custody since 31 August 1979, are charged with having spied on U.S. installations, barracks and supply depots. According to the prosecutor's office today the four--one woman and three men--have conceded that the charges are valid. Sufficient evidence is available.

Two of the four fled the GDR in 1978. In 1975 they had already established contact between friends and relatives in the Federal Republic and the Soviet secret service. The two others were recruited for espionage during this period. The four were discovered by "luck."

APEL DOES NOT RULE OUT TROOP REDUCTIONS AT MBFR

DW311337 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 31 Jan 80 p 2 DW

[Report by Ulrich Mackensen: "Continuous Interest in Troop Reductions"]

[Text] Despite the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, progress cannot be ruled out in the talks on reducing troops and arms in central Europe between NATO and the Warsaw Pact (MBFR). This opinion was voiced by Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel in a talk with FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU editor Ulrich Mackensen in Oberusel.

It is difficult at the moment to make an MBFR prognosis because the Soviet Union through its action has blocked some channels, also "information channels," whose functioning is a prerequisite for a successful negotiating policy, Apel said. "On the other hand, nothing has changed regarding the interests of both pact systems in creating in Europe a zone of mutual information and confidence and in achieving a balance of military foces." A new MBFR negotiating round will open soon in Vienna, where the Soviet Union will have to reply to suggestions made by the West prior to Christmas. "The action of the Soviet Union will permit a better assessment of the speed with which one can continue to negotiate in Vienna."

According to Apel, the confidence-building measures agreed on at the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) are functioning smoothly. Regarding negotiations with the Soviet Union on the reduction of medium-range missiles in Europe, Apel said that the West's offer is still on the table. "We will remind the Soviet Union over and over again that we want to have arms control negotiations. These negotiations could begin before ratification of SALT II. In this case, however, the Soviet Union must extend itself and open the back door, which has been kept open a crack so far, in its very severe reactions to the NATO decisions."

The minister clearly rejected an increase of the personnel strength of the Bundeswehr, which presently numbers 495,000 men, an increase demanded by the opposition. "The Bundeswehr has a defense mission in Europe, more exactly in central Europe. Nothing has changed in this regard that would make such a debate sensible. Therefore, an increase of the Bundeswehr's numerical strength is out." The defense budget will not be increased either. The Bundswehr, however, needs an additional DM250 million for increased fuel costs. Future defense expenditures will be adapted to "the needs of the Bundeswehr and the agreed NATO requests."

There are no plans, Apel said, to extend the present basic military training period of 15 months.

GENSCHER ON CAMPAIGN ISSUES: RELATIONS WITH EAST, THIRD WORLD

DW311220 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 1 Feb 80 pp 3-4 DW

[Rudolf Zundel interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, date and place of interview not given]

[Text] ZEIT: Crises lead to strange alliances. Figuratively speaking, CSU chancellor candidate Strauss and FDP Foreign Minister Genscher suddenly appear arm in arm and talk of joint foreign policy. Is the old maxim true again: there are no longer parties....?

Genscher: Definitely not. But at a time when foreign and security policies so strongly command public awareness, as they do now following the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, it is reasonable, to be sure, to reveal common positions of the government coalition and the opposition parties. This is not a new discovery. Let me remind you of the debate in the Bundestag late last year following the Brussels NATO meeting. At the time, the opposition agreed with Federal Government on essential questions concerning security policy. [paragraph continues]

With respect to the negotiation offers of NATO, as well as to the arms gap closure, this common substance is valuable and should be preserved. The ties between the Europeans and the United States--one of the most essential common positions--now have become even more important. The same is true of the Western offer of negotiations: They have not been shelved by Afghanistan but must be pursued persistently.

ZEIT: The election chances for 1980 are decided in the operation "joint foreign policy." Does this bother you in any way?

Genscher: It would not only be wrong but also dangerous to make foreign policy decisions in such a serious situation according to domestic opportunism.

ZEIT: Nevertheless, coalition politicians doubt that Mr Strauss' joint platform exercises are unselfish. FDP Bundestag Floorleader Mischnick spoke of a "poisoned offer." Must the foreign minister be grateful for joint positions regardless of the motives or intentions with which they are put forward?

Genscher: The foreign minister bears responsibility for the foreign policy of his country. If he implements a foreign policy that he and his party deem proper, and if the opposition--in part--also agrees with this policy, then this certainly benefits the country and, added with modesty and due respect, presumably poses no disadvantage to his own party, either.

ZEIT: Do you not see the danger, or do you accept the fact, that by operation "joint platform" the coalition itself will promote CDU/CSU chancellor candidate Strauss to a statesman, that is, suitable for election?

Genscher: A party cannot make a representative of another either a statesman or a nonstatesman; it is always the person involved who determines on this. This is not being done in a flash but as part of a long process.

ZEIT: Do you interpret joint foreign policy as a sort of sharing in the government on the part of the opposition?

Genscher: Certainly not. The different missions of the government and the opposition remain unchanged; but there is joint responsibility.

ZEIT: How is this joint responsibility expressed?

Genscher: What is important, to begin with, is to recognize common positions and not to fuzz or abandon them. Second, what this involves is talking about different positions responsibly and without polemics, that is to say, making the differences visible and justifying them. Third, what is needed is the capability to act for the benefit of all, even if different positions exist with respect to the matter at issue.

ZEIT: This description is reminiscent of a speech which Herbert Wehner gave in the Bundestag in 1960 following the failure of the Paris summit conference, that is, following a serious setback for detente policy. This speech was also an appeal for harmony, and last but not least it was marked by the effort to dampen emotions through objectivity. Is there any call for that again?

Genscher: I think so, yes. Particularly now commonsense, steadfastness, sobriety and farsightedness are indispensable. All this can be had only if emotions are not allowed to command the scene. Excitement does not benefit politics very much. Besides, it is very important, not only for the opinion-forming process in our country but for our partners in the West and for those with whom we deal in the East, that German foreign policy remain absolutely predictable in times of crisis. If we succeed in achieving this, a great service will be rendered to safeguarding peace and stability in Europe. The Federal Republic, this important country at the convergence of East and West, must be predictable.

ZEIT: How is this supposed to be done, apart from not allowing oneself to be carried away by one's own strong words?

Genscher: What is required is an exact definition of our interests and goals. As far as the Federal Republic is concerned, this means the following: First, we must not jeopardize or risk what we have accomplished in the way of, and through, detente. The same is true for the prerequisites for continuing this policy. Second, it must remain the objective of our joint efforts that the Soviet Union discontinue its occupation of Afghanistan. Third, we must be a realiable partner of the Third World states that wish to preserve their independence. Only in this way will it be possible to prevent the Soviet Union from finding new places where it can grab up advantages with military means and low risk.

Hence, what is important everywhere is to improve the preconditions for safeguarding peace. Our decisions must be made based on these criteria.

ZEIT: Not to jeopardize detente means to exploit every option for contacts between East and West. The opposition, though not in unison, is quite reserved in this respect. Some of them would like to punish the Soviet Union visibly by severing contacts.

Genscher: I believe there are more important things than satisfying this desire.

It is my belief that the Soviet side has made two important miscalculations in the past 12 months. First, it assessed erroneously the capability of the Western alliance to make a decision on the closure of the arms gap and on negotiations, even though the Federal Government made a real effort to prevent the Soviet leaders from making this mistake. Second, the Soviet Union has erroneously assessed the reaction of world opinion, including the Third World, to its intervention in Afghanistan. Yet it is part of the predictability of the foreign policy of states that their reactions, too, are somewhat predictable. This is why I advocate the view that contacts must not wither away, particularly in times of crisis, but that they must be exploited. Only in this way is it possible to insure that those having to make the decisions in the Soviet Union can appropriately assess the potential reactions in the West.

ZEIT: Hence, as many contacts as possible lest the situation get out of control?

Genscher: Correct. Ample conflicts can still emerge in the world because the political objectives of various states are absolutely incompatible. In any event, however, the emergence of conflicts as a result of misunderstandings should be prevented. This highlights the great responsibility of politicians in and outside governments when they make public utterances or have confidential talks. It is not clear and definite positions that are dangerous, but the nourishment or awakening of false hopes or anxieties.

ZEIT: It takes at least two parties for contacts. It was, after all, not your fault that your planned visit to Prague did not materialize. Is the CSSR's cancellation of the visit indicative of a development where the crisis is beginning to proliferate to the crucial area of detente in central Europe?

Genscher: The fact that the Prague government is expressing its interest in continuing the contractually agreed policy prohibits me from making such a hard judgment. Moreover, this cancellation does not change anything regarding my basic opinion that all possibilities for talks must be exploited. We have the necessary calm.

ZEIT: Does that also pertain to the meeting between the federal chancellor and GDR State Council Chairman Honecker as well as to the CSCE followup conference in Madrid?

Genscher: Naturally.

ZEIT: How does that policy conform to the fact that the Moscow visit of Minister Ehrenberg was terminated because of scheduling difficulties?

Genscher: The publicly announced reasons are more to the point. The Soviet Union knows about our desire to continue the talks.

ZEIT: Are the Moscow Olympics also part of these desirable meetings?

Genscher: The Olympic meeting certainly is desirable, but it is first of all the Soviet Union that must answer the question of whether athletes from all parts of the world can take part in the games. It must create the appropriate prerequisites. The fact that the games are being discussed is a consequence of the Soviet action in Afghanistan and toward a man like Sakharov.

ZEIT: In discussing the consequences to be drawn from the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, opposition politicians suggested that the Federal Republic ought to take part in an intervention corps that could be used worldwide in an emergency, that is, if vital Western interests must be protected.

Genscher: I consider that politically dangerous, legally impermissible and strategically wrong. The Federal Republic has its important alliance mission in central Europe.

ZEIT: So you do not want to change anything about the mission and the tasks of NATO?

Genscher: Naturally, developments outside the NATO sphere bring influence to bear on the security of NATO members. I mentioned in this connection in Oslo in 1975, at the session of the NATO Council, the term: outer framework conditions. Among these necessary framework conditions is the condition that the energy supply of member states must not be jeopardized. This in turn means that the independence of the countries of the Near and Middle East that today are guaranteeing this energy supply will not be jeopardized by actions of the Soviet world power. There are common interests in this matter, but not all members are equally fit for the same task. There are members that, because of their tradition, history and engagement, are more fit than the Federal Republic to safeguard the outer framework conditions.

ZEIT: You do not fear the reproach that the Federal Republic is hiding behind others?

Genscher: The Federal Republic is rendering quite a service to the alliance--with regard to safeguarding central Europe and giving economic aid to the countries on the periphery of Europe and in the Third World. It is much rather a joint and coordinated strategy that is involved, where every partner will take on the task he is best suited for. Division of labor is necessary. This joint strategic concept serves the cohesion and effectiveness of the alliance, and it will eliminate the illusion in the Soviet Union that Europe and the United States could be separated.

ZEIT: SPD politicians sometimes recall De Gaulle, a great European statesmen, a detente politician for whom the interests of this continent and of America were not at all identical. Is that a reason for you to be cautious?

Genscher: No, we have now achieved a degree of political consultation and coordination between Europe and the United States that rules out contrasting interests with regard to a joint alliance policy.

ZEIT: You do not consider yourself in the same situation as one of your predecessors, Foreign Minister Gerhard Schroeder, who fought in the sixties together with the opposition against the Gaullists in the government camp and for the absolute priority of ties with America?

Genscher: No, we in the Federal Government fully agree on that with the opposition as well.

ZEIT: Nobody even considered the possibility of a special European role?

Genscher: No, but I see efforts by the Soviet Union to suggest to the Europeans that their interests differ from those of the United States and that they therefore ought to act differently. In the interest of the predictability of our policy, it seems important to me to rule out from the very beginning every misunderstanding and every illusion in Moscow with regard to the hopelessness of such efforts.

ZEIT: In crises the description of politics is often simplified--boiled down to essentials, as one says. Sometimes it is simplified too much. Does a foreign minister not have to worry if the domestic political discussion of his policy is reduced to such questions as: Is the reaction toward the Soviet Union hard enough, and is solidarity with Washington great enough?

Genscher: This is not a matter of domestic political advantages and of evidence for the right conviction; this involves interests--joint interests of the alliance. Let me explain this idea. In past years I have pointed out over and over again the responsibility of industrial countries for developing the Third World states. In the United Nations I have dealt with the significance of the nonalined movement for the stability of the Third World. I have warned against using the Third World as a battleground for the East-West conflict. I have pointed out the danger of a late imperialist policy of the Soviet Union in the Third World. I have found rather wide agreement on this policy in the course of time. But now I see the threat of a dangerous relapse. The trend is increasing to use policy toward the Third World as an instrument for the dispute with the Soviet Union and not as an objective world political necessity. The foreign minister, therefore, has the duty to insure that in the discussion on Afghanistan the groundwork of our policy toward the Third World is not covered up, so that routine arguments trying to transplant East-West conflicts to the Third World will not prevail.

ZEIT: Some opposition members consider that an illusion. For them the East-West dispute dominates the establishment of relations with the Third World. In matters of development aid they make a clear distinction, therefore, between friends and adversaries.

Genscher: I view this labeling with concern. But I wish the government camp showed a stronger, more basic and morally founded concern for the Third World. That applies to all government parties.

ZEIT: You mean that when it comes to development aid, the coalition also finds it hard to follow words with action. Do you feel it is possible that development aid will be further increased?

Genscher: I consider it possible and urgently necessary. We are in a decisive phase of North-South politics, and we must avoid the strategic mistake of the Soviet Union in considering the Third World an area into which it could extend its sphere of influence. The fact that the Third World defends itself against this late Soviet imperialism does not mean it has decided in favor of the West. These countries want to be independent, and we must help them achieve that.

ZEIT: That means more preparedness to take risks, more aid, regardless of whether it will be given to a tested friend or an "unreliable customer."

Genscher: With that vocabulary we would block our access to the Third World. But let me answer you with an example from the area of domestic policy. Social services are provided according to national level regardless of the political and social stand of the recipient. If development aid is the great international social undertaking for the rest of this century, this principle must be valid in that sphere also.

ZEIT: Do you think the industrial states, particularly the Soviet Union, will adhere to these noble principles?

Genscher: I feel it is possible that the Soviet Union will also learn from its errors. It pursues a late imperialist policy, a traditional power policy, which amounts to extending its sphere of influence as much as possible. In doing so it collides with the greatest strength of our era: the will of the people for self-determination and to achieve their own identity. Such a collision ought to make the leaders of world power ponder.

PARIS RADIO REPORTS FRENCH MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO TUNISIA

LD311907 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 31 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Did France intervene militarily in Tunisia? Former Foreign Minister Michel Jobert, generally well informed, is convinced that France did. There are rumors that three Transall planes and two Puma helicopters have taken part in the Qafsah fighting. On Sunday, a force coming from Libya attacked this small town in southern Tunisia, and at the request of the Tunisian authorities France is said to have extended logistical assistance. For the moment this information has neither been confirmed nor denied by the Defense Ministry. One thing is certain, however: Three French warships including the famous Colbert flagship have been sent on a mission to the Gabes Gulf, very close to the Tunisian and Libyan coasts. Given the international tension, Mr Giscard d'Estaing has cut short the trip he is supposed to make to Franche-Conte tomorrow. He will stay there only half a day. Back at the Elysee tomorrow afternoon, the head of state will receive in audience successively Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet and Tunisian Ambassador Mabrouk.

For his part, Mr Mabrouk approves of French military presence in the Mediterranean. He said so a short while ago in the microphone of Gilbert Picard.

[Begin recording] [Mabrouk] As a matter of fact, there are now French ships not very far [from the Tunisian coast], thanks be to God, incidentally. In fact, the French fleet is in the Mediterranean, in a milieu which is its milieu, which is ours.

[Picard] And should other troubles break out in a more grave manner, would you appeal for France's help?

[Mabrouk] We have relations of cooperation in all fields with France. One should say that if this destabilization action should continue, the threat will not loom only over Tunisia, which is resisting, which will resist, which knows how to defend itself. It will then require a global strategy which will not solely concern Tunisia but all those who are interested in peace in the Mediterranean basin, and who wish the Maghreb to be protected from convulsions and from what is going on elsewhere in other parts of the globe. [end recording]

On the spot in Tunisia the raid on Qafsah has occasioned a real national reaction. It is almost a sacred union around President Bourguiba. The leader of the main opposition party, Ahmed Mestiri, was very clear on this point when our special correspondent Gerome Bonaldi met him.

[Begin recording] [Mestiri] Tunisians are unanimous in their attitude toward these grave events. Our movement has vigorously condemned this flagrant aggression. I do not think that there is now a Tunisian, even within the opposition, who approves of this action. Quite the contrary. Concern over the independence and territorial integrity of the country must come before any other consideration, and I think that, setting aside their differences, the Tunisians are united to defend the territorial integrity and independence of their country.

[Bonaldi] Do you want war?

[Mestiri] No. The point at issue is not wanting war. It is adopting a clear-cut, precise attitude. The point at issue, and before anything else, is to consolidate the internal front, and to enable the country to resist and oppose attempts of this kind, should they occur again. [end recording]

These declarations prove that the raid against Qafsah was much graver than a simple clash; it was perhaps an attempt at a coup.

Further Details

LD311940 Paris Domestic Service in French 1900 GMT 31 Jan 80 LD

[Excerpts] The United States has just decided to engage in talks with a view to extending urgent military aid to Tunisia in the wake of the surprise attack on Qafsah last Sunday by a commando trained in Libya. Details of this aid should be known and seen.

Five days after the (?Qafsah) attack the situation is still not clear in Qafsah. There was a big mass march this afternoon in support for the Tunisian Government. The participants paraded and chanted Bourguiba's name and slogans hostile to the officials of the Libyan Jamahiriyah. The security forces continue their mopping-up operation in the town and its medina, where access is difficult, as well as the surroundings of this large southern oasis. They are undoubtedly searching for fleeing members of the commando.

In France there are two things to be noted regarding this matter: First the Communists asked that Yvon Bourges be heard by the National Assembly Commission in connection with the deployment of seven French naval units, including four submarines, close to the Tunisian coasts. Second, tomorrow afternoon the Tunisian ambassador to Paris will be received in audience by Valery Giscard d'Estaing. France continues to be closely interested in the danger of destabilization threatening the Tunisian regime.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE CHIEF AGAINST BOYCOTT OF GAMES

[Unattributed report: "The French National Olympic Committee Mentions the Athletes' 'Conscience Clause'"]

[Excerpt] Questioned by Ivan Levai on Europe 1 on Wednesday 30 January Mr Claude Collard, president of the French National Olympic and Sporting Committee [CNOSF] mentioned athletes' right to take advantage of the "Conscience Clause" for the Moscow games. "The athletes are free men," he said. "We would understand if individual athletes did not wish to take part in view of the developments in the political situation. However the CNOSF will do all it can to help those who want to take part. Nobody will blame them."

"On 22 January," he continued, "we stated that we would go to the Olympic games in both Moscow and Lake Placid. We wanted to go beyond the political problem.... We are trying to save the games and support the International Olympic Committee.... If the French Government changes its mind we could clash. However, we hope this will not happen.... We have adopted our position in principle but we have until 19 May to answer the Soviets' invitation."

L'UNITE CONDEMNS USSR 'AGGRESSION,' REJECTS OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

LD311025 Paris L'UNITE in French 25-31 Jan 80 p 1 LD

[Claude Estier article: "The Challenges and the Games"]

[Excerpts] Would Jimmy Carter have appealed for a boycott of the Moscow Olympics if the U.S. presidential elections were not taking place this year? The very fact that one can ask this question--and indeed everyone is--is enough to determine this measure more as a part of domestic policy than as an appropriate response to the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. [paragraph continues]

The same could be said of the SALT II ratification postponement. In either case the effect is the same: Either the SALT accords were a gift to the USSR and one cannot see why Carter should then sign them; or this was indeed a step by the two superpowers toward a reciprocal, balanced disarmament and it is hard to see why it should be abandoned on the pretext that the events in Kabul are aggravating international tension.

Let us be clear. The Soviet intervention must be strongly condemned. As the European socialists and PCI said jointly in Strasbourg last week, this constitutes a flagrant violation of the peoples' right to national independence and free self-determination. Whatever the explanations offered by Moscow and obligingly taken up by Georges Marchais and the PCF leadership, they cannot justify the unjustifiable. The gravest thing would be, moreover, if this were to legitimize a posteriori the U.S. interventions in so many other Asian and Latin American states. The line between "fraternal aid" to a friendly country and unwarranted interference in another state is blurred.

Let us be clear again: The cynical Soviet challenge to the world in arresting and banishing Andrey Sakharov, one of the Soviet Union's most famous challengers, and the contempt for the most basic human rights shown by such an act arouse our indignation and disgust. The USSR's image is again very seriously tarnished in everyone's eyes, including those wanting to preserve friendship between the French and Soviet peoples.

For whatever reason Leonid Brezhnev, willingly or not, authorized sending Russian tanks to Kabul, and as unacceptable as it is to assert--chorused again by Marchais--that these are "peaceful" tanks, it is wrong to deduce that the USSR is ready to launch into a third world war. War is, nevertheless, one of the alternatives which decide the world's fate. The sole other alternative, and this must be tirelessly reiterated to those now using the language of war, is to continue with the policy of detente which, despite all its difficulties, has led in recent years to such positive results as the SALT accords and the Helsinki Final Act, even if the Soviet Union is ever ready to trample underfoot certain of the acts and provisions relating to rights of free expression and freedom of movement.

It is one thing to condemn the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan as we have done, as the PCI, PCE, the British and Japanese Communist parties and others have done and as the UN General Assembly has done too. To throw detente overboard is another. Between the two there is a step which we refuse to take. This is why we reject economic sanctions against the USSR, sanctions which, moreover, it has often been shown are both dangerous and ineffective. This is why we also reject the Olympic boycott appeal. Not for the debatable assertion that sport must be kept separate from politics, but because, far more than reprisals against the USSR, cancelling the games would be a new and grave factor to world tension, which those favoring the boycott cannot be certain they can control.

In this respect, it was not without point that the French Government stated its position clearly. When leaving for Moscow, Jacques Chaban-Delmas, soon constrained to return because of Sakharov's arrest, declared "a total disapproval of the boycott." Giscard d'Estaing, clearly embarrassed by Carter's initiative and Washington's pressure on the EC countries, took a week to say that he was not in favor of anything endangering the Olympics. This was because he had to express himself clearly and not to seem, in Paris, to oppose a measure approved by the French Democratic Union [UDF] headed by Michel Poniatowski when voting in Strasbourg last week for a resolution proposed by the friends of Franz Joseph Strauss and Margaret Thatcher. In the present grave world conditions neither hypocrisy nor excessiveness are worthy postures. The aggression against the Afghan people must be clearly condemned and the Soviet withdrawal must be demanded. We must force the Kremlin to free Sakharov. But we must also avoid being dragged into a new cold war. At a time when anxieties are increasing, let us know how to act and remain calm.

PCI'S BOFFA: AFGHANISTAN HAS HAD COUP, NOT REVOLUTION

LD311021 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 27 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Giuseppe Boffa article: "Afghanistan: A 'Coup' Is Not a Revolution"]

[Excerpts] We communists have always regarded "revolution" as the most solemn word in the political vocabulary. This is why we have tried never to misuse it. Furthermore, we have aleays regarded the true revolutionary process--the true and prodound process capable of mobilizing millions of people and making them perform extraordinary feats--as the most important and most characteristic factor in this century's history, a history full of terrible tragedies, but strengthened by an inextinguishable impetus of human, social and national emancipation. We have always felt--and still feel--part of this process.

We therefore know from our long experience that it is not enough to call yourself revolutionary in order to be revolutionary. Nor, still less, is it enough to call yourself Marxist, Leninist or even Marxist-Leninist. What a wealth of nonsense we have heard spoken in Italy in recent years under these or similar banners. As far as we are concerned, it has been and it remains an elementary truth that every revolutionary struggle must have as its protagonists the masses aspiring for their emancipation: There is no vanguard that can aspire to this role unless it acts with their support. And may we be permitted to point out in passing that it is a caricature of Lenin's thought--lamentably not infrequent in recent polemics--to claim that he maintained the contrary, because his entire reflection always consisted of the quest for ways of providing an effective political leadership for a real revolutionary process and certainly not for ways of fabricating an artificial leadership.

We believe it essential to proceed from these general considerations (making an exception from the golden rule which recommends journalists always to proceed from the specific) because in today's debates there is sometimes a danger that they will become obscured. We have been well aware of them. However, as we have followed Afghan events over the past 2 years, we knew very little of the People's Revolutionary Party which took power in April 1978 partly because it had never been mentioned in international forums. The fact that it seized exclusive government control (having belonged to the government since 1973, however) by means of a politico-military coup was not in itself a motive for suspicion since we knew that governments in Afghanistan have never changed in any other way. We did, however, strive in every possible way to understand how the new leaders (both before and especially after the coup) sought a real connection with the forces of Afghan society; in which social strata, therefore, they intended to find support; along which paths they intended to organize the country's aspirations for regeneration, and so forth. Well, not even in the Soviet press, which unconditionally supported the new regime, did we ever find an analysis of this kind based on even a minimum of facts.

People say: They did carry out agrarian reform. Now, it does not mean much to talk about agrarian reform: Otherwise, even the shah of Iran, who used to talk about it, could pass as a revolutionary. This particularly applies to a country like Afghanistan, where the distribution of land in no way alters social relations, since there are vast tracts of free and arid land, while the power of the wealthy is based not so much on ownership of land as on the control of water supplies and instruments of labor. An automatic distribution of land decided in Kabul was not yet a reform because it prevented people from working in the old way, however lamentable and backward, without providing an opportunity to work in a new way. By proceeding in this manner not only was the citizens' support not obtained, but their hostility was provoked and they were driven into their class enemies' embrace. Well, according to reports from sources so wide-ranging as to be reliable, including reports from our own correspondent, this is what happened in Afghanistan.

The same phenomenon recurred in several other sectors. The apparent radicalism of some measures--the new flag, official atheism, mixed classes at school, but without the real spread of education--was not a means of finding a link with the masses, but a way of hiding that link's prolonged absence. Isolation in a country becoming hostile then led the government which was incapable of providing truly revolutionary or innovative solutions to its own society's problems to seek support abroad, to import abstract and ineffective solutions from abroad. But that same isolation also brought to a head the splits and settlement of accounts among members of the government: Only a few months after the April coup one wing of the party was already being persecuted, driven into illegality and forced into exile. This is how Pol Pots and Amins are born--never revolutions.

At this point, to believe that the remedy could lie in a foreign army's intervention is worse than an illusion. For one thing, Soviet advisers were already there in considerable and increasing numbers, but it really cannot be asserted that their presence yielded any brillant results. Furthermore, however good the intentions of the new government, which arrived with troops from abroad, its credibility is destroyed from the outset in the eyes of the people who, however illiterate and impoverished they may be, have long evinced jealous feelings of independence with respect to all foreigners.

When we say that the Afghan April was a "coup" which never managed to approach a revolution, we are well aware that there is an entire stream of Western historiography which has tried to define eventhe October Revolution as a "coup." But this comparison reveals both the weakness of those historiographic theories and the impossibility of talking in terms of a revolution in Afghanistan today.

The gravity of the Afghan events is all the more worrisome inasmuch as they did not occur in isolation or in an atmosphere of preservation, but against a background of an overwhelming and extremely specific revolutionary process which has affected entire continents and which really gives no sign of abating, as events last year showed. Furthermore, most recently this process has expanded with amazing force, albeit through contradictory and even disconcerting events, even to the geographical and cultural area to which Afghanistan belongs--an area long immune to its influence. We are talking not only about Iran but also about the repercussions which its revolution was having outside its own borders. The idea of the peoples' independence and self-determination is, however, one of the greatest strengths of that process and undoubtedly one of the strengths which contributed most to bringing about the crisis of imperialism: Therefore, not only do the events in Afghanistan fail to merge with the real revolutionary movement of our time, they move in the opposite direction.

Simply to split the world into two "camps" with which everyone must aline in a disciplined manner is no answer--and particularly no revolutionary answer, because it is a plan which in no way reflects the reality of today's world. It was already an inadequate plan when it first emerged back in 1947, though the cold war could then very well explain its origins. Indeed, it had to be shelved a few years later precisely because it was incapable of embracing the driving developments in the anti-imperialist struggle. Since that time the world has (as we have repeated 1,000 times and we must certainly not forget now) changed profoundly inasmuch as 1,000 other protagonists of liberation struggles have emerged and very few of them agree to be caged within that scheme of things, which ultimately corresponds to the logic of a big-power policy.

If we had now adopted an attitude of justification toward events in Afghanistan, not only, therefore, would we not have been supporting a liberation struggle, but we would have been moving in a direction profoundly divergent from the essential content of the revolutionary process of our times. Therefore, we did not condemn the intervention out of any abstract moral strictness or still less out of any subordination to other people's concerns. Precisely as internationalists determined to remain part of that process, neither could we nor should we have decided to act otherwise.

MADRID BREAKS RELATIONS WITH GUATEMALA

LD011408 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Spain has broken off diplomatic relations with Guatemala following the assault on our country's embassy in that country. This is stated in a note which the state Secretariat for Information issued a few moments ago. During this bulletin we will read the text of this official note.

Government Statement

LD011502 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The following is the government statement on events in Guatemala:

The Council of Ministers has been informed by the Foreign Ministry of the very serious events which took place yesterday in the Spanish Embassy in Guatemala. Upon the takeover of the embassy by a group of Guatemalan assailants, and because of Ambassador Cajal's conviction that it was possible to resolve the problem peacefully, [Foreign Minister] Mr Oreja immediately contacted that country's Foreign Ministry to try to insure the non-intervention of the police inside our diplomatic mission and the safeguarding of the lives of those inside it.

The Spanish ambassador repeatedly tried to contact that country's foreign minister, the Interior Ministry and the director general of the police, without receiving any reply to his repeated request that the public force should withdraw from the embassy's environs and should not intervene.

In view of this situation, Mr Cajal personally addressed the commander of the forces surrounding the embassy, repeating this request and telling them that the occupiers were willing to leave peacefully along with the ambassador himself. Despite these urgent requests, the police broke into the building, breaking down doors and ceilings, breaking into rooms, and forcing the door to the ambassador's office, where the embassy's occupiers and the hostages were located. At this moment, one of the occupiers threw a gasoline bomb which started a fire. According to reports on hand at present, it appears that only our ambassador was able to escape by throwing himself onto the flames at the very moment when the explosion took place [as heard].

On considering with profound sadness and indignation these dramatic events in which (?36) Guatemalans died, among them two of our embassy's secretaries, as well as First Secretary Jaime Ruiz del Arbol and diplomat Felipe Sainz, the government expresses its strongest condemnation at the conduct of the Guatemalan authorities, who, in violation of the most elemental norms of international law and the duty of all states to guarantee the immunity and inviolability of foreign diplomatic representations and their staff, allowed the security forces under its command to brutally assault the Spanish diplomatic office.

The Spanish Government, while reiterating its strongest condemnation of all forms of terrorism, demands that with the necessary guarantees there be a total clarification of the events which will identify those responsible for the violation of the diplomatic mission. While these demands are not fulfilled by the government of that republic with full satisfaction, a decision has been approved for the government to proceed to break off diplomatic relations with that country with whose people Spain feels so closely tied with so many profound links. The Venezuelan Government has accepted the responsibility of protecting Spanish interests in Guatemala without prejudice to the measures on security and voluntary repatriation of our citizens that the Spanish Government may adopt.

The corresponding notification of the decision adopted today in the Council of Ministers has been sent to the Guatemalan Government by the Foreign Ministry.

CHIEF OF STAFF MAKES 'IMPORTANT' SPEECH IN MELILLA

ID312333 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 31 Jan 80 ID

[Text] Army Chief of Staff Lt Gen Gabeiras Montero today visited the garrison of the regular forces stationed in Melilla, where he made an important speech. In his speech, Lt Gen Gabeiras said that the army's duty and, of course, the duty of all its members is complete obedience to the government, in which the king has invested his trust and where the executive power of the state is represented and exercised by the will of the people. Nobody should think, he continued, that we are a danger to liberty because there is no reason for this.

Elsewhere in his speech, Lt Gen Gabeiras referred to those who are clamoring for the supremacy of the military over civilian life. These people must be told that the army must be left to devote itself to its professional duties without their pointlessly trying to undermine its spirit and its discipline with treacherous cajolery on some occasions or with illicit insults and diatribes on others. We should expose once and for all, the army chief of staff concluded, those strange (?holier-than-thou people) who make us appear an unbearable burden on the state and an instrument of tyranny.

PAPERS COMMENT ON CARTER'S 'STATE OF UNION' ADDRESS

ID301323 [Editorial Report ID] Madrid EL PAIS 24 January 1980 publishes on page 10 an editorial on U.S. President Carter's State of the Union address, which begins by noting that it "contains all the tones of firmness and aggressiveness which President Carter has been displaying since the beginning of the world crisis and a very sustained assertion: That the United States holds most power in the world and is not prepared to renounce that position." Maintaining that similar ideas are being expressed in the Soviet Union and that there is little doubt that Professor Sakharov's deportation "represents a challenge, an assertion of determination and firmness," it contends that as a result of all this, "the world crisis assumes its most traditional, long-standing and most deplorably historical aspect--that of confrontation between two big powers, two empires." It advocates that in this situation Spain should use its influence to "prevent a move from the local conflagrations to a general apocalypse in which we would inevitably be involved." It concludes: "Spain should strive to save the Madrid [CSCE] conference and to contribute to dialog in preference to any warlike solution. Any other stance could prove suicidal."

Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA 27 January carries on page 15 a Carlos Nadal commentary on the same topic. It asserts that President Carter's address "has confirmed the viewpoint that Washington believes that the time has come to radically rethink its foreign policy." It continues: "The vigorous tone adopted by the U.S. President, the clarity and the direct utterance of some fundamental warnings to the USSR leave no room for doubt about U.S. determination to end that period in U.S. international policy which was influenced by two major U.S. domestic crises--Vietnam and Watergate. A clear sign to this effect Vis the fact that it is Carter who said in his State of the Union message that he is prepared to restore to the CIA many of the conditions of independence, secrecy and material resources which were curtailed as a result of the revelations made during the seventies about that famous organization's activities. Carter is now speaking a very different language from that which he used at the beginning of his term of office."

After outlining the alleged inconsistencies in U.S. foreign policy, caused by President Carter's human rights policy, and the Soviet Union's actions with respect to such countries as Angola, Ethiopia and South Yemen, the commentary cites the USSR's "false moves," such as the way in which it attempted to pressure the European NATO countries not to accept the Pershing-2 and cruise missiles, President Castro's attempts to manipulate the Havana nonalined summit and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Maintaining that the outcome of these developments was "inevitable," it continues:

"Carter, feeling the pressure of the presidential election and finding his popularity falling to an alarming extent, had to react. And he has done so promptly and also with considerable impetus. Excessively? This is precisely where we enter one of the questions now being asked in the West: Whether the measures adopted by Carter will be effective or whether they will prove counterproductive or excessive.

"There are those who believe that Carter is going beyond what is advisable, especially with respect to boycotting the Olympic games. There has been talk in this connection of the dangers in openly ending 'detente' and in returning to the language and methods of the cold war. There is no lack of those who believe that the moral blow dealt to the USSR by sabotaging the Olympics would bring about a perhaps irreparable toughening of the Kremlin's policy both domestically and externally. That is why we are again hearing the argument that we must not give Russia the impression that it is threatened or encourage its 'encirclement' complex. Similar arguments apparently caused Roosevelt virtually to hand over half of Europe to Stalin. Russia encircled or cornered? These terms seem at least inappropriate to the present strategic situation. For this very reason it is to be assumed that the Soviet reaction to the U.S. retaliation will develop in a nuanced manner--toughness of calculated effects, on the one hand, and the resumption of a multifaceted and indirect reassurance operation, on the other."

The commentary concludes by maintaining that "Carter will have to act promptly but take great care that the escalation of retaliation cannot be exploited by the Kremlin in its favor, both domestically, by stimulating a patriotic reaction, and externally, by spreading fear of a return to U.S. 'arrogance.'"

AMBASSADOR SVENNEVIG TO RETURN TO TEHRAN

LD010951 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 24 Jan 80 p 8 LD

[Unattributed report: "Svennevig returns to Tehran"]

[Text] Ambassador Tormod P. Svennevig returns today to Tehran to resume his work in the Iranian capital. Embassy Secretary Thomas Hauff and another official have been at their posts in Tehran for a week.

Ambassador Svennevig was recalled at Christmas for consultations after the crisis in relations between Iran and the United States was brought before the Security Council. Foreign Ministry press spokesman Torstein Sando said that the ministry's deliberations in connection with the Security Council's treatment of the Iran affair have now ended.

The decision to resume operations at the Tehran embassy is also based to some extent on the fact that the Norwegian colony in Iran has increased in size, Sando said. At one point in the last 3-4 weeks there were only two or three Norwegian citizens in Iran. Today several have returned, so that there are now 16.

KNUTSEN DEEMS SAKHAROV EXILE 'UNFORTUNATE OVERREACTION'

LD010949 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 24 Jan 80 p 8 LD

[NTB [NORWEGIAN TELEGRAPH BUREAU] report: "NKP Dissociates Itself"]

[Text] "In principle I deeply disagree with Sakharov's banishment. I also regard it an extremely unfortunate overreaction. It will be exploited to the maximum in the service of the cold war for the anticommunist and anti-Soviet campaign. It ought to have been avoided," Norwegian Communist Party [NKP] chairman Martin Gunnar Knutsen told NTB.

"But Andrey Sakharov's political initiatives in connection with the Afghanistan affair and in the matter of a boycott of the Moscow Olympics conflict with both the NKP stand and my personal views. I consider it natural that the Soviet Union had to react in some way."

Martin Gunnar Knutsen added that a couple of newspapers have attributed views to him which are not in accordance with his opinions of the Sakharov case.

I SIMERINI DISCLOSES NEW WALDHEIM PLAN FOR RESUMPTION OF TALKS

NC010945 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 1 Feb 80 p 1 NC

Precisely, Waldheim's plan proposes: That the talks begin on 15 February and last for 4 days, after which there will be a 10-day recess; that interlocutors then come back to the negotiating table for another 4 days, followed by another 10-day recess; that a third meeting then be held, followed by another 10-day recess. After this, and once each side studies the other's positions, the interlocutors will meet again to see if there is a common ground for continuing the dialog and the search for a negotiable agreement.

During the three "phases" of the talks, which will last 4 days each, the territorial, constitutional and Famagusta issues will be discussed simultaneously without defining any sequence for discussion, provided that both sides do not come to an agreement during this preliminary stage. From the above, it appears that the round of talks proposed by Waldheim as the "preliminary" stage will last 42 days. If, for example, it begins on 15 February, it will continue until the end of March.

Initially, it appears that the Greek side has accepted Waldheim's plan, although nothing has been announced officially. The Turkish side is expected to give an answer next week.

GOVERNMENT REPORTEDLY UNDER PRESSURE TO RECONSIDER U.S. PLAN

NC281435 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 28 Jan 80 p 1 NC

[Text] "The U.S. plan has not been withdrawn. The proposal still stands." This statement was made recently by the U.S., British and French ambassadors to Cyprus when the Famagusta Coordinating Committee visited them to ask for their governments' assistance in averting the colonization of Famagusta.

According to other reports, the above three governments are prepared to bring up the old or a similar plan again for consideration--that is, the same plan with slight amendments--and exert pressure on Turkey to either accept it or agree to sit at talks and discuss it--but with the proviso that the Cyprus Government express a desire for it or merely promise that it will not hasten to "reject" it from the beginning, as it did previously.

A diplomatic source from one of these three countries has made the following statement to our editor: "The plan is still open to discussion. We are prepared to bring it back again, slightly amended or not, if there is prudence and good will on your part. However, we do not want to risk another rejection on your part, which as happened before would be accompanied by attacks on our country. It would be naive to ignore past adversity and instead of thanks for our mediation and good will get unfair attacks and accusations."

In the meantime, the move to pressure the Cyprus Government into "yielding" is manifested by many quarters both at home and abroad--some sources say Athens has also expressed such a move.

In the move at home we should also include the courageous statement by House of Representatives President A. Mikhailidhis and statements made by Chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and prominent leading member of DI. KO. [Democratic Party] Mr A. Galanos, former Foreign Minister I. Khristofidhis and former Cyprus Ambassador to the United States, Mr Nikos Dhimitriou, aside from the revelations made by the Famagusta Chamber of Commerce and Industry with regard to former statements made by current Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

According to our information, the whole matter was also discussed by the DI. KO. Political Bureau last week but nothing has been announced in this connection. Nevertheless, the Cyprus Government has thus far maintained stubborn silence and is reluctant to "change its stand" either out of fear to displease "foreign-guided" AKEL or for reasons of dignity that it may expose itself for handling the Cyprus issue badly.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS DISMISSES 61 STATE EMPLOYEES

[Text] Today the Council of Ministers finished examining charges against state employees, made in accordance with the provisions of pertinent legislation for their involvement in or their assistance to the coup, and concluded that reasons of public interest require the termination of the services of a total of 61 members of the civil service, the education service and the security forces. The Council also decided not to institute any further proceedings against any member of the civil service, the education service or the security forces against whom charges are pending. According to an official statement, the Council of Ministers decided to dismiss these 61 employees after taking into consideration all previous evidence, the usefulness of some state employees, the special circumstances of each case and in general the interest of the state service, based on the powers provided for by the pertinent legislation.

The statement also says that in addition to the 61 state employees, another 26 state employees who were facing charges have already been dismissed or removed from their posts by the competent disciplinary boards to which their cases had been referred. Various disciplinary punishments have been imposed on another 75 state employees. In connection with the decision not to press any further proceedings against employees whom charges are pending, the statement says that the government had arrived at this decision after carefully considering all pros and cons, the serious objective difficulties encountered during the entire course of the purge and the proper functioning of the state machine, but was mainly guided by our country's interests. Finally, the statement says that in examining the whole issue the Council of Ministers seriously took into consideration the actual repentance shown by some state employees against whom charges had been made and their responsiveness to the government's appeal to hand over arms and so forth.

RIZOSPASTIS REPORTS DETAILS OF NEW ROGERS PLAN

[Text] The Rogers plan for our country's reconfinement to the NATO military wing entrusts the United States with the role of a guarantor power in Greek-Turkish differences. After successive soundings and consultations with Ankara and Athens, the basic points of the NATO military commander's "formula" have been completed and the formula has already been handed to the official Greek side by U.S. officers headed by General (Kreizer), a field commander in the Vietnam war.

1) On the problem of operational control over airspace, the Americans have proposed: Greece and Turkey should each control 50 percent of Aegean airspace. As a guarantor power the United States will transfer its air force's headquarters to Crete where the bases of Timbakion and Soudha will be activated. Furthermore, another part of the headquarters will be stationed in Larisa.

These U.S. bases, in which ultramodern aircraft will be stationed, will undertake the area's control. In effect it concerns a serious provocation since a large part of the U.S. Air Force will be integrated into the "facilities" already existing in our country.

2) On the operational control of the sea, the U.S. proposal envisages: Greek protection for the coast of mainland Greece and for the Northern Sporadhes and Cyclades Nisoi, and U.S. protection for the islands of Lesvos, Khios, Samos, Ikaria and possibly Rhodes. A U.S. "protective" force will srround these islands.

In practice this will not only mean a stronger U.S. presence in the Mediterranean but essentially the severance of a large part of Greece from Greek military control. The plan envisages Turkish "protection" for the entire coast of mainland Turkey.

A U.S. staff officer will be permanently in charge of common exercises among Greece, Turkey and the United States to be held in the Aegean. The new element here is that these exercises can be held on Greek shores. This is tantamount to U.S. military control over the Greek area, or at least over a large part of it.

Precisely so that domination can be better controlled, the Rogers plan contains a provision according to which 2,500 men will be added to the already existing (about 6,500 men) U.S. military force. It should be stated that--as RIZOSPASTIS disclosed in the past--400-500 U.S. commandos belonging to the group for operational action in the Mediterranean have been secretly added to the existing forces.

So far, no reply has been given to the proposals of the amended Rogers plan. It should be added that the proposals include the final statement that "this is our last word" (of the United States)!

SOURCES DENY STANDSTILL IN RELATIONS WITH USSR

AT311635 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 31 Jan 80 pp 1, 9 AT

[Text] Greek-Soviet talks are planned in preparation for Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko's visit to Athens in return for the visit to Moscow by his Greek counterpart, Rallis. According to authoritative sources, these talks will be held at the end of the current year. Meanwhile, most authoritative diplomatic sources in Athens denied a report by a morning newspaper published yesterday that our agreements with Moscow are at a "standstill" and that the visit to Greece by the chief of Political Affairs of the Soviet Foreign Ministry [as published] Grubyakov has been "postponed." In this connection, the authoritative sources supply the following information:

--On Grubyakov's visit: The issue of his arrival in the Greek capital on any specific or indefinite date has never arisen, and consequently the report which was published yesterday that the Soviet diplomat was to have come at the end of January or early February and that his visit has now been postponed until Arpil is inaccurate.

--On the "standstill" of our agreements with Moscow: All the agreements that have been signed between the two governments are being implemented. The issue of the establishment of consulates general--by Greece in Odessa and by the Soviet Union in Thessaloniki within the framework of the consular agreement that was signed--remains in suspense, however. A year ago--not recently--a difference in views was ascertained in this connection and since then the issue has remained in suspense.

--On the supply of electricity and natural gas and on the alumina plant: During Prime Minister Karamanlis' visit to Moscow last November it was agreed that the Soviets will integrate the issues of electricity and natural gas into their new 5-year plan which will begin in 1981, and that meanwhile the study of the technical aspects should begin for the supply of these two forms of energy.

--About the alumina plant it was agreed that a preliminary study should be made within 10 months and the experts should submit their conclusions. This study is now being made.

--On the issue of Soviet oil: As AKROPOLIS published the day before yesterday, this year negotiations will be held to determine the price, quality and time of delivery of the 800,000 tons of oil which Moscow has promised to supply in addition to the 1.2 million tons which we receive from the Soviet Union annually.

WESTERN PRESSURE FOR EASING RELATIONS WITH USSR CITED

[Text] According to reports and indications, the West currently--and especially after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan--has been exerting pressure on Athens seeking to downgrade Greek-Soviet cooperative relations, or at least arrest the positive course these relations have followed after Karamanlis' official visit to Moscow. The processes for the creation of a relevant "preparatory" atmosphere became apparent--according to diplomatic observers--after reports circulated concerning the Soviets reneging on their promise to Karamanlis to supply an additional 2 million tons of oil to Greece.

This assessment was supported yesterday by statements by KODISO [Democratic Socialism Party] Chairman Pesmazoglu and by the replies the government spokesman gave to pertinent questions. Specifically, Pesmazoglu told political editors yesterday that "there are reports that the Neorion question [involving Soviet utilization of Greek shipping repair and maintenance facilities in Siros] will soon be raised abroad. However, the government must remain firm on the position it has had from the beginning of this issue, namely, that it must not succumb to pressures."

In reply to questions by reporters, Pesmazoglu made it clear that he was referring to the exertion of pressures by the West to inhibit Greek-Soviet relations. At the same time, in reply to a question about whether the Greek side indeed intends to raise the Neorion issue, last night the government spokesman said: "I do not know." He gave the same reply to the political editors' next question about whether Athens has noted an atmosphere of sharpness in Greek-Soviet relations.

Political observers of the opposition interpret these replies by the government spokesman as a desire by Athens to keep alive talk and notes about some coolness in Greek-Soviet relations.

During the talk yesterday between Pesmazoglu and the political editors, he stressed that any weakening of the procedure of Greek-Soviet political communications should be avoided and then added that: "The international crisis is facilitating and objectively strengthening the efforts of those who, whether abroad or locally, want to induce nationally detrimental settlements of Greek-Turkish differences and the Cyprus issue so that a return to the NATO military wing can be achieved and, on the other hand, engineer an inhibition in the political development of Greek-Soviet relations." Furthermore, referring to the issue of peace in the Balkans, the KODISO chairman stressed that "new consultations at a higher government level among all the Balkan countries are necessary."

I VRADHINI: CARTER BYPASSES CONGRESS ON TURKISH AGREEMENT

AT291900 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 29 Jan 80 pp 1, 14 AT

[Dispatch by I VRADHINI's special service: "Everything Goes to Turkey, Thanks to Carter's Obstinacy"]

[Excerpts] Washington, Tuesday (special dispatch)--U.S. President Jimmy Carter has thought up a new maneuver to avoid congressional reaction and to pass the recently initialed U.S.-Turkish defense agreement. He labeled the agreement "an executive (presidential) agreement" with the result that it does not require congressional approval; only when it is signed will it be submitted to Congress for its information.

Carter's maneuver was recently disclosed at a press conference by State Department spokesman Hodding Carter who maintained that this agreement does not mean expensive economic obligations for the United States.

It is recalled that this constitutional prerogative was exercised by President Johnson in order to guarantee aid to Franco's dictatorial regime in Spain.

It is self-evident that through this maneuver the Carter administration avoids any possible rejection or significant cut in aid earmarked for Turkey by Congress, the majority of which does not favor continuation of aid to Ankara, particularly since Ankara has made no fundamental concessions on the Cyprus issue and continues to deceive the United States and the West with unfulfilled promises.

Consequently, bearing in mind the bitter experience of the "embargo" under which Congress blocked aid to Turkey for 4 years, the President now decided to make use of this constitutional prerogative and labeled the U.S.-Turkish agreement an "executive (presidential) agreement" which needs no approval by the two houses of Congress--the House of Representatives and the Senate.

As expected the U.S. President's maneuver will cause severe reaction in Congress, the majority of which does not like to be swept aside by the White House in the implementation of foreign or defense policy. Apart from this, congressional leaders are bound by their resolution which guarantees that on no account will it be permissible to disturb the balance of power between Greece and Turkey in the Aegean. This is an obligation which binds the President of the United States himself.

TO VIMA VIEWS NEW DEMOCRACY INTERNAL DEVELOPMENTS

AT291940 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 29 Jan 80 p 1 AT

[Article by St. P. Psikharis: "Karamanlis Is Irritated by the 'Daughins'"]

[Text] Prime Minister Karamanlis now appears irritated with the 'dauphins.' He has sufficient cause. The weight created by the opposition's reaction as well as by developments within New Democracy itself, which have created tension, is being added to his own personal dilemmas.

In reference to the above it is stressed that although it appears certain (at least this is underlined in every way by the essential, and virtually the only, 'dauphins') that New Democracy will not disintegrate, it appears equally certain that in view of the probable succession various "confrontations" are underway within the ranks of New Democracy. Such "confrontations" are developing independently of the wishes of the two 'dauphins' (in other words, E. Averof and G. Rallis) because certain New Democracy deputies who support one or the other--obviously in an effort to guarantee for themselves "possible" future ministerial posts--operate in different ways and develop various activities.

There is a special significance in the fact that a leading New Democracy personality underlined that the most serious problem (internal party problem) is not what is happening or what could happen at the top but rather what is taking place within New Democracy's parliamentary group. This is because all those who do not hold ministerial portfolios consider themselves unjustly treated and insistently demand their appointment to such positions, seeing a chance for their "appointment" through support of one of the other 'dauphins.' This state of affairs which, it must be considered certain is known to Karamanlis, increases uncertainty and complicates matters.

New Democracy circles stated yesterday that if there is a tendency to "form groups" within the party this is not caused by the two 'dauphins' but rather by those who hasten to appear supporters of either one or the other 'dauphin' or who run between the Foreign Ministry and the Ministry of National Defense (because this is also happening) for the purpose of "declaring their allegiance." From this point of view there possibly is ample ground for the theory that in the end neither Averof nor Rallis could depend (if they are making such calculations) on any specific number of deputies' support, obviously because this state of affairs has nothing to do with ideological or related "affiliation" but is rather solely due to personal motives.

It is naturally understandable that all this has irritated the prime minister who views these movements around the 'dauphins' as an additional problem exactly at a time when he wants political calm and no discussion of the probable political developments that will take place when he decides to remain as prime minister or to turn toward the presidency--because this is also very likely--or to retire from politics.

This explains the nearly violent reaction of the government spokesman over Sunday's press reports, not on the intentions of the prime minister or the majority opposition party, but rather on trends within New Democracy that clash or will clash over Karamanlis' succession. In reference to the press reports on the presidency the government spokesman "passed them over" with the sentence, "It is time to end such literacy fancies," while in reference to reports on conflict over the succession he stressed,, "There is neither a conflict nor is there any formation of groups."

On the other hand, "a staunchly pro-Karamanlis" newspaper housed these assurances of the government spokesman under the headline "Who and How Karamanlis Is Being Undermined" and with a perhaps even more voluble subhead, "Suspicious Movements for Disruption of Government Unity." It is obvious that such headlines cannot refer to movements within the area of the opposition.

The same newspaper made extensive references to reports that PASOK will not vote for Karamanlis. On the one hand, it questioned whether this will be PASOK's final decision while on the other hand it stated that it would be easy to find votes for Karamanlis' election as president from among the small opposition parties which, according to this pro-government newspaper, do not want general elections.

CABINET MEETS, DISCUSSES ECONOMY, ISLAMABAD MEETING

TA311547 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 31 Jan 80 TA

[Text] Ankara 31 Jan (AA)--The Council of Ministers met for 4 hours today with Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel in the chair. A statement at the end of the meeting stressed that the Council of Ministers decided to make the efforts required to obtain the desired results from the recently-announced set of economic measures.

Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen briefed the Council on the deliberations of the recent Islamic foreign ministers' meeting in Islamabad. According to the statement, it was decided to send the parliament a draft act amending the legislation regulating the procedures concerning drafting of reserve military functionaries and officers.

TWO AGREEMENTS, PROTOCOL SIGNED WITH POLAND

TA312029 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 31 Jan 80 TA

An agreement on developing economic and technical cooperation between the two countries, which was initialed during Karas' visit to Turkey last year, was also signed during the talks held between the Turkish and Polish delegations. A protocol reorganizing trade between Turkey and Poland was also signed in Ankara. The protocol was signed by the Foreign Ministry foreign trade secretary general, Guzay Guldere, and by Karas. With the protocol, which was signed at the end talks lasting 3 days, Turkish-Polish trade will be doubled thus reaching $200 million [presumably per year].

GOVERNMENT DISCUSSING DEFENSE FUNDING PROPOSALS

ID311203 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 31 Jan 80 p 32 ID

[Clare Hollingworth report: "Pym Fights for Defense Budget"]

[Text] The government is now discussing the defence white paper, which will be presented to Parliament by Mr Pym, defence minister, at the end of next month. Officials in the Ministry of Defence still claim that despite the fresh, stringent expenditure cuts, which are due to be considered by the Cabinet this weekend, the government aims to increase defence spending by 3 per cent in real terms in the new financial year.

The Russian invasion of Afghanistan and President Carter's decision to increase the United States defence budget by 5 per cent in real terms, has inspired Mr Pym to "campaign" against the Treasury, who were attempting to cut the defence budget, which now stands at 7,824 million pounds at 1979 prices.

This official notes that this makes the Defence Ministry fourth in the list of big spenders, ahead of housing, industry and trade, energy and employment.

The Treasury have complained that defence has not borne its fair share of November's public expenditure cuts. Whitehall officials appear to have forgotten that the government pledged to its NATO allies to increase its defence spending by at least 3 per cent in real terms.

If Britain failed to live up to this undertaking there would be unpleasant repercussions among members of the Atlantic alliance.

In addition, members of the three services are watching with anxiety, because they were promised comparability in pay with men and women doing similar jobs in civil life.

A pay rise of between 18 per cent and 20 per cent is, perhaps overconfidently, anticipated by many servicemen.

ARBEITER ZEITUNG WELCOMES 'CARTER DOCTRINE'

AU281721 Vienna ARBEITER ZEITUNG in German 26 Jan 80 p 4 AU

[Friedrich Katscher commentary: "The Carter Doctrine"]

[Text] Since pro-Soviet communists seized power in Afghanistan in a bloody military coup at the end of April 1978, and the Soviet Union was the first country to officially recognize their regime (although assertions about a Soviet involvement in the coup were described by TASS as deliberate lies), Moscow has regarded their southern neighbor country as part of its sphere of control. The intervention of Soviet troops in Afghanistan against an alleged enemy from outside (actually a strong and armed internal opposition) in accordance with communist logic is therefore regarded as "fraternal aid." Thus Moscow is genuinely surprised why this intervention "in its own backyard" is causing such a stir in the West and especially in the United States.

Hungary 1956, Czechoslovakia 1968, Afghanistan 1979/80--in none of these cases, under the Brezhnev doctrine, was a country invaded that was situated outside of Moscow's direct sphere of influence. The politically realistic Soviet leaders, who dislike adventures, are obviously well aware that the West would not take it lying down if they were to transgress the frontiers of their bloc. Hence it is unlikely that the men in the Kremlin would also actually have planned to dispatch Soviet forces to Iran or to Pakistan, because they rightly shrink from the risk of a worldwide war.

Nevertheless, it is right away that President Carter in his State of the Union message, delivered annually in January, made it quite unequivocally clear that an invasion of any other Asian country (the Soviet Union to the south borders only on Turkey, Iran and Afghanistan, but could get from Afghanistan to Pakistan) would be a casus belli, a reason for war. Had the West in the 1930's threatened Hitler with the same determination (and a corresponding military potential), we would probably have been spared World War II (although Hitler, unlike the old men in the Kremlin, was an adventurer).

On 18 June 1979 the U.S. President gave the surprised Soviet state and party chief Brezhnev a kiss of peace at the signing of the SALT II agreement, which meanwhile is peacefully slumbering. Now, 7 months later, the leader of the Western superpower has taken off the kid gloves and is flexing the muscles of the United States with his "Carter Doctrine." It is regrettable that this policy of strength and toughness leads back to the cold war and that detente will be shelved, but because the Kremlin politicians are realists, they will take seriously and heed the warning from Washington (if they were toying with the idea of military action in Iran or Pakistan).

Better a--I hope only temporary--phase of cold war, in which both sides know where they stand and accordingly act cautiously and circumspectly, than a single day of a hot war, which probably would not be confined to conventional weapons.

GENSCHER SPEAKS OUT ON OLYMPICS BOYCOTT

Supports U.S. Olympic Boycott

LD031822 Hamburg DPA in German 1732 GMT 3 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher for the first time has intimated publicly that the Federal Republic would join the United States if it boycotted the Olympic games in Moscow. In an interview with DIE WELT, Genscher was asked whether it would not be politically risky for the Federal Government to regard it as possible for Americans to stay away from the games while German athletes participated in Moscow. He replied: "The Federal Government has never given any impression of this kind. The United States can rely on us in this issue, also."

Genscher stated that anyone who expected U.S. solidarity for free Berlin could not refuse the Americans German solidarity in this matter. The federal foreign minister said that responsibility now lay with the Soviet Union. It caused the participation of many teams from all over the world to be doubtful. "It alone can remove these causes."

SPD Chairman Willy Brandt stated on Sueddeutscher Rundfunk on the question of an Olympic boycott that there are different views as to whether a boycott would be a really effective sanction. "I believe, however, that there is no longer any point in discussing it much. The games are not likely to be able to take place in the form they are meant to."

Urges U.S.-European Solidarity

[Text] Bonn--Immediately before the start of the German-French consultations in Paris, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has confirmed the view that the security of Europe cannot be guaranteed without the United States. In an interview with the daily DIE WELT, (Monday's edition) Genscher said, regarding the world political situation following the Soviet march into Afghanistan, that the most important prerequisite for controlling the present conflict and avoiding similar situations in the future is to avoid all false impressions which could lead Moscow to the illusion that Europe and the United States can be separated.

"I therefore think it is the central task of all those responsible in Europe to make it quite clear that we will meet this challenge together with the United States." Genscher said he believes that the French also see things this way. France is also convinced that the present situation can be mastered only in the closest partnership with the United States. "Therefore no one should have the illusion that he can separate Europeans and Americans." Genscher said the American nation is aware of its responsibility for world peace. "It expects the solidarity of its allies." There must be no doubt about that.

Touching on German-French consultations, Genscher said that agreement between Bonn and Paris is important for Europe and the Western alliance. Europe must take its place in the overall strategy of the West. This applies to the strengthening of the alliance's defense capability, the stabilization of the Middle East region and Turkey, cooperation with the Third World and the resolution of the crisis. Genscher said that in his talks in the United States there had been agreement that the German task in central Europe lay in stabilizing Turkey and helping the Third World.

In this context the federal foreign minister said it is important that CSU Chairman Franz-Josef Strauss shares the government's view that Bonn's task lay in central Europe. In the face of opposition voices to the contrary, Strauss' statement is important for the predictability of German policy.

Genscher noted that the interest of the Federal Republic remains fixed on the continuation of talks with politicians in the East. "Visits have been postponed, but the dialog must go on." Everyone in the West thinks the same. Bonn knows that the GDR, the CSSR and Hungary are still interested in a dialog. His talks with the Soviet ambassador, Vladimir Semenov, revealed a similar interest.

GRUENEWALD ON FRG-FRENCH COORDINATION ON AFGHAN CRISIS

LD021838 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1800 GMT 2 Feb 80 LD

[Text] In the current crisis between East and West, Bonn is aiming at a coordinated concept of the West with which to react to the Soviet march into Afghanistan. With reference to the German-French summit meeting starting in Paris tomorrow evening, Bonn Government Spokesman Gruenewald today spoke of an important intermediate stage on the path toward that objective. Gruenewald told WELT AM SONNTAG that Bonn's close relations with both the United States and France gave rise to the hope that such an overall concept is likely to come into existence.

Gruenewald emphasized in the interview that individual partners might have to take on differing tasks or roles in such a concept. Some kind of division of labor has already become apparent. In this connection the government spokesman mentioned Turkey, on whose behalf Bonn is again going to organize a relief campaign.

The 35th German-French Consultations start tomorrow evening with a meeting between State President Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Schmidt in the Elysee Palace. Among the topics will be the question whether Bonn and Paris may be able to assume some kind of mediating role in the conflict between Washington and Moscow.

It was learned from the German side that neither the Americans nor the Soviets would disapprove of such an idea. Amplifying on this, the Bonn government spokesman said that President Carter had agreed with the main features of the desired concept.

SCHMIDT'S INTEREST IN TALKS WITH USSR, GDR REAFFIRMED

Eager to Visit USSR

LD011324 Hamburg DPA in German 1152 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Given the continued uncertainty surrounding the planned meeting between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev, the Federal Government reaffirmed the chancellor's interest in visiting the Soviet Union this year. Government Spokesman Armin Gruenewald told the press in Bonn on Friday that it would be good if the meeting could be arranged this year.

The Soviet side has been told in Schmidt's government statement on 17 January of the importance the chancellor attached to his visit to Moscow. The government spokesman said that serious thinking on the planned Schmidt-Brezhnev talks was continuing in the Federal Government. He again pointed out that the Soviet Union had still not put forward a proposed date for the chancellor's visit. Gruenewald was not prepared to comment on when the Federal Government expected such a proposal. The chancellor had accepted Brezhnev's invitation, and it was international custom that the date be proposed by the host.

Ready for Talks With GDR

LD011510 Hamburg DPA in German 1404 GMT 1 Jan 80 LD

[Text] Marl/Westphalia--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today expressed regrets that the talks with GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker were not taking place for the time being. Addressing a meeting of more than 3,000 workers at the Chemische Werke Huels AG at Marl, the chancellor said: "To be quite honest, I would have liked to have the talks in the near future." He wanted to leave no one with any doubt that the government was ready to talk to the GDR at all times and soon. It was more important to talk once or 10 times "to prevent something else from happening."

The chancellor said he opposed using the present, tense international situation to frighten people. The citizens of the Federal Republic need have no fears, Schmidt said, but one must reflect. The key thing continued to be, in the future too, that people should treat each other sensitively, refrain from making big speeches, from boasting, or engaging in saber-rattling. Firmness in one's own stand and solidarity with one's Western neighbors and allies were now of particular importance.

The chancellor thanked the U.S. President for being circumspect regarding the hostages affair in Tehran, where 50 Americans have been detained for the past 80 days, and for not allowing himself to be forced into unforeseeable actions. It was remarkable how disciplined the Americans were in confronting these events.

SCHMIDT COMMENTS ON DETENTE FOLLOWING AFGHANISTAN

Detente Policy Not Ended

LD012008 Hamburg DPA in German 1947 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt believes the Soviet march into Afghanistan, although seriously straining the international situation, is not necessarily the end of the policy of detente. On the "Tagesschau" of German television Friday evening the chancellor said he believed it would be possible to reestablish the military balance between East and West as an important factor of detente. However, enormous efforts were required.

According to Schmidt, the Soviet action has met with reservations in various East bloc states, and "the most varied views" prevailed. To hide these differences of opinion, Moscow has urged its allies to suspend all contacts at government level with the West for the time being. However, the Federal Government will adhere to its preparedness for talks irrespective of the number of cancellations, the chancellor said.

Calls for U.S.-Soviet Dialog

[Excerpt] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has appealed to the Soviet leadership to affirm publicly, as U.S. President Jimmy Carter has done, that it intends to adhere to the SALT II agreements. In an interview with German television channel one, he said tonight that the arms control negotiations, despite the crisis in Afghanistan, will have to continue at all levels if East and West want to avoid getting into a totally uncontrollable arms race.

According to Schmidt, one essential factor in resolving the tense situation is for the political leaders in Washington and Moscow to continue talking. The Federal Government, for its part, will adhere to its willingness for talks irrespective of the number of cancellations. Asked if Bonn would be taking on the role of mediator between the two great powers, Schmidt said the Federal Republic is neither a referee nor a mediator. If Leonid Brezhnev and Carter want to talk with each other there is no need for either.

The chancellor affirmed that the Federal Government, despite the current crisis, will honor all agreements concluded with the East bloc countries, including the agreement with Moscow on economic cooperation. At the same time, he expected that all four powers will continue to honor the Berlin Agreement which they signed. However, to remove tension, Schmidt said, more than the mere adherence to valid agreements was required. Thus Moscow would have to appreciate that it is unacceptable for the Soviet Union to march into a small country like Afghanistan and thus threaten the legal order of the entire world.

Discussions on extending NATO's competency, such as those held by the CDU/CSU, are foolish, Schmidt said in the interview. He said the Federal Republic could contribute to stabilizing the Near and Middle East above all through development aid. In this area the Federal Republic, through economic aid for Turkey and Pakistan, for instance, will undertake to make greater efforts, thus setting an example for others.

DER SPIEGEL Interview

LD021856 Hamburg DPA in German 1720 GMT 2 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] Hamburg--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt believes that the Soviet Union and the United States, despite the current world crisis, intend to continue to prevent an uncontrollable nuclear arms race. The chancellor said this in an interview with DER SPIEGEL (Hamburg). The chancellor emphasized at the land delegates conference of the North Rhine-Westphalian SPD in Bochum this weekend, and in interviews, the need to continue the policy of detente and negotiate with the East despite the Soviet march into Afghanistan. To maintain peace was the most important task, the SPD politician said in Bochum.

Schmidt said in the SPIEGEL interview that he was worried about deteriorating communications between the United States and the Soviet Union. He was also worried by the fact that it was not altogether easy for the West to diagnose the Soviet Union's motives clearly, but that, on the other hand, it had become obviously difficult for the Soviet Union "to recognize the West's intentions correctly."

DEFENSE MINISTER APEL NOTES POSSIBILITY OF FRG ARMS BUILDUP

LD011835 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1800 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Federal Defense Minister Apel has spoken out against extending NATO's sphere to the Near and Middle East [words indistinct]. Safeguarding the West's oil supplies should not be seen as NATO's task, Apel told the Bonn paper GENERAL-ANZEIGER. Apel believes it possible that the navies of the European alliance partners will have to become more involved in the North Atlantic when the United States transfers its naval units to other regions. This would also mean more expense for the Federal Republic.

Concerning arms limitation, the defense minister said that if the Soviet Union does not intend to negotiate on this matter with the West, the Federal Republic may have to join in the arms spiral to safeguard the military balance. At the same time, Apel said that contacts with the government in Moscow should not be severed. He sees the current continuing silence between East and West as depressing.

WILLY BRANDT WARNS OF JEOPARDY TO EAST-WEST RELATIONS

ID011206 Hamburg DPA in German 1104 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--In the opinion of SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, the successes achieved through the policy of detente in the Federal Republic's dealings with the GDR and the East European states must not be jeopardized by the West's reaction to the Afghanistan crisis. The Federal Republic must look to protecting its own interests, Brandt notes in an article in the Coburg NEUE PRESSE, prereleased today.

"The Federal Republic would be one of those most harmed if the process of reducing tensions in Europe and businesslike cooperation between the superpowers went to the dogs."

Brandt emphasizes that the people in both German states nowadays had about the same deep concern over further developments; The successes achieved in safeguarding Berlin, the noticeable improvements for many people in both German states, as well as the normalization with East Europe must not be gambled away. At the same time, Brandt expresses the view that rapid progress in detente will be even less possible to achieve than ever before. "It will become more difficult and protracted."

The SPD chairman came out against extending NATO's range. German troops or naval units did not belong in the Middle East. The Federal Republic was further safeguarding overall Western interests by helping prevent a spread of tensions to Europe. An expansion of NATO's range, on the contrary, would threaten the Western defense alliance and mean additional exacerbation of the international situation.

STRAUSS REAFFIRMS SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT IN CERTAIN MATTERS

ID011432 Hamburg DPA in German 1331 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] Bonn--Franz-Josef Strauss, CDU/CSU candidate for the post of chancellor, has reaffirmed the readiness of his party to support the Federal Government in dealing with certain tasks in view of the international political situation. In an interview in the Saturday edition of DIE WELT, Strauss said that the CDU/CSU is further prepared to renounce its income tax program of DM15.6 billion either as a whole or in part, and it is ready to postpone the date this is to come into force should this be necessary to reinforce the security of the Federal Republic.

According to Strauss, the CDU/CSU would further support the government in developing civil defense and eliminating certain weak points in the technical equipment of the Bundeswehr and in reinforcing the Bundeswehr should the allies have to fulfill duties in the Middle East and thus leave the European defense area.

The politician came out for the development of East-West relations against the background of the Afghanistan crisis. He does not see the situation in Europe as dramatic. In the Middle East and Africa, however, there is the danger that the threshold has been overstepped.

POLISH FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIAL ARRIVES IN BONN

ID011618 Hamburg DPA in German 1430 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Stanislaw Dlugosz, first undersecretary of state in the Polish Ministry of Foreign Trade and Maritime Economy, arrived in the federal capital today as the first representative of an East bloc government following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Dlugosz met with Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff in Bonn.

According to reports, the Polish undersecretary of state discussed joint German-Polish projects proposed by his government. Two weeks ago Lambsdorff canceled a planned trip to Warsaw on short notice since he considered the time not ripe for direct discussions on these projects with the Polish Government.

After the talks, the Economics Ministry merely stated that both sides had expressed their satisfaction with last year's German-Polish foreign trade and with the progress of cooperation between establishments in the two countries. The two sides hoped [words indistinct] that these developments would continue.

According to CSU Chairman Franz-Josef Strauss, Warsaw is hoping for substantial credits from a bank consortium, with the Federal Government providing the security. In an interview with DIE WELT Strauss pointed out that Poland was in an extremely difficult economic situation. The national debt had reached $19 billion and was higher than that of the Soviet Union. This year alone Warsaw had to repay $5 billion. Since Poland is not in a position to make these repayments, it is seeking further substantial credits in order to make the repayments and to proceed with the necessary investment projects.

Strauss said this explained why the Poles were unhappy at the cancellation of the federal economics minister's visit to Warsaw. They had wondered whether this cancellation was linked to events in Afghanistan or to a fundamental change in the Federal Republic's foreign policy. According to Strauss, the Poles had informed the German side about their extensive wishes only 3 days before Lambsdorff's planned visit. Strauss went on to say that in Bonn people were taken aback that the Poles had, so to speak, blurted things out.

SCHMIDT BRIEFS TURKISH ENVOY ON EFFORTS TO EXTEND AID

TA011742 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 1 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The FRG Government is continuing its work regarding the urgent international financial aid Western countries are to extend to Turkey. Today Chancellor Helmut Schmidt received the Turkish ambassador to Bonn, Vahit Halefoglu, briefed him on the subject of aid to Turkey and asked him to relay this information to his government. AK AJANS [Mediterranean News Agency] reports that during the talks Chancellor Schmidt said that efforts were being made to achieve rapid results on aid for Turkey.

Work on international financial aid to Turkey is being conducted by Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, who has been assigned this task by Chancellor Schmidt. Matthoefer recently conducted talks with various diplomats and officials on this subject. Matthoefer will leave for Paris on Monday to meet with OECD General Secretary Emile van Lennep on the same issue.

Matthoefer is expected to visit Ankara between 17 and 19 February, according to an announcement made in Bonn. The announcement adds that Turkey's urgent needs will be determined during Matthoefer's talks with Turkish Government officials. After he concludes his visit to Turkey, the federal finance minister is expected to visit Washington and Tokyo in March for talks with officials on accelerating aid to Turkey. It is reported that the economic aid to Turkey is being considered in addition to the planned military aid.

ENVOY, FOREIGN MINISTRY ON TRIPOLI EMBASSY INCIDENT

NC041347 Paris AFP in English 1343 GMT 4 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Feb. 4 (AFP)--French Ambassador to Tripoli Charles Malo said today that there was a "close link between events in Tunisia and the demonstration at our embassy" which was invaded and burned this morning. He said the assault on the French Embassy in Tripoli was to cries of "people's revolution in Tunisia."

The ambassador said the demonstrators forced their way in and destroyed everything they set eyes on, but confirmed that all embassy staff escaped unhurt. He added that the embassy was guarded by only two policemen and that he had recently unsuccessfully appealed to Libyan authorities for increased protection.

The French Foreign Ministry meanwhile issued a statement terming the attack "inadmissible" and criticizing Libyan authorities for lack of action. The statement said the French Government protested "most energetically" against the destruction of its embassy which continued despite "the appropriate requests of the French ambassador" for protection.

The statement said France had informed the Libyan Foreign Ministry that it considered the behaviour of Tripoli authorities inadmissible and reserved the right to claim damages. It added that the French Government was forced to examine the consequences of today's events on France' relations with Libya.

Ambassador Malo's statement confirmed speculation earlier today that the assault was linked to French logistic support of the Tunisian Army during last week's commando raid on the Tunisian town of Qafsah, allegedly part of a Libyan-backed plot to overthrow the Tunisian Government. One man arrested after the Qafsah raid claimed on Tunisian television yesterday that he had been trained in Libyan bases and charged that Libya had promised "unlimited support."

GISCARD ON FRENCH ROLE IN INTERNATIONAL CRISIS

LD011514 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 1 Feb 80 LD

[Summary] President Giscard d'Estaing visited the vocational training school in Baume-Les-Dames today, where he made a speech on adapting vocational training to employment needs. He also spoke about the international situation:

[Begin Giscard recording] "What action should France take, and I am speaking of the simplest (?option) in the circumstances? It should be to continue action for peace. Action for peace excludes neither loyalty to our alliances, which we never put in doubt, nor firmness in our stands, which we have shown on many occasions, and in particular each time that destabilization of the continent neighboring ours--that is, the African continent--has been involved, where France intervened in good time and alone. What is France's role? Is it to increase international tension by making itself a spearhead of that tension, or is it to search out patiently, without harboring any illusions, what can be done, what can be asked, what can be suggested to attenuate international tension? Well, I am convinced that at the present time French opinion and the French people want France to be seen as a country which is currently pursuing an effort for peace in this tense situation." [end recording]

Valery Giscard d'Estaing has canceled this afternoon's program, as he has appointments in the Elysee. He will prepare for the French-German summit, which has been put forward; talks with Schmidt will begin on Sunday evening. He will also receive the Tunisian ambassador.

PCF INTELLECTUALS PROTEST TO USSR OVER SAKHAROV AFFAIR

LD011303 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 24 Jan 80 p 10 LD

[Unattributed report: "A Letter to Leonid Brezhnev From PCF Intellectuals"]

[Text] PCF intellectuals sent the following message to the Soviet head of state and CPSU general secretary yesterday:

"Dear Comrade,

"It is with great emotion that we have just learned of the measures taken by the USSR Supreme Soviet against Academician Andrey Sakharov. We are anxious to protest to you in the strongest possible terms. We cannot accept that such administrative measures should continue to replace the vital ideological debate and political and ideological struggle.

"As French intellectuals we are deeply attached to the freedom of opinion, speech and creativity which the struggle of our people, its working class and progressive intellectuals have been able to wrest from the bourgeoisie.

"As Communist intellectuals we are convinced that the democratic requirements is a universal and necessary component not only of the struggle for socialism but also of socialism itself.

"It is this policy which we approved at our 23d congress. It is this policy which our comrade Georges Marchais had the opportunity to explain to you during the meetings between our two parties.

"The administrative measures taken against Andrey Sakharov clearly run counter to such a policy and that is why we have decided to inform you of our opinion as quickly as possible in the hope that it will be taken into account.

"Our fraternal wishes, dear Comrade."

MARCHAIS SCORES CARTER ON OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

LD032204 Paris Domestic Service in French 2100 GMT 3 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Georges Marchais, when closing the Communist Youth Congress at Vitry-Sur-Seine, had some picturesque words to say about Jimmy Carter. This is what he had to say:

[Being Marchais recording] Carter wants to liquidate the Olympics. In the name of what? I shall be charitable. I shall not recall the lamentable spectacle which this operetta sportsman put before the whole world during a certain memorable running race.

But I do ask the question: Is he qualified, he who only has the word war on his lips to talk about this magnificent contest of friendship among nations, of this peaceful context among young and old of all nations, of all races and opinions? To this we reply, no, one hundred times no. [end recording]

Since the forces of capitalism form a bloc, added Georges Marchais, it is necessary for the revolutionary forces to close ranks. It is this necessity which lies behind the stance which the Communists adopted with regard to the events in Afghanistan.

GOVERNMENT WINS VOTE OF CONFIDENCE IN PARLIAMENT

WA021439 London REUTER in English 1233 GMT 2 Feb 80 WA

[Text] Rome, Feb 2, REUTER--The Italian Government won a vote of confidence in Parliament this morning, as predicted, after more than a week of delaying tactics by Radical Party deputies. The confidence vote was passed by 522 against 50 with eight abstentions. Premier Francesco Cossiga asked for the vote last Monday as a way of breaking the deadlock over an anti-terrorism decree. The decree, which gives police wider powers of arrest and detention, is expected to be approved by the lower house later today. The Radicals have led the opposition to the decree, and their 18 deputies have hamstrung parliamentary business for over a week. Their obstructionist tactics, with each speaking for up to 12 hours non-stop, have enraged other parties.

Antiterrorism Measures Passed

AU021557 Rome ANSA in English 1515 GMT 2 Feb 80 AU

[Excerpt] Rome, February 2 (ANSA)--The government led by Francesco Cossiga today won a vote of confidence with 522 votes in favor, 50 against and 8 abstentions. The confidence motion was used to halt the Radical Party's filibuster against the government's anti-terrorism decree. Those voting in favor of the government were: The Christian Democrats (DC), the Communists (PCI), the Socialists (PSI), the Social Democrats (PSDI), the Republicans (PRI) and the Liberals (PLI). Those against were the Radicals, the Proletarian Unity Party, and for opposing reasons, the "MSI" Neofascists. Among the abstainers were 6 dissident Socialists including former PSI Secretary Giacomo Mancini. The dissidents released a document outlining their criticism of the government's anti-terrorism policies. The confidence motion was [word indistinct] Monday linked by the government to voting on the anti-terrorism decree to foil the Radical Party's obstructionism. The Radicals had tabelled 7,500 amendments to the law decree.

From that moment on the house went into around-the-clock debate on the anti-terrorism measures. (The Senate had already approved the packet). The debate ended today and after the vote of confidence the deputies cast a secret ballot for the packet of anti-terrorism measures, without amendments. The outcome of this ballot was 446 votes in favor, 79 against and 5 abstentions.

PCI: NO COOPERATION WITHOUT 'GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY'

AU040914 Rome ANSA in English 0845 GMT 4 Feb 80 AU

[Text] Rome, February 4 (ANSA)--The prospects for a new government after the present Cabinet led by Christian Democrat Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga have returned to the center of the political scene here after the weekend approval of the government's anti-terrorism decrees.

All political activity was virtually [words indistinct] the weekend by the marathon filibuster of the decrees promoted in Parliament by the small, but vocal Radical Party. The measures were approved by a very large majority and it was the Italian Communist Party (PCI) to fire the first shot subsequently with a warning that it would not be prepared to take part in policy discussions with the other parties unless there were assurances of government responsibility once agreement had been reached. The warning was contained in an article published yesterday morning by the party daily, L'UNITA. The signature was that of a leading party member, Alessandro Natta.

In response to a proposal from Republican Party leader Giovanni Spadolini for a "programmatic confrontation" between the democratic parties, Natta's harshly worded reply said: "If there is not absolute clarity on the necessity of cutting the knot of Communist participation in the government, the PCI will take part in no negotiation".

Natta, who was in effect speaking on behalf of the Communist leadership, provoked an immediate reaction from Christian Democrat Luigi Granelli, one of the closest supporters of party (DC) Secretary Benigno Zaccagnini. Writing for yesterday's edition of the DC daily, IL POPOLO, he criticized the "pretense to impose, with disputable ultimatums, formulas for great coalitions which have been established a priori".

The DC is the largest party in the Rome Parliament, followed closely by the PCI. The present government is a three-way affair of the DC, and two minor parties, the Social Democrats (PSDI) and the right-of-center Liberals (PLI). The third largest party, the Socialists (PSI), ensures the minority Cabinet's survival by abstention. The small Republicans, like the Socialists, are in an abstention position. IL POPOLO also carried an editorial charging the PCI with wanting to be "more equal than the others" by laying down its presence in the government as a necessary condition for discussions on policy.

PLI leader Valerio Zanone, like spokesman for some more conservative Christian Democrat factions, also came out with criticism for the Communist stand. Zanone argued that the Communists' "preemptory pre-condition" would effectively limit talks on a policy platform only to those parties prepared to open the government to the PCI from the outset. Before the PCI's increasingly rigid line, the democratic parties must strengthen five-way solidarity", he added in a reference to his proposal for a five-party coalition, including the present three government parties plus the Socialists and the Republicans.

LISBON NOTES POLITICAL SIGNIFICANCE OF MOSCOW CONTRACTS

LD030313 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0000 GMT 3 Feb 80 LD

[Text] A piece of good news for the development of our trade: The Soviet people are going to wear Portuguese shoes. Our Moscow correspondent, Carlos Fino, reports:

[Begin recording] On Friday evening representatives of Portuguese firms signed here in Moscow new contracts for the export of footwear to the USSR. Important for what it represents in foreign exchange--some $5 million--and in jobs--some 200,000 pairs of shoes and boots are to be supplied to the Soviet market--the signing of these new contracts at this particular moment is also not devoid of political significance because these are the first contracts signed between firms of the two countries since the cooling of political relations between Lisbon and Moscow.

The Portuguese businessmen currently visiting Moscow believe that if the signing of the new contracts has not totally dispelled some of the small clouds that have appeared, it is nevertheless a good sign that political problems may in the end have no negative reflections in the commercial sphere.

In fact I am in a position to report that the Portuguese trade mission here in Moscow intends very shortly to reiterate to the Soviet authorities our country's interest, even in the present circumstances, in continuing trade contacts and particularly in seeing that the meeting of the joint committee on trade goes ahead as originally planned. Indeed, it is believed that, besides our traditional exports, Portugal would like the USSR to give greater consideration to our metal industry products and, at least in the medium-term future, to our shipbuilding and repairing facilities.

The decisive test, however, will be provided by the Soviet response to the Portuguese Export Development Fund's requests for audiences with Soviet officials next week and by the subsequent results of the meeting of the joint committee, if it does in fact take place. [end recording]

COOPERATIVES, COLLECTIVES TO RESIST AGRARIAN REFORM CHANGES

LD031125 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 0915 GMT 3 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] The collective units of production and farm cooperatives in the agrarian reform area decided yesterday to go ahead with all the necessary forms of struggle to prevent--within the constitutional framework--the continuing onslaught against the agrarian reform. This decision was approved in Avis yesterday at a meeting of collective units of production and farm cooperatives representatives, during which matters connected with spring crops were also discussed. According to Lino de Carvalho of the Evora District Secretariat of Collective Units of Production and Farm Cooperatives, large mass gatherings, work stoppages and appeals to the organs of sovereignty are some of the forms of struggle to be undertaken by the workers.

MADRID NOTES INCONSISTENCY IN GUATEMALAN STATEMENTS

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] The decision adopted yesterday by the Spanish Government in the Council of Ministers to break off diplomatic relations with Guatemala is backed up not only by the support of the Spanish political forces but also by several countries and international organizations. This is the most severe measure than can be used in international relations and means the opening of an important breathing space for Spain in its foreign relations worldwide, and especially with the Latin American countries.

The assault on the Spanish Embassy in Guatemala has already been publicly condemned by nearly all the political parties with parliamentary representation, and the Socialists and Communists have requested that the subject be included urgently in the chamber's debates.

Reactions on an international level have not been long in coming and yesterday the condemnations of the UN secretary general, Kurt Waldheim, the U.S. secretary of state, Cyrus Vance, and the secretary general of the Organization of American States, Alejandro Orfila, among others were issued. The Venezuelan foreign minister has started consulting his colleagues in the Andean Pact to adopt a common stand in view of events in the Guatemalan capital.

The Guatemalan foreign minister, Castillo Valdez, told journalists that he deeply regrets the decision to break off diplomatic relations between his country and Spain. At the same time he acknowledged that the police acted hastily in entering the Spanish Embassy. He also said the has transmitted his government's communique, in which this hastiness has also acknowledged, to his Spanish colleague, Marcelino Oreja. The foreign minister added: We hope that time and facts will throw light on the tragic events and that they will be sufficient for the friendship between our peoples, brothers in blood and culture, to return to normal.

However, these statements contradict the interpretation of the events at the embassy issued by Guatemala to the United Nations. The Guatemalan Government appears to be determined to make the Spanish ambassador, Maximo Cajal, responsible for the assault. In a note given to UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim it is said that the police entered the diplomatic building in response to several phone calls for help from the building.

The Guatemalan interior minister did not make it clear to journalists why the public force did not listen to the repeated requests for withdrawal from the embassy, made not only by Ambassador Cajal, but also by the former Guatemalan vice president and minister who died in the fire.

One of the occupiers of the embassy who, together with the Spanish ambassador, managed to survive the assault, disappeared yesterday from the hospital where he was recovering from injuries received. A group of 15 heavily armed men took him away in a car. The affiliation of the kidnapers is not known but it is odd that when they arrived at the hospital the uniformed police on guard had disappeared; thus, a witness who could clear up some still shady points of the savage assault on the Spanish Embassy has disappeared.

In the meantime, the Guatemalan National Committee Against Repression which groups trade unionists, students and religious and political groups who oppose the government, remains inside the campus of the National Autonomous University of San Carlos.

'ANTITERRORIST' MEASURES FOR BASQUE REGION ADOPTED

LD012206 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 01 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] Here is a dispatch from the Moncloa Palace.

The government has issued a note in relation to the terrorist attack in Vizcaya. The note reads as follows:

Before the Council of Ministers began today's agenda, the prime minister informed the Cabinet about the serious attack which occurred this morning in Vizcaya which caused the deaths of six members of the Civil Guard. The prime minister expressed the sorrow of everyone for this attack on the state security forces and informed the Cabinet that he had sent the minister of the interior and other high-ranking Interior Ministry officials to the Basque Country to analyze the situation caused by the escalation of terrorism and the combination of measures necessary to confront it. The Cabinet examined the situation in depth and agreed to proceed immediately to organize, under a single authority, the direction and planning of the antiterrorist struggle in the Basque Country and the coordination, control, and logistical support of all state security forces.

A special government delegate has been appointed with headquarters in the Basque Country, the delegate will have the widest government powers with regard to this subject. Maj Gen Carlos Saenz de Santo Maria Tinture, inspector general of the National Police, has been appointed to this post. The above measures are backed up by the extension of all the financial support necessary for him to fulfill his task.

The same circles said that the object is to provide the most effective means for the antiterrorist struggle. The government also wants to intensify policy action against violence. DENKTAS ON RESUMPTION OF INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that resuming the intercommunal negotiations within the framework of an unrealistic UN General Assembly resolution that considers the Greek Cypriot administration sovereign in Cyprus would have its drawbacks. Denktas was replying to questions by journalists this morning in connection with a report that appeared in the Greek Cypriot press to the effect that the intercommunal talks would resume on 15 February and continue in stages. Denktas said that he had not received any official documents to that effect.

Denktas pointed out that he would meet the UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, Galindo Pohl, next Thursday. Denktas said that the resumption of the intercommunal talks was indeed being considered and that these considerations had been conveyed to him unofficially. He added that these considerations and views were similar to those prior to the latest UN General Assembly resolution. The president charged that the latest UN resolution prevented the resumption of the intercommunal talks. He said that he did not know what Waldheim thought about the issue or what he would do about it.

Denktas said: Resuming the intercommunal talks under the shadow of an unrealistic and baseless UN General Assembly resolution that considers the Greek Cypriot administration the government of Cyprus would have its drawbacks. Measures that can eliminate these drawbacks must be taken. Sovereignty in Cyprus is based on the partnership of the two ethnic communities. The partnership was undermined by the Greek Cypriot leadership with the use of arms; consequently, sovereignty belongs to the Turkish Cypriots in the north. There is a Greek Cypriot administration in the south. Acknowledgement of these realities and a new intercommunal partnership is inevitable. The intercommunal talks will not resume in accordance with prescriptions drawn up by this or that person, or this or that body. It is certainly possible to find a formula that does not discriminate against the Turkish Cypriot community, that acknowledges our equality and our rights of sovereignty in Cyprus and that eliminates the drawbacks of the latest UN General Assembly resolution. We are working on that. We cannot renounce our rights just because the talks must be held within a set period of time.

Denktas reiterated that the Turkish Cypriot community did not recognize the UN General Assembly resolution that set a time limit for the resumption of the talks and that the resolution ran counter to the agreements reached at the summit meeting. He also said that since the Turkish Cypriot community did not recognize the resolution, the issue of establishing committees did not concern it.

GOVERNMENT, PARTIES REACT TO MCCLOSKEY SPEECH

Report on Speech

AT011600 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 1 Feb 80 pp 1, 9 AT

[Excerpt] The United States is determined to maintain the balance of military forces between Greece and Turkey. According to the U.S. viewpoint, this balance should be based on the ratio of 7 for Greece to 10 for Turkey, because that country has a larger population and, by extension, larger military forces.

This U.S. policy, which constitutes a commitment by Carter to Karamanlis, will be implemented in every instance of military aid from the United States to the two countries; that is, both regarding the annual military aid and the military materiel that will be given to Turkey within the framework of the bases agreement, which is predicted to be signed in the middle of February, and regarding the corresponding agreement which will be concluded with Greece.

These reports emanate from excellently informed U.S. sources which also add that, because of the current state of affairs, Greece's military significance has become important in view of fears for developments in the Balkans after Tito. The same U.S. sources do not foresee dramatic developments taking place in the area because of Yugoslavia. However, they consider it wiser to take preventive measures in good time in order to deal with any eventuality.

Within this framework, Washington now unequivocally recognizes Greece's increased military significance. Everything U.S. Ambassador in Athens McCloskey stressed during a luncheon yesterday at the U.S. Propeller Club constitutes a confirmation of the above. Specifically, McCloskey confirmed that:

The United States has undertaken the obligation to actively and decisively oppose the use of force in the solution of differences in our region (consequently, of Greek-Turkish differences). The United States has committed itself to the maintenance of the current military balance between the countries of the region--consequently, between Greece and Turkey. The United States is determined to strengthen democracy in Greece. The United States considers it important to all the allies that Greece return to the NATO military wing as soon as possible. The United States reaffirms its will to cooperate with the United Nations, the Cypriots and the allies to find a mutually acceptable solution for the Cyprus problem.

Papandreou: U.S. 'Pressure'

AT011602 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 1 Feb 80 p 3 AT [Text] In reference to McCloskey's speech, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou stated: "In his speech at the Propeller Club, McCloskey revealed the U.S. plan for Greece, Turkey and the Aegean. Despite his careful phraseology, he confirmed to the Greek people that coordinated pressure is being exerted on Greece to return to the NATO military wing as soon as possible.

"With regard to concessions of our country's national sovereign rights in the air, sea and undersea areas of the Aegean, he assured us that he will promote a 'peaceful settlement' under U.S. arbitration. These coordinated pressures on the Greek Government are directly linked with the cold war hysteria that characterizes U.S. policy in this very difficult period for international peace. [paragraph continues]

"We warn the government that the Greek people will not agree to any concession of Greek sovereign rights on the altar of U.S. and NATO expansionist plans in our area. We call on the government to bring the issue of the relevant negotiations to the Greek parliament so that the Greek people may be fully briefed on what is happening."

Foreign Minister's Defense

AT021450 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 2 Feb 80 pp 1, 3 AT

[Text] "The government knows very well, without dangermongering and shouts, how to defend national issues," Foreign Minister Rallis stated yesterday in reply to PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou's statements the day before yesterday in response to U.S. Ambassador McCloskey's speech at the Propeller Club.

Rallis' statement is as follows: "The righteous indignation of the PASOK chairman about the 'American plan' that was revealed in the U.S. ambassador's speech yesterday raises great questions for every reader of good will who tries to understand what all these things are which the government is 'concocting' in cooperation with the United States.

"When McCloskey says that the United States has undertaken to guarantee the maintenance of the current balance of military strength between countries of the area, is that contrary to our own aims? When he says that the United States has committed itself to actively and unequivocally oppose the use of force in the Aegean, is that contrary to our policy? Does the PASOK chairman forget how hard the prime minister strove to achieve these two commitments which are so significant for the country's security?

"When McCloskey says that both countries are dedicated to a just settlement of the Cyprus problem providing for a sovereign, nonalined and independent democracy, and that the United States will continue its close cooperation with the United Nations toward that goal, is that contrary to our course? When we say that both of us are determined to strengthen democracy in our countries, is that reprehensible?

"Finally, when he says that it is important for all of us to guarantee the return of the Greek forces to NATO, does this constitute 'coordinated pressure' auguring the abandonment of our sovereign rights? The prime minister has repeatedly stated that pressure is not being exerted on the government, nor would the government accept it if it were ever exerted. Thus it is high time to put an end to this myth of pressure which is offensive to the country's dignity.

"For years now the PASOK chairman has been monotonously repeating the refrain about pressures, abysmal plans aiming at the enslavement of our country and the truncation of our national rights. However, let him rest easy that neither does the government intend to sell out Greece, nor has PASOK become the only trustee of our national affairs. In all these recent years, the government has proved that it knows very well how to defend national interests with persistence, prudence and equanimity, without dangermongering and shouts."

In reply to Rallis, the PASOK chairman stated: "We request the foreign minister to explain the following:

--Is the occupation of 40 percent of Cyprus a reality or not?
--What role did the allies and especially the United States play in the great Cyprus treason?

--Will the Turkish troops withdraw from Cyprus or not?

--Will the refugees return to their homes or not?

--Does the just solution of the Cyprus problem include, for Rallis, the withdrawal of the Turkish troops and the return of the refugees to their homes and a guarantee for a unified Cyprus Republic?

--Is Rallis ready to assure the Greek people that the government will not make any concessions to Turkey and the United States?

--Is Rallis in a position to assure us that the status of the Aegean, as it was in 1974, will remain untouched?

--Finally, does Rallis remember the role the United States and NATO purposely played on 21 April 1967?

--Does Rallis remember the Haig proposals for the redistribution of sovereignty in the Aegean?

"When he has replied to us on the above questions, then and only then shall we enter a dialog."

Further Government Defense

AT031834 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 3 Feb 80 pp 1, 3 AT

[Text] The government reacted yesterday with unusual sharpness to Papandreou's most recent statement on U.S. Ambassador McCloskey's speech, noting that the PASOK chairman is avoiding substantive dialog and using demagogic sloganeering. In the statement yesterday, the government spokesman accused Papandreou of deliberately ignoring the assurances of the U.S. ambassador about the obligations the United States has undertaken both to maintain a military balance and to oppose the use of force. The government spokesman questioned Papandreou's objectivity on the issues of Greek-U.S. relations because of the passion that is gripping him against the United States.

The government spokesman's statement is as follows: "Finding himself in an exceptionally difficult position after the foreign minister's reply to the arbitrary interpretation he gave to McCloskey's speech, Panandreou, in accordance with his usual tactics, tried to change the crux of the issue and, instead of entering into substantive dialog, launched his demagogic sloganeering. Certainly he knows that his sloganeering is based on baseless rumors and unfounded claims.

"Papandreou deliberately ignores the most important point of the address: McCloskey's declaration, which is so significant for Greece, that 'the United States has committed itself to actively and unequivocally oppose the use of force' in the area, and that it has undertaken the commitment to guarantee the maintenance of a military balance.

"This declaration is valuable for every Greek who has constantly lived through the trials and tribulations of this country. Therefore, the reasonable question arises: Is PASOK not interested in the maintenance of this military balance? Does PASOK support the use of force even when no serious national reason dictates this?

"No dialog can be conducted with Papandreou on issues that are based on vague rumors and unfounded demagogic claims, especially because he certainly knows that the West had nothing to gain from the criminal coup in Cyprus and he certainly knows of Archbishop Makarios' statement that the U.S. services had warned him of it, as he also knows about other indisputable facts which have emerged from events and not rumors.

"Despite all this, Panandreou tried to assail and deprecate the significance of the U.S. ambassador's statement. Greeks who know Panandreou were not surprised by this fact, as they were also not surprised by his position a few days ago when before the Greek parliament he downplayed the Russian invasion of Afghanistan.

"It is obvious that the PASOK chairman is gripped by passion against the United States, something that does not allow him to have an objective judgement on these issues."

In his statement Papandreou, among other things, had asked for explanations of whether the Turkish troops will withdraw from Cyprus and whether the status of the Aegean will remain as it was in 1974.

KKE (Ext): U.S. 'Intervention'

[Text] Commenting on U.S. Ambassador R. McCloskey's speech, authoritative KKE circles stressed the following: Today's provocative speech by the U.S. ambassador recalls similar activities by Purifoy and the other U.S. officials of the cold war era. Threats of U.S. interventions in the internal affairs of other countries which, as is natural, first of all are addressed to the country in which McCloskey is accredited, as well as the cynical admission that the United States confronts the problems of Cyprus and the Aegean according to the exclusive yardstick of its strategic interests and its aggressive aims, and the dictates of the U.S. ambassador on the foreign policy Greece should follow, all constitute not only an unacceptable national insult but a warning of the dangerous situations into which the United States seeks to push our country.

The Greek people have a history, have national pride, experience and courage, and the U.S. imperialists should not ignore this. For the government it is an issue of elementary dignity to bring the U.S. ambassador to order.

KKE (Interior) Statement

AT021535 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 2 Feb 80 p 6 AT

[Text] In connection with U.S. Ambassador McCloskey's speech [on 31 January], the KKE (Interior) press office issued the following statement:

Under Washington's increasing pressure--as can be clearly seen from yesterday's speech by U.S. Ambassador McCloskey at the Propeller Club--serious dangers have been created for the course of foreign policy and national issues by, on the one hand, the government's tendency to get away from the "multidimensional" foreign policy it had declared and to aline itself on international issues with the U.S.-NATO policy and, on the other hand, its clearer aim to return the country to the military wing of NATO.

In such circumstances the threat is becoming clear for a freeze in relations with socialist countries and for the Moscow agreements to remain dead letters, for the continuation of contacts to be suspended, for the government to lose the opportunities that were opening up for more supports and greater flexibility in its foreign policy and finally to be led into concessions toward Turkey and the United States-NATO at the expense of national integrity and independence.

The dangers of such a slippery course are clear. For this reason there is an imperative need to raise strong barriers to it. The government must clarify its position toward McCloskey's "advice" for the solution of the Aegean problems through "mutual concessions," and at the same time all national and democratic forces must coordinate their struggle against imperialist pressures and against the position of concessions adopted by the New Democracy government.

COMMERCE MINISTER DENIES GRAIN, OIL EXCHANGE WITH USSR

ATO21400 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 2 Feb 80 AT

[Text] No proposal has been submitted to the government by the Soviet Union for the purchase of Greek wheat in conjunction with the delivery of Russian crude oil. This statement was made by Minister of Commerce Panayiotopoulos because of a press report that the snag in the delivery of Russian crude oil to our country is due to the rejection of this Soviet demand.

After all, Panayiotopoulos stressed, existing stockpiles of wheat available for export amount to only 200,000 tons, and preferably they are exported in the form of flour products.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALLY PROPOSES PERMANENT OLYMPICS SITE

ATO21800 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 2 Feb 80 AT

[Text] Greece today officially submitted a proposal to the International Olympic Committee [IOC] for the Olympic games to be held permanently on Greek soil. In a letter to IOC Chairman Lord Killanin, Prime Minister Karamanlis went back to the proposal he submitted 4 years ago, during the Olympic games in Montreal, that a permanent site be named for the holding of the Olympic games, and stressed that Greece is the most suitable country for this purpose.

In his letter Karamanlis mentioned that recent developments around the issue of the Olympic games have now acquired dangerous dimensions for the fate of this unique ancient institution, and furthermore the quarrels caused by these developments change the Olympics from a factor of detente to a factor of international tension.

I believe, the prime minister stressed, that the choice of Greece is the only way to purify the institution and reunite it with its true meaning. Greece offers to facilitate the solution of these problems by donating the appropriate area--in fact, in ancient Olympia--for the permanent holding of the games. This area can acquire the quality of a neutral territory through an international agreement that will protect rights within the facilities, establish the inviolacy of the area and recognize the decisive role of the Olympic committee in its athletic jurisdictions.

Greece, Karamanlis added, is ready to discuss the arrangements which the committee will consider necessary for this purpose. Finally, the prime minister stresses that his proposal which already has met with a very broad response by international public opinion is not dictated by nationalistic or selfish motives, but aims at the protection of the Olympic ideal.

FOREIGN MINISTER LEAVES FOR EEC MEETING IN BRUSSELS

TA031643 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 3 Feb 80 TA

Replying to a question on the issue of the free movement of Turkish workers among EEC countries, and on advantages the EEC granted to Third World countries being extended to Turkey, Erkmen said: These as well as other advantages should be accorded to Turkey, since we are an associate member of the EEC and not a Third World country. I shall also raise this issue in the council meeting.

The Turkey-EEC Association Council will meet in Brussels on Tuesday, 5 February. Turkey's request for the revival of its relations with the EEC is also expected to be taken up by the EEC ministerial council which is meeting in Brussels tomorrow. Some internal issues as well as the latest developments in Iran and Afghanistan are also to be discussed in the meeting.

[Text] A delegation under the chairmanship of the under secretary of the prime minister's office and deputy under secretary of the State Planning Organization, Turgut Ozal, left Turkey today at 1700. The delegation is expected to conduct talks with FRG officials, as well as officials of the IMF, the World Bank and certain international banks. Turkish Central Bank Director Ismail Hakki Aydinoglu and officials of the foreign and finance ministries are accompanying Ozal. The delegation will begin its official contacts tomorrow in Bonn where it will meet with FRG Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer. The delegation will then proceed to Washington for more contacts. The Turkish delegation will have meetings in New York with representatives of certain international banks and will continue to hold talks in Britain and France on the same subject on its way back.

In a statement to the TRT before he left Turkey, Ozal said that the delegation's visit would last 12 days. During the talks the delegation will exert efforts to increase promised aid and loans to Turkey. Ozal added that during his talks with the IMF the standby agreement with this organization will be negotiated. He said that the delegation would supply the necessary technical information to institutions involved in aid to Turkey.

ECEVIT LEAVES FOR VIENNA TO ATTEND SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL

TA021633 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1620 GMT 2 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 2 Feb (AA)--RPP Chairman Bulent Ecevit flew to Vienna today to attend a meeting of leaders of member-parties in the Socialist International.

Ecevit said at Esenboga Airport that this was the first time he was attending a meeting since the RPP joined the Socialist International. The topics of disarmament and energy would be taken up at the meeting which starts Tuesday, he noted, and he would have a chance to meet Chancellor Bruno Kreisky of Austria and Chairman of the Socialist International Willy Brandt of Federal Germany.

Asked about the placing of U.S. missiles with nuclear warheads in Europe, Ecevit said he wished that a more serious evaluation of Brezhnev's Berlin talk of 6 October 1979 had been made in Europe.

With regard to domestic affairs, Ecevit criticized the "mentality and motives" behind the recent economic measures, in the face of which the RPP could no longer continue its policy of "softening up" its opposition. On possible new governmental alternatives if the National Salvation Party withdraws its support from the current government, Ecevit said the situation needed to be "reassesed" and he had to think things over for a few days. He was particularly critical of the government's decision not to require exporters to bring in foreign exchange earnings up to $40,000 per shipment, which meant "legitimizing" smuggling out foreign exchange in installments.

ARMENIAN ORGANIZATION CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR BRUSSELS BOMBING

TA032054 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 3 Feb 80 TA

[Text] An Armentian organization calling itself the "New Armenian Resistence" claimed responsibility for bombing the Turkish airlines office in Brussels on Saturday. The bomb caused some damage to the door and windows of the office, but no one was injured. Unidentified persons who phoned the AFP news agency [presumably in Paris] claimed that the Turkish and the Soviet airline offices were bombed by the New Armenian Resistence organization. Armenian organizations have also claimed responsibility for other bombing incidents against Turkish airline offices in other parts of Europe.

DEMIREL CONFIDENT NEW MEASURES WILL CURB INFLATION

TA011530 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 1 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 1 Feb (AA)--Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel claimed his government's recent economic measures would curb inflation. Speaking to reporters today following his weekly interview with President Fahri Koruturk, Demirel said nobody could benefit from picturing the recent measures as a "wave of price hikes." Where else could the government close a 351 billion lira deficit, he asked.

If state enterprises continued operating at a deficit, he predicted the current monthly inflation would double. Asked how prices would be controlled the prime minister said he has already charged the finance and industry ministries and the municipalities with checking prices. He claimed the price increases had done away with black market prices.

To a question of whether the public statement he and opposition leader Bulent Ecevit had made in recent days meant the "government-opposition dialog" was ruptured, Demirel responded by saying dialog should not be taken to mean "silence." Everyone may say what he thinks, he said, within the "rules of political courtesy." There was "no place for sulking" in politics, he commented.

Demirel hoped his cabinet could submit a proposal for a minimum living allowance to parliament within a couple of weeks. Any government which cannot balance its accounts is doomed to hurt the nation, he declared, like the man who hurts his family if he cannot make ends meet.

ECEVIT VIEWS POLITICAL IMPLICATIONS OF RECENT MEASURES

TA011516 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 1 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara 1 Feb (AA)--Republican People's Party [RPP] leader Bulent Ecevit believed the Turkish people would "reject" the "alien and borrowed" economic model which the current government was attempting to "impose" upon them. At a press conference today, Ecevit elaborated on the foreign policy which "goes with" such an economic model, claiming that foreign policy was "evident" more in what the foreign minister failed to touch upon than the points he made during his recent foreign policy address in parliament.

The foreign minister's talk had touched upon no other external relation other than Turkey's relationship with the West, Ecevit claimed. The minister had failed to discuss relations with "countries of the region, Africa or national independence movements," he noted. No time was allotted to disputes with Greece, [words indistinct] NATO, (?were left) out, the Aegean disputes were dismissed with one sentence, "probably so as to create confidence in Turkey on the part of NATO." And no reference was made to the "multilateral balance" the RPP government had introduced into Turkey's international economic relations, except for loans expected from the West.

The opposition leader believed Turkey ran the risk of compromising her domestic economic strength and her future while trying to attract foreign aid based on Turkey's increased strategic importance in the face of certain "passing developments" in the region.

Turkey's real tie with the West was "democratic" rather than "geopolitical or strategic," he claimed. And an economic model adopted by Turkey which was "incompatible" with democracy would "sever" Turkey's strongest and lasting link with the West, and foreign aid given "only out of geopolitical motives" would tend to "isolate" Turkey in her region, he predicted.

Referring to a challenge by Premier Suleyman Demirel, who claimed his government had done "the only thing that could be done" by covering the public sector's deficit with enormous price increases, Ecevit suggested the government could have tried "tax reform" as a remedy. He recalled that the Justice Party has "obstructed" a tax-reform attempted by his government in 1978.

Ecevit feared opening up indiscriminately to foreign investment would threaten domestic industry and cooperatives with "crushing competition. We may not even be able to make tomato paste with domestic capital," he commented. He charged that the Demirel government, "was apparently determined to adopt an economy on the South American model," without caring for the welfare of either the domestic manufacturer or the citizen.

Additional Ecevit Comment

TA011545 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1540 GMT 1 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 1 Feb (AA)--Republican People's Party [RPP] leader Bulent Ecevit advised labor trade unions against active resistance to the recent economic measures or any other physical action of protest. Answering questions at his press conference Friday, he said such action would be risky at this time of widespread terrorism. He believed the unions could be effective by merely expressing their views and concerns.

Ecevit rejected the possibility of any connections between the economic measures of the government and the recent letter of warning by the military commanders. Asked whether the RPP expected a return to power in the near future, Ecevit said he saw no such possibility.

He found the Demirel government's unnecessarily "conciliatory" attitude toward EEC and NATO udesirable. His "personal" view of the call for a boycott of the Moscow Olympics was, Ecevit said: it would be best not to let "political considerations" interfere with sports activities, sports helped bring together people of various nations and thus enhanced peace, although the question of Afghanistan was a serious one.

FINANCE MINISTER PRESENTS 1980 BUDGET BILL TO SENATE

TA031813 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 3 Feb 80 TA

[Excerpts] The Senate began discussing the 1980 budget bill today. Addressing the Senate, Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin said that the government was resolved to take all kinds of measures that would bolster exports and other foreign exchange revenues. In fact, most of the latest decrees which we have issued, Sezgin said, are a proof of our determination.

The Senate met today at 1000 under the chairmanship of the Senate President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil. In an opening statement Caglayangil said that the debates for this year's budget were taking place at a time when Turkey and the world were facing various problems.

Addressing the Senate after Caglayangil, the finance minister presented the 1980 budget bill to the Senate. In his speech, which lasted 3 hours, Sezgin briefed the Senate on the present economic situation, the latest measures taken by the government and the new budget bill. Pointing out that the objective of the latest measures taken by the government was to prevent the situation from getting worse, Finance Minister Sezgin said that not one of these measures was taken because a certain foreign organization [apparently the IMF] had proposed them, but because of economic pressures. Sezgin added that the Turkish nation had the necessary awareness and common sense to anticipate the constructive results of these measures and to justify the government's action.

Noting that foreign loans which could currently be used had reached $1.345 billion and, that this amount would reach at least $2.5 billion in the coming days, Sezgin said that $364 million of loans obtained from the United States, commercial banks and the IMF had already entered the ledgers.

Pointing out that the Turkish economy did not have the strength to meet the continuous oil price hikes announced by OPEC nations, Sezgin said that extreme oil consumption could only be curbed by the sacrifice of our community.

FRG, ITALIAN MINISTERS HOLD TALKS IN ROME

LD021946 Hamburg DPA in German 1855 GMT 2 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Rome--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Italian counterpart, Attilio Ruffini, have emphasized the need for an overall Western strategy toward the Soviet Union. The two ministers, meeting in Rome on Saturday evening, discussed the international situation in view of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The two sides spoke out in favor of increased consultations between the countries of the European Community and the United States within the framework of the EC and the North Atlantic pact. They felt, however, that NATO should not go beyond its territorial competencies. Genscher and Ruffini agreed that the West should not be limited to condemning the Soviet Union. However, above everything else, East-West detente would have to be preserved.

Part of the talks served as preparation for the EC Council of Ministers session chaired by Italy early next week in Brussels. Also discussed were Portugal's entry to the EC, Turkey's association and a cooperation treaty with Yugoslavia.

Genscher returned to Bonn tonight by air. Following a meeting with Swedish Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten on Sunday, he will proceed for Paris to attend the German-French summit.

LE SOIR REPORTS PREMIER'S SPEECH ON LEGISLATIVE PLANS

LD041615 Brussels LE SOIR in French 25 Jan 80 pp 1-2 LD

[Text] As announced--and following a preparatory Cabinet meeting--Mr Wilfried Martens appeared before the Chamber on Thursday at 1000 hours (and before the Senate at 1100 hours) to read out a 20-page government document.

The document in question spells out the intentions agreed upon by the recently formed team which the prime minister will try to lead, at least in the coming weeks, to waters calmer than those it has recently navigated. In fact, Mr Martens explained that what he had in mind was not "a new government agreement" but the introduction of a number of changes in an already known text. As far as the purely political significance of the prime minister's speech is concerned, let us refer to some of its main points.

With reference to parallelism, "the government would like both the programming law and draft laws concerning regional and municipal affairs to be dealt with soon and to progress at a similar pace."

With reference to parliamentary prerogatives, "the government wants to show respect for them in every way. It wants a broad discussion on its projects and it is prepared to agree to some improvements. However, it asks its majority to question neither political balances nor objectives aimed at by both the programming law and the draft laws concerning regional and communal affairs." Finally, it should be noted that Mr Martens made a long statement on the dismissal of ministers belonging to the Democratic Front of Brussels French Speakers [FDF] from his government. In short, they adopted an attitude which made it impossible for them to remain members of a coalition government. However, they may have been treated unceremoniously, and they are entitled to receive apologies.

A Kind of Minister

Mr Martens gave an almost minute-by-minute account of the events of 16 January, when he parted company with Mr Defosset, Mr Outers and Mr Persoons. Unlike their colleagues, these ministers were not prepared to accept the draft statement to be made in Parliament, agreed upon after long discussions.

"I asked the ministers who opposed this agreement," Mr Martens stated, "whether they had drawn the appropriate political conclusions from their attitude. Their answer was that they had not.

"Under the circumstances, I was obligated to tell them that the government's normal functioning had become impossible as a result. I advised them that I intended to report the matter to the king. We agreed to meet again after I had seen the king. In accordance with my advice, the king agreed that Mr Outers, Mr Defosset and Mr Persoons should resign.

"As a result of a misunderstanding which arose among the departments concerned, for which I take full responsibility, a press communique on the subject was issued prior to my second meeting with the ministers in question. I intended to inform them about this decision personally and I would like to apologize to them for the fact that they learned about it on the radio."

Consistent With the Government's Statement

"I would like to state that no government agreement was negotiated on that occasion. The government remains faithful to its declaration and to the government's agreement attached to it. It is true that the Council of Ministers has prepared proposals with respect to the implementation of the state reform. However, contrary to what has been alleged, these proposals are consistent with the government declaration."

"The government intends to start discussions immediately on a definitive state report, with a view to implementing it during the present session of parliament," the prime minister stated, adding that "the government will do everything in its power to implement a definitive state report during the current session on the basis of the work done by the parliamentary working group.

"The government will ask Parliament to formulate a guarantee with a view to insuring that, in the event of the dissolution of the chambers prior to the conclusion of activities concerning the final phase, the validity of the statement on constitutional reform is extended.

"To provide as much time as possible for activities concerning the final reform at both government and parliamentary level, the government has decided to limit the duration of the second phase in order to insure on the one hand, that it cannot interfere with the final phase in any way and, on the other, that the reform bill can be adopted rapidly.

"Therefore, the government will withdraw during the second phase all its proposals relating to the revision of certain clauses in the Constitution. It will amend bills referring to regional and municipal matters in such a way that no revision of any clauses in the Constitution will henceforth be necessary.

"It follows that the competence of cultural councils can no longer be extended to include matters concerning individual people."

Referring to matters concerning individuals, Mr Martens explained that the two secretaries of state for community affairs in the Brussels region will be jointly responsible for institutions established in the Brussels-capital city bilingual region. Any matter on which they fail to agree will be submitted to the Cabinet.

"Prior to the implementation of the final phase, the government intends to adopt a limited number of decisions relating to both special and ordinary bills concerning regional and community affairs.

"The decisions relating to a special bill concerning regional and community affairs, providing for the creation of regional councils in accordance with article 107 of the Constitution, will be maintained. These councils will be able to adopt decisions and decide on the allocation of regional credits. However, courts will be able to rescind such decisions and judges will be able to check whether they comply with the enabling law.

"All arrangements during the second phase will be of a temporary nature. They will expire on 31 December 1984 with the exception of those relating to financing, which will expire on 31 December 1982. After this date a definitive financing system will gradually be introduced.

"A regional community fiscal system will be introduced within the framework of a redistribution of the financial system among various state agencies. This represents a modification of the 10 January 1980 government decision."

Points of Difference Between Regional Powers

"In matters falling within the competence of regional authorities, a distinction will be made between matters within the competence of the three regions and those which also fall within the competence of the Walloon and Flemish regions and which, because of their nature, cannot in fact be implemented in the Brussels region.

"As for the question of financing the regions and communities, the present system will remain in force until 31 December 1982.

"As far as the communities are concerned, annual grants will be allocated by the national Parliament to cultural councils. These grants will be distributed in the same way as in the past and their allocation will be determined by the cultural councils.

"As for matters relating to individuals, credits will be determined on an as yet undefined basis. The allocation of these credits will be determined by the national Parliament on the basis of proposals submitted by the community government."

Mr Martens recalled with reference to the Brussels region that, in the event of the regional budget not being adopted prior to 1 January, the regional government will have at its disposal on a provisional basis funds amounting to one-twelfth of the budget of the previous financial year until the budget is submitted for approval.

What Exactly Are Ordinances?

"Ordinances issued within the framework of powers granted to regions can abrogate, complete, modify or replace the existing laws which govern these matters," the prime minister stated.

Legal control is limited to the control of any ordinance's conformity with the enabling law and with decisions made at a higher level.

"Any conflict can be submitted for arbitration by the state council department dealing with conflicts between the competences of various agencies."

The prime minister recalled that it is possible to make use of the "alarm bell" procedure provided for in clause 38(b) of the Constitution, which is applicable to this draft law or bill under conditions laid down by the Constitution.

"According to the actual text of clause 38(b) of the Constitution, this procedure can only be used as an exceptional and ultimate measure once it has been established that all other measures have been ineffective."

Discussions Within the Same Language Group Permitted

"The government is prepared to agree to prior consultations among and joint action by members of parliament belonging to the same language group in the Chamber or Senate, as provided for under clause 38(b) of the Constitution, should any draft law or bill adversely affect relations between communities. Obviously, any agreement thus concluded will have to conform with both legal and constitutional provisions and the government's actual decisions."

The German Community Will Not Be Overlooked

"During the study of the state reform the government will not lose sight of the German community," Mr Martens stated, adding that "the parliamentary working group will also have to consider the status of the German community within the framework of a definitive state reform."

The Programming Law Must Be Adopted Soon

"The government's proposals relating to state reform should enable both parliament and the government to continue their efforts with a view to resolving economic and social problems on the basis of the government statement.

"Special attention is now being paid to the adoption of the 1980 budget which," Mr Martens recalled, "has been prepared with the following four objectives in mind: reorganization of national finances, incentive to employment, preservation of monetary stability and preservation of purchasing power. These objectives are as valid now as they were when the budget was being prepared.

"In view of all this, it is a matter of major importance that this programming law be adopted and implemented in the near future."

Referring to health insurance, the prime minister stated that the government would begin discussions in a spirit of dialog with its partners in the medical sphere [avec les partenaries de la Saint-Jean] (the government, social interlocutors, insurance companies and doctors).

"At the same time," Mr Martens stated, "the government will continue its efforts aimed at achieving, together with the social partners, a fundamental reform of social security, it being understood that it is up to Parliament to make the final decision."

Parallelism

"The government gives the same kind of precedence to state reform as to economic and social problems. In fact, the government statement has already made it clear that it will be practically impossible for the government to resolve economic and social problems unless it simultaneously implements the indispensable institutional reform."

In conclusion, Mr Martens stated that the government would like to see its projects fully discussed and that it is prepared to accept some improvements.

GENSCHER STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF U.S. FOR FRG SECURITY

DW041005 Bonn DIE WELT in German 4 Feb 80 p 1, 3 DW

[Interview by Bonn correspondent Bernd Condar and editor Friedhelm Kemna with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher: "Genscher: Without the United States There Will Be No Security for Us"]

[Text] WELT: The biannual German-French consultations will officially begin in Paris this Monday. What will the Federal Government stress particularly in coordination with France on the Afghanistan crisis?

Genscher: German-French agreement is important for Europe and for the Western alliance. We want Europe to play a part in the overall strategy of the West. That pertains to strengthening the defense capability of the alliance, the stabilization of the Mideast region and Turkey, cooperation with the Third World and overcoming the crisis.

WELT: There are certainly no problems between Bonn and Paris. But will they be created through the necessary coordination with Washington?

Genscher: Clearly not. There is no differing assessment between the Europeans and the United States as regards the necessity and the aims of the general concept. Our French friends are just as convinced as we that we can meet the challenge of present developments only through closest partnership with the United States. Therefore, nobody should foster the illusion that he could separate the Europeans from the Americans. Nobody should fool himself: The American nation is aware of its responsibility for peace in the world. It expects the solidarity of its allies. The latter must not be called into question. All those who are making public or other statements now ought to be aware of this.

WELT: How do you assess the state of interests of the FRG following the GDR's postponement of the date when the Federal chancellor was supposed to meet SED chief Honecker and the cancellation of the Hungarian foreign minister's visit to Bonn?

Genscher: As before, we aim at continuing talks. Visits have been postponed, but the dialog must go on. That is not a specifically German state of interests; the entire West thinks like that. Keeping crises under control and mastering them calls for pointing out our ideas to the other side and clarifying our own aims and reactions. That makes our policy predictable. We will do what we can to save the other side from erroneous assessments and illusions. It is important not merely to overcome this crisis, but to avert repetitions and preserve the prerequisites for East-West cooperation, without which world peace cannot be safeguarded in a lasting way.

WELT: But obviously the other side does not want to have contacts now. Do you see in this situation a chance for the chancellor's planned Moscow visit?

Genscher: Eventually the Soviet Union, too, will not ignore the necessity of talks based on an assessment of its own interests. Moreover, it is not merely the contacts among the Europeans that produce the dialog between East and West; the important thing now is talks between the two big powers. Both are necessary. We know about the continuous interests of the GDR, Hungary and the CSSR in having a dialog with us. My talks with Soviet Ambassador Semenov show such an interest as well. It is known that the Americans considered it important for Soviet Ambassador Dobrynin to return to Washington, and he returned. It means that talks are taking place between the United States and the Soviet Union.

WELT: What reasons do you think the Soviet Union and the GDR had, certainly after mutual coordination, for initiating the postponement? Do you see a connection between the termination of your Prague visit and the cancellation of the visit of the Hungarian foreign minister?

Genscher: Several interpretations are possible.

WELT: Minister for Labor Ehrenberg recently postponed his Moscow visit himself. Simultaneously, however, one is under the impression that top West German economic leaders are going in and out of Moscow. Is there not a certain discrepancy?

Genscher: In viewing the present state of East-West relations one should not take the visits on the higher and highest political levels as the only criterion. The dialog can also continue on other levels, and in another form.

WELT: In Washington you just discussed the principles of a long-term Western strategy with President Carter and Secretary of State Vance. When is this idea supposed to take the form of a concrete decision, and who will make that decision?

Genscher: This is not a matter of formalizing decisions but of finding a common idea among the Americans and Europeans involved. Individually different contributions will be produced despite the common goal. That process is in full swing and has already produced concrete results. This includes negotiations between the European Community and Yugoslavia, which will produce, upon our initiative, a more rapid conclusion with a considerably improved result for Yugoslavia. This includes German efforts aimed at effective aid for our alliance partner Turkey. It also includes the discussion of cooperation agreements between the European Community and the Gulf states, which also took place at our initiative. Talks between Western states and Japan on contributions to the economic and thus political stabilization of Pakistan are part of our overall concept, the basic principle of which is the idea of the division of labor, mastering the present crisis and avoiding future crises.

WELT: Do the ideas of the U.S. President contained in the appeal to the allies to become more involved in the Middle East region go beyond the things you have just said, or are the ideas similar?

Genscher: My Washington talks demonstrated that our ideas are in agreement, but I can only speak for the Federal Republic of Germany. We agree that the German mission pertains to central Europe, stabilization in Turkey and aid for the Third World.

WELT: So there will be no action by German soldiers or other German military personnel outside Europe?

Genscher: I repeat that our task lies in central Europe. In view of different statements made by the opposition, it was important for the predictability of German policy that the CSU chairman pointed out abroad an opinion that is in accord with the opinion of the government.

WELT: In your idea of a long-term strategy, an important part is played by strengthening the independence of the states of the Third World. You reiterated in an interview given to the weekly DIE ZEIT that the East-West antagonism must not involve the Third World. A daily interpreted this by saying that you wanted to warn President Carter in this way. Is that interpretation correct?

Genscher: No. The context clearly indicates that the object was the Soviet Union. We, the West, must face the task of supporting the independence of the states of the Third World. Resolving the economic and social problems of developing countries is the great political and moral task of the coming decades. It is practical human rights policy. Creating stable structures in these countries is also an effective peaceful means of avoiding conflicts. The stronger the internal and external stability and independence of the states of the Third World, the less they will be exposed to the danger of foreign tutelage or intervention.

WELT: There are differences among the European allies with regard to the tone of reactions to developments in Afghanistan. The Federal Government, for example, exhibits a special reservation in matters of boycotting the Olympics. How can that be explained?

Genscher: The most important prerequisite for keeping the present crisis under control and for avoiding a new one is to avoid creating any wrong impression that could lead Moscow to have the illusion that it could separate Europe from the United States. Plans to make such an effort are already recognizable. I consider it, therefore, a central task of all those who have responsibility in Europe to make it absolutely clear that we will face that challenge together with the United States. There must not be the slightest doubt here. Only this position will correspond to our interests. The security of Europe cannot be guaranteed without the United States. Everybody ought to realize that. Clarity on this issue does not imply that we must beat the drums. As regard the Olympics, we have left no doubt that the Soviet Union must create prerequisites permitting atheletes from all over the world to take part in the games.

WELT: Do the French share that position?

Genscher: I have no doubt about it.

WELT: Does not the political view play a considerable role in this situation? Can it not be ticklish with regard to that political view if the impression is created that the Federal Government considers it possible that Americans will not go to the Olympic games while German athletes will run in Moscow?

Genscher: The Federal Government never created such an impression. The United States can rely on us in this matter as well. Those who expect American solidarity with free Berlin cannot withhold German solidarity from the Americans in this matter. By the way, we are equally involved in Afghanistan. But I repeat, the responsibility now lies with the Soviet Union. It is responsible for the fact that participation of many teams from all over the world has become doubtful. It alone can eliminate these reasons.

WELT: As regards the problems of German defense contributions, some confusion has been created in public. You said in the Bundestag debate on Afghanistan that nobody can rule out the possibility that the alliance might ask us to contribute more to defense. We must be prepared to do that. Defense Minister Apel, however, remarked some days ago that there is no reason to increase expenditures for the defense of the Federal Republic. What is the opinion of the Federal Government?

Genscher: What I said to the Bundestag was also meant to prepare our public to face the fact that it is not enough to say that we condemn the occupation of Afghanistan. Rather, we must be prepared rather to accept burdens. That also pertains to our efforts in the field of security. There are no differences of opinion between the defense minister and me in this matter.

WELT: Mr Minister, you are not just the chief of the Foreign Ministry, you are also the chairman of the FDP and an election fighter. How much influence do you think will be exerted on the election campaign by the mood and the political consequences of Afghanistan?

Genscher: In view of the grave situation, I consider anyone irresponsible who makes decisions with an eye to the election campaign. Those who tailor their policy according to the election moods and expectations will not live up to their responsibilities to the peace and the security of their country. Nobody can say what effect the present events will have on the election chances of individual parties. I am convinced that the citizens of our country will agree with those who firmly represent the security of our country, trying together with our partners to continue a policy that is aimed at mitigation of tensions and not at an increase of them.

WELT: CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor Franz-Josef Strauss assessed the international situation following his talk with Romanian state and party chief Ceausescu almost the same way as you have formulated it. Therefore, this issue could not be a point of dispute in the election campaign.

Genscher: That would be a plus for our country and for the alliance. I have never left any doubt that wherever there is agreement, particularly in foreign policy matters, it should not be covered up intentionally. Wherever differences exist they should not be covered up either; they must be discussed unemotionally. One must be responsible enough to live up to the common responsibility, not merely where agreement exists but also where contrasting positions are held.

WELT: What election topics will you consider especially important in the forthcoming months in order to point up the FDP image as that of an independent and liberal party?

Genscher: The attention of the people is now directed for good reason at foreign and security policies. It is incontestable in this connection that the FDP has been guaranteeing the continuity of German foreign policy since the establishment of the FRG. It is the only party that has supported all basic decisions of German foreign policy: Western integration together with the CDU/CSU, realistic detente policy together with the Social Democrats, and with Walter Scheel as the first FRG development minister it pointed out the great significance of that problem. It is, therefore, a guarantor of the predictability of German foreign policy in the future.

WELT: The FDP tried to present itself in the election campaign as an independent political force between the SPD and the CDU/CSU.

Genscher: It does not try to do that; it is that.

WELT: That statement suffers from the fact that through its government coalition statement the FDP is tied to the SPD and that there is acutally no chance that this might change.

Genscher: If you are part of a government, you say yes to that government, or you would have to leave the government. None of the coalition parties, therefore, suffer from their cooperation as partners, that is cooperation with equal rights. One could speak of suffering only if one expected the other to abandon basic positions; that would be the end of cooperation.

WELT: Do you think the great problems that are worrying the people at present will curtail the chances of the Greens [environmental protection party]?

Genscher: Yes, I believe so. Parties can claim to bear responsibility in a democratic system only if they are responsive to all important problems. It is not enough to pick one or two issues. I would like to caution you against assuming that we will make foreign and security policy problems the only election campaign issues. Naturally there are other central issues such as, for example, economic and social policies, safeguarding the liberal constitutional state and protecting the environment.

WELT: The media policy will certain be important in the election campaign. What do you think about that as chief of a liberal party?

Genscher: We stated our position clearly at the FDP media congress with regard to the current varied problems, particularly with regard to the news media. I think it will become clear here that we do not want to have monopolies in this field either.

WELT: Also not the monopoly of public semiofficial institutions?

Genscher: Also not the public semiofficial monopoly.

WELT: So certain suggestions of Lower Saxony Minister-President Albrecht will not be so unappealing to you?

Genscher: In this matter we are not concerned with new media but existing media. The discussion in northern Germany actually ought to aim at preserving an existing institution and putting it in a position where it can take into consideration regional developments of the northern German area. It ought to aim at producing a balanced report. I do not think the destruction of an existing installation is the right thing to do. I think it is not too good if the impression is created that three land governments are struggling for the Norddeutscher Rundfunk Network like demonstrators fighting for the only existing loudspeaker.

WELT: Goodby, Mr Genscher. Have a good flight to Paris.

EMBASSY IN MOSCOW REJECTS ALLEGATIONS IN CONNECTIONS WITH KOPELEV

LD041742 Hamburg DPA in German 1207 GMT 4 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] Moscow--The Federal Republic's embassy in Moscow has "most resolutely" rejected a Soviet newspaper report on allegedly improper relations between civil rights campaigner Lev Kopelev and the embassy. The FRG mission in the Soviet capital was reacting today to a report in yesterday's SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA. Kopelev, author and translator of the works of Heinrich Boll, was accused, among other things, of having visited the embassy and having received "via diplomatic channels" gifts on a regular basis in exchange for "anti-Soviet goods."

An embassy statement says: "The Federal Republic most resolutely rejects the claims and suggestions made in the article." Kopelev had not visited the embassy, "let alone received gifts from it 'via diplomatic channels.'" The embassy's contacts with Kopelev had at no time gone beyond what was customary in the framework of the normal and cultural relations between the Federal Republic and the USSR.

GISCARD, SCHMIDT REACH AGREEMENT IN TALKS

Initial Talks

LD041231 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 4 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Talks between Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Helmut Schmidt will resume this afternoon. On the content of the first exchange of views at the Elysee last night very little was disclosed, but this morning it is pointed out that the French and German sides appeared very satisfied with the vitality of their entente, and a comment from the Elysee tells us that the initial Franco-German talk has allowed a very thorough examination of the various aspects of the international situation. On the French side great satisfaction has been expressed at the close of the initial talk which, as I have told you, has given proof of the vitality of French-German entente. In other words, the two sides are talking about the same thing in the same manner.

'Excellent Mood'

LD050014 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 4 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] This is the second day of the French-German super summit in Paris--super because of the importance of the two delegations, Helmut Schmidt plus 11 ministers on the German side, and Valery Giscard d'Estaing plus 12 ministers on the French side. The joint communique summing up the talks is awaited with a certain impatience. But as for the mood, this 35th French-German summit seems to be excellent. Things are fair between Paris and Bonn. (Dominique Souchier) reports:

Tomorrow there will be a joint French-German statement on the international situation. Even before this summit is over--I can tell you it is a point which has been settled right now--Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Helmut Schmidt reached agreement during their talks yesterday evening and today. Until now convergency was spoken of; henceforth, it will be a matter of a certain identity since there will be a joint statement on three themes which are:

1. A further condemnation of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan;

2. A reaffirmation of solidarity with the United States;

3. But without alining themselves, France and Germany will stress that in current circumstances they have particular responsibilities and a strategy of their own. And that will be the central point at this summit where, moreover, bilateral relations, which are the bread and butter of these French-German summits, are also much discussed. However, the range of subjects is wider than usual since they range from the economy to space, not forgetting agriculture, technical matters and defense. The ministers of defense are also taking part in the discussions for the first time in a long while.

Final Meetings

LD051016 Hamburg DPA in German 0938 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Summary] Paris--Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had a third and final private meeting this morning at the 35th French-German summit. It is being followed by an expanded meeting which includes French Premier Raymond Barre and the two foreign ministers, Jean Francois-Poncet and Hans-Dietrich Genscher. This largest and most intensive French-German summit will close with a full meeting of all 20-odd government representatives of the two countries later this morning.

Joint Communique

NC050925 Paris AFP in English 0918 GMT 5 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Feb 5, (AFP)--France and West Germany today termed the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan "inacceptable", and reiterated their commitment to the Atlantic alliance in a joint statement issued at the end of the 35th Franco-German summit here.

The full text of the statement reads:

The French president (Valery Giscard d'Estaing) and the chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany (Helmut Schmidt) examined in depth the current international situation in the light of events in Afghanistan.

They reached the following conclusions which define the two nations current policy:

1) The Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan is inacceptable and creates serious dangers to stability in the region and to peace. France and Germany consider it vital the operation be stopped without delay as requested by a large majority in the United Nations. It is the only way of restoring a situation conforming to the rights of the Afghan people and to the demands of international peace.

2) France and Germany consider the current crisis could unleash a process which, whatever the intentions, could have the most serious consequences for the world. Under these circumstances, they firmly reiterate their two nations' allegiance to the Atlantic alliance and their determination to honor all commitments it entails.

3) France and Germany take note that in the light of events in Afghanistan detente has become more difficult and uncertain and that therefore withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan is a necessity. They declare that detente would not withstand another shock of this nature. In this case France and Germany, together with their allies would take the necessary measures to safeguard their security and international stability.

4) France and Germany understand the concern expressed by countries genuinely committed to nonalignment, and declare that these countries have their own role to play in international peace and stability. They agreed that East-West confrontation must be prevented from spreading to the Third World.

5) France and the Federal Republic of Germany, whose people suffered the trial of two world wars on their homelands, have been working for the past 30 years for a more stable and peaceful world. Their mutual reconciliation, their joint participation in creating a European Community and their parallel policies favoring detente were all steps in this direction.

They consider that under current circumstances the European powers have special responsibilities. France and Germany emphasize their intention of assuming these responsibilities and guaranteeing, in partnership with their allies, the fundamental balance ensuring the security of their two countries and of Europe.

6) French and West Germany efforts to overcome the current crisis will be meaningless unless the Soviet Union demonstrates a willingness to reciprocate. The two nations noted declarations that the Soviet Union plans to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan.

Putting these declarations into action is vital to the success of discussions on which depend security and future peace.

BOURGES CONFIRMS 'LOGISTICAL' AID TO TUNISIA

LD042208 Paris Domestic Service in French 2100 GMT 4 Feb 80 LD

[Text] For the first time since the events in Qafsah in Tunisia, the French defense minister has officially confirmed that France has sent logistical aid. However, Yvon Bourges pointed out this evening that in no way is this a question of a French military intervention in Tunisia: [Begin Bourges recording] There has not been a French intervention. France granted logistical aid to a country with which it has very sustained and very frequent and longstanding relations. In particular between our armed forces: We receive Tunisian pupils and Tunisian officers in our schools and we have French instructors in Tunisian schools, and the Tunisian Army is very largely equipped with French equipment. We have sent two transalls and two Puma helicopters--unarmed--which have served as means of transport for the Tunisian Army. It is logistical aid. It is a form of technical assistance. SPORTS MINISTER DETAILS POSITION ON MOSCOW OLYMPICS

LD041227 Paris FRANCE SOIR in French 1 Feb 80 pp 1, 4 LD

[Gerard Baudouin report: "Soisson: We Will Not Go to the Games If..."]

[Excerpt] After apparently equivocating, the French Government has finally clarified its position on the Moscow Olympics through Sports Minister Jean-Pierre Soisson:

"1--Primarily it is the sporting movement which must decide whether to go to Moscow.

"2--The athletes must make up their own minds according to their own conscience.

"3--The International Olympic Committee must decide whether the Moscow Olympics are a genuine world festival of sport or a spartakiad bringing together communist countries alone. In that case France would have nothing to do with Moscow."

CARRINGTON, PONCET DISCUSS RESPONSE TO AFGHAN INVASION

LD041147 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 4 Feb 80 p 26 LD

[Anne Sington dispatch: "Carrington Seeks Harmony on Afghanistan"]

[Text] Paris--It would be a mistake to imagine that all countries should take identical action in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Lord Carrington said in Paris yesterday. The foreign secretary had just completed what he described as "very private" talks with his French opposite number, Jean-Francois Poncet, and made a point of playing down divergences between British and French thinking. The important thing, he said, was that the West as a whole should be seen to condemn the Soviet Union and "this, I think, has been done."

He said he found no difference in the two countries' analyses concerning the detente, which they considered beneficial to both East and West, and wished to see continued. But his itemised list of British responses to the Afghanistan situtaion nevertheless revealed differences in views.

He pointed to Britian ending its credit agreement for trade with the Soviets, its stand on the Olympics, and its consideration of the possible need to tighten up the NATO committee which controls sensitive technological exports to Russia. The French, on the other hand, are currently re-negotiating their low-interest credit agreement with the USSR. Their position on the Moscow games boycott has evolved over the past week but is still far from unequivocal. The propsect of taking over export deals relinquished by the Americans makes it unlikely France would back a move to put more muscle into the NATO body.

Lord Carrington, however, said he found such comparisons between the two countries' policies "slightly artificial." What was aimed at was "harmony not unison." In the interests of the former, he said he had explained Britain's position on the Olympics to the French. It can be deduced that Britain is seeking to correct the image drawn of it in France and elsewhere as an unconditional follower of the American lead. If anyone can persuade Paris that London is fully committed to the European community, Lord Carrington is the man. His two-day Paris visit, which was a return match for M. Francois-Poncet's trip to Britian in September, ended as summit talks between West German Chancellor Schmidt and French President Giscard d'Estaing, began.

The French line has already progressed from rejecting the boycott as an unsuitable response to the Afghanistan invasion to making the French athletes free to follow their consciences, to an official ban on participation in an event other-wise attended only by the Eastern bloc. Self-contradictory remarks by Soviet Olympics Vice-President Vitaly Smirnov, who said that the games were unthinkable without the Americans and that it was hoped they would go ahead, suggest France may have more elbow room than at first appeared. Furthermore, the French Olympics Committee, which early announced it would go to Moscow, is now revealed as having sent, not a formal letter of acceptance, but merely a telex message which, it seems, does not count.

MARCHAIS ALLEGED TO HAVE 'APPALLED' PCI MEMBERS

LD041141 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 4 Feb 80 p 4 LD

[Robert Moss article: "Kremlin's Line Hooks Marchais"]

[Excerpt] On the eve of his visit to Moscow last month, Georges Marchais, the leader of the French Communist Party stopped over in Rome for two days to compare notes on the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan with the Italian Communist chiefs.

According to a reliable source inside the Italian Communist Party (PCI), M. Marchais behaved "like a man who had been totally transformed." Several of his listeners were frightened and appalled by his fire-breathing remarks; they gained the impression that he believed that the Soviet tanks were bringing world revolution.

Quoting notes from the talks with M. Marchais (on Jan. 5-6) PCI sources claim that the French Communist leader expressed himself as follows: "We are living an historical period whose principal and dominant feature is the new global power of socialism. The winds of change are blowing in our direction. The citadel of socialism, the Soviet Union, has never been more powerful than it is today, while the citadel of capitalism, the United States, has never been so weak."

He continued on a cautionary note: "It follows, however, that capitalism is trying to make a recovery. It is trying to counterattack from a position of weakness, which means it is capable of acting with extreme brutality--like a wounded animal. We must therefore affirm our calm, cool, but determined resolutions." It was for these reasons, M. Marchais concluded, that the French Communist Party had decided to range itself "totally and categorically on the side of the triumphant standard-bearer of world socialism."

MARCHAIS ADDRESSES 22 JAN PCF CENTRAL COMMITTEE MEETING

LD311613 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 24 Jan 80 pp 6-7 LD

[Apparent text of speech by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais at a PCF Central Committee meeting on 22 January: "Peaceful Coexistence Presupposes the Intensification of the Class Struggle"--capitalized passages printed in italics]

[Text] Dear Comrades, we are approaching the end of our session. To conclude it I would like to review the essential questions included in the important report submitted by [PCF Politburo and Central Committee member] Maxime Gremetz and the detailed discussion to which it gave rise.

Defending and Consolidating Peace

The first of these current issues is that of peace. A vociferous campaign in which the president of the republic himself has joined has been going on for some months to assert the idea that dangers are increasing in the world and that war is at our door.

On what do these heralds of doom base their ideas? What are the facts and events which would justify such anxiety? You just have to examine what has been said and written over the past year to answer this question.

According to them the threat to world peace is posed by the overthrow of the shah of Iran, the fall of Somoza in Nicaragua, the collapse of the Pol Pot regime in Kampuchea, the oil-producing countries' decision to profit justly from their natural wealth, an alleged Soviet military superiority in Europe which has suddenly been discovered, and finally--as a sort of afterthought since the campaign had long since been launched--the situation in Afghanistan.

It is obvious that this is an extraordinary fabrication.

The Rise of the Forces of Peace

The forces which are accused in this way of posing the threat of war--forces whose progress is shown by recent events--are fundamentally FORCES OF PEACE and not forces of war.

The socialist countries, the peoples and governments whose struggle for freedom, independence and development places them within the great national liberation movement which characterizes our age, and the workers in developed capitalist countries who are resisting excessive exploitation, oppression, and the dictatorship of capital are the three great peaceful revolutionary forces in the world.

It is precisely their existence, their progress and their action which have prevented a world war in the past 35 years.

In this connection, Maxime Gremtez' report recalled this essential conclusion of the analysis which we made at our 23d Congress last May: The main characteristic of international developments is the change in the balance of world forces in favor of the forces of social, national and human liberation. He rightly stressed that the events which have taken place since then have confirmed this fundamental element of the situation, not contradicted it.

Yes, throughout the world, on all continents and in the most diverse forms, peoples are progressing and the forces of peace are being consolidated.

In this connection I would like to add an important remark which stems from the various visits and meetings I have had in the framework of developing the party's international activity.

A Universal Desire: To Act for Peace

During these visits and meetings I had successive talks with men representing these different revolutionary and progressive forces acting in the world: Marshal Tito; [Algerian] President Chadli Bendjedid; Yasir 'Arafat; [Yemen Arab Republic Prime Minister] 'Abd al-'Aziz; [Brazilian Communist Party leader] Luis Carlos Prestes; [Belgian Communist Party leader] Louis van Geyt; [Lebanese Communist Party leader] Georges Hawi; Edward Gierek; Fidel Castro; the Nicaraguan Government and Sandinist Front leaders; [PCI Secretary General] Enrico Berlinguer, with whom I have met on several occasions; and, most recently, Leonid Brezhnev.

The question of peace was raised in all these discussions, and the desire to take action to preserve it and to prevent imperialism plunging the world into a fatal conflagration was expressed everywhere. I would like to stress that--together with the comrades in our party's delegation--we found this desire particularly in the Soviet Union.

That was no revelation for us. Any observer who is aware of the real situation in that country can clearly see that the Soviet Union wants peace. In all the contacts we were able to make in that country our delegation was able to verify how deeply the horror of war is rooted in the Soviet people.

I personally put the following direct question to Leonid Brezhnev: Does the Soviet Union still fully stand by its policy of peace, detente and disarmament? The CPSU secretary general's reply was unequivocal: We are continuing all our efforts in that direction; the Soviet Union is deeply attached to peace and peaceful coexistence; it is doing and will continue to do everything in its power to preserve peace.

Therefore, everything shows that the campaign alleging the threat of war mounted by the political leaders, ideologists and propagandists of capital is merely a misleading picture of the situation and of world developments--a deliberate and artificial dramatization of the truth.

Imperialism Is Shouting About War

The reasons behind it and the intentions it reveals do not make this campaign any less dangerous.

The great upsurge of peoples toward freedom and independence, the aspirations for change and the struggles of workers in capitalist countries which are plunged in a deep crisis, the progress of socialism which--although it is encountering obstacles, shortcomings and mistakes--is continuing and solving the problems of its development, all these cause for imperialism deep anxiety and even panic.

By describing these developments in apolcalyptic terms imperialism is trying to create the right conditions for defending the dominant positions it still holds and, if possible, for winning back some of the positions it has lost, using force if necessary, it is trying to justify the acceleration of the arms race which it is launching, calculating that it will immediately provide a way of tackling the crisis in the capitalist economies as well as being an additional handicap to the socialist countries' economic development.

Imperialism is shouting about war in order to accustom people to the idea of war and, in the final analysis, to the war which it dreams of stating. It is another expression of the "imperialist counteroffensive," whose nature was analyzed at our congress showing how it comprises "the redeployment of the multinationals, the arms race, the revival of Atlanticism, an increasing number of attacks on sovereign states and interference in peoples' affairs, and the ideological war against socialism and all forms of progress."

There is no doubt that this poses real and serious threats to peace.

Peace Can Be Preserved by Action

The forces of peace have never before been in such a good position to avert these threats, to push aside the specter of war forever, provided they resolutely increase their action and join together to impose positive objectives.

As far as our party is concerned, I repeat what we have already said: We are prepared to take part in any meeting, any debate and any action to promote peace at the international level and within our country. I confirm that within the framework of our own responsibilities we will take new initiatives in France in the coming period to continue the action taken in conjunction with 14 organizations opposing the deployment of new U.S. nuclear missiles in Europe and encouraging immediate negotiations on balanced and effective disarmament measures.

The defense and consolidation of peace--a task on the agenda--depends on the struggle against the aggressive actions of imperialism and on pushing back imperialism and defeating it.

Developing International Solidarity

That brings me to another aspect of this problem on the agenda: the relationship between peaceful coexistence and the class struggle and peoples' struggle.

The False Theory of the "Yalta Division"

The events in Afghanistan have sparked off unbelievable fury among all imperialism's supporters. I will come back to the vast anticommunist campaign which has been launched in our country on this occasion.

At this point in my speech I would just like to mention one question: FOR WHAT FUNDAMENTAL REASONS has the new situation in Afghaninstan sparked off so much panic and hatred from American imperialism and all its spokesmen in our country? WHY does the chance given to a people living thousands of kilometers from our borders to put an end to feudalism and underdevelopment strike them as so worrying and so totally unacceptable?

The answer to this question was probably given most clearly by [Socialist Party First Secretary] Francois Mitterrand on television last week. Francois Mitterrand said in substance that the situation created in Afghanistan was much more serious than the situation which resulted from the Soviet intervention in Czechoslovakia in 1968. Charles Hernu, one of his close collaborators explained--I quote--"Czechoslovakia was part of the Yalta division, Afghanistan was not. Afghanistan has started a disturbing process of destabilization and that is as serious if not more serious than a real or alleged imbalance in Europe." The Socialist Party [PS] concludes its argument by seeing in the Afghan question--and I quote again, "the first signs of tensions posing a threat to peace."

In other words, to summarize this argument: In 1968 the Soviet Union WAS IN SOME WAY ENTITLED to make a military intervention in Czechoslovakia because that country is in its "sphere of influence?" But Afghanistan HAD NO RIGHT to appeal for aid from the Soviet Union because it was not "laid down" that the Afghan people might start on the path of progress and democracy.

The PS' spearhead position in favor of the world STATUS QUO led Francois Mitterrand to criticize the president of the republic for not giving more vigorous support to the Pentagon decisions--that is the last straw--and not giving his support to the Afghan counterrevolutionaries. In short, Francois Mitterrand and the PS have decreed a new law with universal application: "From today it is forbidden for peoples to launch revolutions!"

Well, let us clearly reiterate that the PCF will never subscribe to this diktat, will never admit that the world should remain fixed in its present state and will never recognize the false theory of the "Yalta division."

Peaceful Coexistence Is Not the STATUS QUO

In our view peaceful coexistence has never and could never mean the social and political STATUS QUO--a sort of contract dividing the world into spheres of influence with the central clause being paralysis of the class struggle.

Such an outrageous claim is not only unacceptable but completely illusory and unrealistic.

As [the late Politburo member] Jean Kanapa said at a PCF Central Committee meeting in 1975, "The antagonism which exists between socialism and capitalism as economic and social systems is an insoluble antagonism. It must inevitably end with the victory of one over the other, of socialism over capitalism. Peaceful coexistence in no way ends that antagonism. It is simply the framework in which it continues."

Nothing can or should lead the workers and peoples to abandon their fight to rid themselves of feudalism, colonialism, capitalism and all systems of exploitation and repression. Nothing can make them abandon their struggle to control their own wealth and run their own affairs.

This struggle is just and we support and take part in it. However it is important to add that it is also absolutely consistent with the principles and interests of peaceful coexistence.

Each people's right to determine their future in full sovereignty without foreign interference is precisely one of the essential principles and objectives of the policy of peaceful coexistence. It is one of the reasons why we are firmly attached to that policy because France's sovereignty and our people's independence and freedom to decide their future is an essential aspect of our political strategy--a precondition which we regard as vital to socialism's victory in our country.

Nonetheless although it is true that the rise of peaceful coexistence has considerably increased the chances which all peoples have of freely choosing their path toward progress, it has not yet put an end to imperialism's pressures and interference. CHILE STILL LIVES IN EVERYBODY'S MEMORY. That is why international solidarity is a vital dimension of each people's struggle and can still extend--in cases where a people and their government deem it necessary and where it seems possible--to direct military aid.

It is obvious that such exceptional action demands a lucid analysis of situations and great care in solving the problems raised. It is impossible to help a people without them or in spite of them. However this vital lucidity and calmness cannot lead us to abandon the defense of what constitutes both a principle of peoples' rights and a gain in the modification of the balance of world forces and the advance of peaceful coexistence, in other words the right to prevent imperialism from exporting counterrevolution.

This is particularly impossible for us since upholding this right also means serving peace. Jean Kanapa, whom I would like to quote once more, expressed this so accurately that it needs no comment: "The relationship between peaceful coexistence and the class struggle today is close. If peaceful coexistence encourages the class struggle against capitalism, conversely peaceful coexistence presupposes the continuation and intensification of the class struggle against imperialism. In other words the policies of peaceful coexistence and class struggle have and should have the same objective: to weaken imperialism, in other words the economic and political power of monopoly capital."

This is still our view.

In our view, the establishment and consolidation of peaceful coexistence, far from being the results of a friendly compromise between capitalism and socialism, are based on the present world balance of forces which is in favor of the forces of peace. They are determined by the REAL opportunity for the forces of progress and peace to prevent imperialism from resorting to war to solve the contradictions facing it.

Peaceful Coexistence Depends on the World Balance of Forces.

This aspect of things is decisive and crucial. Without this balance of forces good will, devotion, and the most fervent efforts to promote peace are powerless against imperialism's destructive will. This was clear during the thirties, for instance, when the forces of peace followed a just policy of alliance against the threat of war but failed to avoid the tragedy into which the world war plunged.

Therefore the maintenance of peace in the present period--which we think can lead to new progress in the peoples' liberation movement--is the product of the world balance of forces--the fruit of the spread of the class struggle at the international level. Far from endangering peaceful coexistence, each step forward, each advance, each attempt to strengthen the peoples' movement helps to consolidate world peace.

The Interest of Peoples and of Peace

It is in keeping with ALL these facts that we--unlike Francois Mitterrand--have said and say: In 1968 the Czechoslovak Communist Party, people and government HAD THE RIGHT to seek an original way of building an original socialist society. The Soviet intervention which put an end to that experiment and led to a regression was and is still unjustifiable and blameworthy.

In the same way and in keeping with ALL the facts I have just explained, we say: The People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, the Afghan people and government HAD THE RIGHT to ask the Soviet Union for aid to defend the achievements of their revolution against feudal reaction supported by foreign intervention and interference. While believing that it naturally could have been preferable not to have to go so far, we understand why the Soviet Union felt obliged to abide by the terms of the mutual aid treaty signed and renewed on several occasions with Afghanistan.

Our fundamental position is based on two factors which emerge from an analysis of the situation:

First, the interests of the Afghan people, faced with armed aggression aimed at drowning the achievement of a young and still fragile revolution in blood and at perpetuating poverty, backwardness and the pitiless dictatorship of the feudal overlords.

Second, the interests of peace, which was directly threatened by the attempt to use Pakistan as a base for establishing a warlike regime in Washington's pay in Afghanistan, which is a neighbor and traditional friend of the Soviet Union.

This stance and all the recent stances we have adopted in our international activities are completely in keeping with the policy laid down by our 23d Congress. The report submitted and the discussion we have just had confirmed that. I would like to stress the reason for this.

At our congress we gave a prominent place to international questions, to analyzing the facts of the situation, the international dimension of the crisis and the constraints and opportunities which result from it, "not to place them above any national solution but to clarify and create effective conditions for the success of the struggle in our country."

Indeed, how could we isolate our analysis of the crisis in French society and our strategy for overcoming it from the international environment in which we must implement that strategy? It would be ridiculous and we are not doing so.

On the contrary, as I pointed out before, it is on the main aspect of the international situation, in other words on the favorable change in the world balance of forces, that we base the opportunity which all peoples--including our people--have to freely determine their future by opposing all foreign interference. At the international level it is this aspect of the situation which forms the basis of the validity and realism of our strategy of democratic progress toward a democratic form of socialism.

This analysis and choice have a consequence. We can only contemplate successful progress in implementing this strategy if we satisfy a dual requirement at the international level:

First, to contribute to the development of the struggle for peace, peaceful coexistence and disarmament and to consolidate the forces of peace.

Second, to assert our solidarity with all revolutionary and progressive forces in the struggle for independence, freedom, development, and a new world economic and political system. This is the twofold task which we set for ourselves at our congress and which has constantly determined our stances and action since then. Nobody can honestly dispute that.

I would like to stress this point by discussing three essential objectives of our international solidarity.

New Relations Among the Communist Parties

The first concerns relations among communist parties.

In order to take full account of the evolution of the international communist movement, whose essential characteristic is now its great diversity, we decided at the 23d Congress to contribute to establishing new relations among communist parties.

We gave this new concept and practice of internationalist solidarity in the communist movement a precise and explicit content at the congress. "Such relations," we said, "imply respect for each party's independence, for their equal rights and their policies, and respect for noninterference.... These new relations must be established with full clarity. They presuppose taking account both of the numerous and important common objectives and the existence of differences which there can be no advantage in concealing."

It is in respecting this policy--to the letter I think--that we have pursued all our activities since the congress--activities which Maxime Gremetz reported in detail.

To mention just two examples, this was the case during the talks we had with our PCI comrades, as the joint communique shows, and this, moreover, is why the communique was not reported by the major sections of the media.

This was also the case during the talks we have just had with our CPSU comrades, as the final communique also demonstrates. In this connection the Central Committee has adopted the view expressed on behalf of the Politburo by Maxime Gremetz in his report: The meeting with the CPSU and its results mark a new and extremely positive step in the development of relations between our two parties, and this is in line with the new type of relations among communist parties for which we are campaigning.

It is precisely for this reason--and this brings me to the second objective--that we categorically reject the idea that this meeting signed Eurocommunism's death warrant. That is a deliberately misleading statement.

Eurocommunism

At our congress we clearly pointed out that Eurocommunism reflects the similarity of the approaches adopted by a number of communist parties--including ours--which, I quote, "have placed the development of democracy at the center of the paths to socialism which they propose for their respective countries."

It is naturally toward socialism that we wish to move. It is a distortion of the meaning which we have given this word to describe the PS' stances, as [Center for Socialist Studies, Research and Education leader] Jean-Pierre Chevenement has just done, as "Eurocommunist" when they are based on a social democratic policy aimed at administering the crisis for the benefit of capital and maintaining the social and political STATUS QUO. Eurocommunism could never mean such an abandonment nor the parallel attitude of dismissing both imperialism and existing socialism and indeed of breaking with the latter.

Moreover, this is why our 23d Congress stressed that this solidarity among Eurocommunist parties--to which we are attached--based on the fact that they share certain views could in no way lead to spurning solidarity with the whole international communist movement.

As I stated in December 1978 during the Politburo's meeting with 400 Communist intellectuals in Vitry, "It would be a serious mistake to try and deliberately isolate our struggle from that being waged by the other forces struggling against capitalism and for socialism in the world. Whether you like it or not the class struggle is a world struggle." That was what we had in mind when we stated clearly at the 23d Congress: "Eurocommunism is not a new 'center' or a model to replace another; it is not directed against any party."

Therefore the fact that we are now increasing our relations with the CPSU in keeping with the clear line laid down by our congress does not mean that we are abandoning Eurocommunism.

In fact the reverse is true: It is because we really want to make progress toward change, and toward the form of socialism which we have defined for our country by ways which we have spelled out, that we are prepared to maintain and extend our fruitful relations of friendship, cooperation and solidarity with Eurocommunist parties at the same time as we intend to develop relations inspired by the same principles of equality, noninterference and solidarity on the basis of common objectives with all other communist parties which want such relations.

Solidarity With Progressive Forces

Furthermore, we do not separate this effort from the effort to strengthen our solidarity with all the components of the world revolutionary and democratic movement. This is the third objective which I wanted to mention.

Our congress also decided to take full account "of the extent and urgency of the problems in the world as well as of the new opportunities resulting from the progress made by the revolutionary and progressive movement" by "strengthening internationalist solidarity and extending it to all the forces which make up this movement."

In this spirit we are anxious to increase the fraternal relations which we have with many Third World parties and national movements and with forces belonging to the non-alined movement. This is the aim of the various meetings we have just had and those we are due to have in the coming period, especially in Africa.

I would like to add that we are anxious not to neglect any opportunity which arises or might arise for contacts and joint action with socialist or social democratic parties, with trade union, social and humanitarian organizations and with Christian forces, especially in the struggle for peace and disarmament in Europe. In this respect it has to be mentioned that the line taken by most socialist and social democratic parties, especially the most important ones, in no way encourages such rapprochements.

However, we remain open to any opportunity and to any suggestions.

Therefore our activity, our various international stances are in total keeping with the lines laid down by our congress.

Our Action on International [as published] Problems

It is with the same purpose that we are developing our action on national problems. This is the last but by no means least important problem I would like to tackle.

The Objectives of the Anticommunist Campaign

I have already mentioned the frenzied anticommunist campaign which we have been witnessing recently in connection with events in Afghanistan. A positive avalanche of lies, distortions and slander--and I must add, of unbelievable rubbish--is swamping the radio and the press.

Aside from its international motives, this outburst of anticommunist hysteria obviously--as has been said--has objectives relating to the French political situation. We are witnessing an underhand political operation planned at the highest level, implemented in a coordinated way and backed by the vast means of mass communication at the disposal of the country's leaders.

Their short-term aim is obviously to distract the workers' attention from the crucial problems facing the country, to make them passively accept the policy of acute austerity, unemployment and heightened inequality which big capital needs to tackle the crisis in its system.

However, the more fundamental aim is to enable the bourgeoisie and its government to create the right political conditions for a lasting and secure implementation of their strategy. In our country that depends on obtaining--in one form or another--the PS' direct cooperation in this implementation. This is the famous "consensus." To achieve this without serious risks it is necessary to reduce the influence in national life of the party which opposes this policy and is working to open up prospects of real change: the PCF.

The aim of the present anticommunist fuss and the trap being laid for the country's workers and democrats is to weaken the PCF and prepare the ground for direct participation by the PS in implementing capital's policy.

It is worth remembering that this is not a new objective.

Francois Mitterrand made that his aim as PS leader as early as 1971. He confessed it bluntly in Vienna, Austria, just after signing the joint program.

Giscard d'Estaing also openly proclaimed in the 1974 presidential election that he wanted to reduce the PCF's share of the vote to 15 percent.

His target has not been reached. Francois Mitterrand has failed, and his obstinacy has led the left to defeat and the PS into a blind alley.

However, we are fully aware of the fact that the bourgoisie has not given up fighting for what it needs.

The violence of the present anticommunist onslaught merely reflects the persistence of the French bourgeoisie's main political objective in the present period, its desperate need to attain it and the problems which it has not managed to overcome.

The Anticommunist Attack is Doomed to Failure

There are fundamental reasons for thinking that this attack will fail and will even backfire on its perpetrators partly because of its extreme violence.

The Central Committee's discussion and the numerous reports we are receiving from the federations show that the Communists are rapidly mobilizing and increasing the strength and scope of their response. They show that not only are the numerous close ties which the Communists maintain with the masses not being called into question but in many cases they are being strengthened. We are receiving a growing number of messages of sympathy and solidarity.

This is not 1956. The world has changed. Capitalism is facing a crisis. The party itself has changed.

Many people are now aware, however vaguely, of the gap which exists between the true situation in the world, including socialism, and the unbelievable caricature presented and hammered home by major sections of the media. Many people think this fuss is too loud not to be dishonest when at the same time unemployment, falling purchasing power and all their everyday concerns are passed over in silence by the official media. There are many people who, from their daily experience with communists, do not believe that the PCF can be the same party that whole articles and broadcasts paint in such a horrifying light.

All this is added to the age-old experience of workers in our country who know full well that anticommunism does not just concern the communists but poses a serious threat to their present and future interests and to democracy itself. [paragraph continues]

All this is bound to make them even more convinced that the reason why those who oppress them and are plunging the country into a crisis are attacking the PCF so violently is that the PCF is fighting with them against poverty and oppression. It is their party.

That is why the anticommunist attack is doomed to failure. That is why, far from making us change course, it can only encourage us to pursue our course with determination and in a resolutely attacking spirit.

Acting Against Austerity and Unemployment

What do we mean by pursuing our line, in other words systematically applying the policies laid down by our 23d Congress?

First, it means continuing and extending our activity in support of workers and families, to uphold all demands and undermine the Giscardian government's policy of high prices and unemployment.

Nothing must turn us from this urgent priority task. Recent government decisions have hit the workers hard. Living standards, jobs, regional life, and the situation of research workers, teachers, and workers in rural districts are under attack. The railroad workers and postmen have launched struggles, but there are also hundreds of thousands of actions being taken throughout the country. The present campaign must not conceal them from us. We must help spread these movements and obtain positive results.

The struggle handbooks [cahiers de lutte] have already served as support, encouragement and a means of developing action in this effort. All our organizations must use them in a bolder and more enterprising way. The struggle rallies and meetings which are planned could form a launching pad for this activity at the same time as an opportunity to reply to the enemy and explain our policy.

Implementing the policies decided at our congress also means struggling for decisions in France's interests in the foreign policy sphere.

Fighting for a Great French Foreign Policy

I have already stressed the importance of the struggle for disarmament and peace and of solidarity in action with the peoples of the world to solve their major problems: famine, poverty, underdevelopment and dependence.

I would simply like to add that, in these spheres as in others, Giscard d'Estaing is full of attractive declarations of intent and stances which seem to be inspired by the desire to defend the specific interests of French-based big capital. Of course we have never given up making use of the inconsistencies which might appear betw n the imperialisms.

However, it is important to note that behind his smokescreen Giscard's foreign policy essentially expresses total alinement with the FRG's positions and increased involvement in U.S. imperialism's all-embracing strategy. Maxime Gremetz gave many instances confirming this in his report.

This policy is extremely harmful to our people's interests and to the national interest. It is not in the interests of peace or of France itself that our country should follow Carter's extravagant adventurism and electioneering whims. France stands to gain nothing from clinging to Washington and locking itself in an Atlantic bloc, thereby increasingly curbing its national will.

At our congress we painted a picture of a France very different from this weak, assisted France trapped in a West European yoke dominated by the United States and West Germany which Mr Giscard d'Estaing proposes: an independent, active and respected France with a strong economy and currency playing its rightful part in the concert of nations.

All the decisions we have taken in the sphere of international policy are also part of this new outlook. In opposing the deployment of NATO nuclear missiles; in putting forward realistic proposals for including specific measures for reducing arms in the detente process; in proposing--as I did last December in a letter to the president of the republic--that a Franco-Soviet mutual security treaty be signed as soon as possible; in taking steps to bring about the gradual simultaneous dissolution of the blocs and to promote a new world economic and political system; and finally in refusing U.S. imperialism the right to jeopardize the Afghan people's progressive achievements, we have adopted positions in keeping with the great international policy which we want for France.

Building a New Union

It is therefore in every sphere that we are fighting and will continue to fight the disastrous lines of capital's policy implemented by Giscard d'Estaing.

It is by extending this action that we intend to build the new union which is necessary and the conditions for democratic change, which remains more than ever our objective. We do not intend to stray from our congress decisions in this sphere either.

Supported by the Giscardian media, Francois Mitterrand and the other Socialist leaders repeatedly maintain in various ways that our stances show our desire to adopt an isolated position, to abandon the union and to serve Giscard d'Estaing. That is an extraordinary reversal of intentions and responsibilities.

Indeed the main characteristic of the PS' recent positions on all the major events in international life is its close similarity to the positions taken by Giscard's government. This is true of Kampuchea, Iran, the U.S. missiles and Afghanistan. To be strictly truthful it has to be admitted that Francois Mitterrand has sometimes criticized Giscard d'Estaing, but he has criticized him for not adopting the American viewpoint quickly and strongly enough.

Let us ask this question: Who is serving Giscard d'Estaing, Francois Mitterrand, who says the same things he does, or the PCF, which is fighting him? The answer is obvious to anybody with any commonsense.

In fact the positions adopted by the PS recently all clearly reflect its swing to the right; they increase the gulf between us and serve Giscard d'Estaing's objectives, especially his search for a general political consensus.

I would like to add that these positions by their extreme nature stress how right we were to think that international considerations played a major role in the PS decision to break the union and abandon the joint program in 1979. We had already noticed in 1975 that the PS' deviation from its pledges to us coincided with its closer involvement in the Socialist International's activities. [paragraph continues]

We stressed that Francois Mitterrand's persistent refusal to give clear support for an independent national defense system backed by the necessary means was an essnetial factor in breaking off negotiations.

Everybody can now see that the Socialist leaders have quickly completed their swing to the right in international questions. It certainly seems that the refusal and inability to attack imperialism, its strategy and its fundamental interests constitute an essential trait of the PS and its approach. Membership in a binding international organization such as the Socialist International dominated by the Social Democratic Party of Germany probably plays a major role in this situation.

Ought we therefore to join the PS in its rut for the sake of rejecting alleged isolation? Everybody knows that we cannot be expected to do that. It would mean turning our back on the interests of the working class, the country and of union itself.

We have in no way abandoned the leftwing union whatever difficulties might remain. Of course what we envisage is a loyal union between partners having equal rights and duties--a union in the struggle for democratic change in keeping with the workers' aspirations and the needs of a crisis-ridden France.

Our congress defined the path for building this new strong union: the path of increasing grassroots action, union in struggles, the rise of a powerful people's movement which would provide the basis for the political agreements between leftwing parties which are still necessary. We have started to make progress in this direction. We must continue. Initiatives such as the one we have just taken with a view to holding extraordinary sessions of the leftwing union commune councils to fight the rise in the prices of oil products prove that this is our aim.

Strengthening the PCF

Attaining these major objectives which I have just recalled and which correspond to our people's fundamental interests depends on fulfilling an importanat requirement: strengthening the PCF's influence, scope, organization and place in national life.

We will have opportunities to return to this question. At present I would simply like to stress that this urgent task now means that we must carefully implement the decisions we have taken with respect to our work in enterprises, among the intellectuals and among young people and that we must make a success of the imminent launching of the new HUMANITE DIMANCHE and the battle for a major campaign of issuing party cards and winning new members.

The whole party must be mobilized in all these spheres, particularly for the last two tasks I mentioned. However, we have good reason to be confident about this effort since it is precisely at times like the present that the Communists are anxious to assert their convictions and show their communist talents.

BERLINGUER ADDRESS ON BACKGROUND, IMPLICATIONS OF AFGHAN EVENTS

LD041031 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 27 Jan 80 pp 1, 18 LD

[Unattributed report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 25 January address to Rome assembly of PCI provincial secretaries: "Debate But Also Action for Peace"]

[Excerpt] Rome--The meeting of PCI provincial secretaries, which opened Friday morning with Comrade Paolo Bufalini's report on international issues, was closed the same evening by Comrade Enrico Berlinguer. The debate, during which 18 provincial secretaries spoke, was keen and provided an exhaustive picture of the current debate in the party. We publish below a summary of the PCI secretary general's conclusions.

The current debate, Berlinguer said, is revealing the need for hard work to make the party's internal unity stronger and more confident in its evaluation of the latest events, starting with the Afghan issue. We need this stronger unity for dealing with future developments in the situation and at the same time for dealing with our adversaries' attempts to spread confusion and division among us.

In this great task that we must perform there must be no "before" and "after," that is, a time for the internal debate which must precede a subsequent time for outside initiative. We know that ideas can be properly clarified only by promoting an effective mass initiative, only if we compare ideas and only if we welcome dialog and action among the people.

It is understandable, Berlinguer said, that during the phase of heated debate there are questions and uncertainties emerging here and there within the party. This is easily explained because we are in the midst of a major turning point in the international situation; we are facing changes in U.S. and USSR policy; and we are aware of the effect of our autonomous stance on these events--especially with regard to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Of course, this is not the first time that our party has expressed its free critical verdict and censure with regard to specific actions by the USSR and Warsaw Pact countries. But, undoubtedly never before have our disapproval and dissociation been so directly concerned with certain essential aspects of Soviet foreign policy.

There are many factors, Berlinguer continued, which led to what I called the "turning point" in the international situation. I cannot now analyze them all fully, but I can state that a series of actions and events has accumulated in the course of time and also more immediately in such a way as to cause the deterioration whose effects we are now experiencing.

Berlinguer also briefly indicated some of these actions and events. The attitude taken by President Carter from the outset on the civil and human rights issue: This is in itself an important issue which must be tackled, but it was tackled at that time in the wrong way because the intention was to give it priority--almost to set it as a "precondition"--over the issue of detente and dialog between the major powers. It was a mistake to tackle the issue in this way--an error which Willy Brandt, among others, pointed out--because it created a suspicious attitude and eventually a stiffening on the USSR's part. In the meantime there was a continuing delay in approving the SALT II agreements, which had legitimately raised so much hope of progress in detente and disarmament.

Another factor which "weighed heavily" among the circumstances leading to the "turning point" in the international situation, Berlinguer said, was the Middle East issue. [paragraph continues]

Here, too, there were dangerous changes of direction by the United States, because although the starting point was the 1977 Gromyko-Vance statement guaranteeing the USSR's full participation in all peace negotiations in the area, this was followed by the separate peace treaty between Egypt and Israel and the Camp David agreements, which blatantly ruled out any USSR participation. It was a mistake in itself (because it evaded the real crux of the Palestinian issue), and it was an error because it also contributed to aggravating the USSR's suspicions and mistrust.

Furthermore, Berlinguer pointed out, there were the remarks made by Brzezinski, who went as far as to theorize about the arms race as a means of "forcing" the USSR and the socialist countries to allocate more funds to rearmament, diverting them from productive investment and thus prompting an economic and political "crisis" in the European socialist area.

For a time, the PCI secretary general continued, these U.S. acts and attitudes went hand in hand with a policy, it must be said of--at least military--nonintervention in areas of the world where revolutionary movements were developing and triumphing. It must be borne in mind that this was unlike what lamentably so often heppened in other areas or at other times. Berlinguer cited the example of Africa where, despite the successes of revolutionary forces, the United States has refrained from military intervention.

At the same time the USSR was of course pursuing its policy of developing detente and cooperation in Europe (suffice it to consider the economic accords with so many countries in Western Europe and the rest of the world), but it was also using certain objective factors of the situation (what in the United States itself is called the U.S. "Vietnam complex" and the crisis of prestige affecting America worldwide) to carry out certain direct and indirect interventions in certain areas of Africa and Asia. Berlinguer stressed that these were certainly very widely differing situations (Angola, Ethiopia, Kampuchea) and all different from the intervention in Afghanistan, and he referred to the report delivered by Bufalini, who provided more exhaustive analyses and more detailed verdicts.

However, the overall cause of the rapid deterioration in international detente must be tracked back to these interlinked factors.

Berlinguer asked why has Afghanistan happened now? Why did the USSR decide to cross that border with a large military expeditionary force? It seems, he said, that the immediate factor which made the USSR intervene was essentially this and this alone: The specific feeling that the regime installed by coup d'etat in 1978 was about the collapse.

But--and this is the point: Has the Soviet intervention permitted an examination of the underlying reasons why the regime was under threat? Is it in fact now resolving the very problem of the revolution in Afghanistan? In fact it seems unlikely to us that a government whose strength is based essentially on an occupying army could find any real consensus. Nor must one underestimate the danger of the prospect of lengthy guerrilla action (which is certainly not without biased foreign backing).

Pakistan and Iran

In the current debate being conducted within the party and by the public, people are wondering whether, apart from this initial goal, the Soviet intervention could have further goals connected with the development of the Iran situation or the problem of Pakistan, which is dominated by a reactionary regime enjoying several anti-Soviet alliances but nevertheless essentially unstable. These are real questions, but we are unable to answer them now.

What is certain, Berlinguer continued, is that one cannot justify the violation of a country's independence and that the Soviet intervention is certainly not something which has aided detente. Instead it has moved in the direction of the policy of force and division into areas of influence. And this has had the primary effect of weakening the USSR's position and its previous correct policy of alliances with developing countries. Berlinguer cited the reaction of the Islamic countries (which comprise 850 million followers of Islam), which are about to hold a conference; he cited Iran, a country which, partly because of its desire to resist pressures and the threat of U.S. military intervention, had been drawing closer to the USSR; he cited the nonalined countries: Where previously the USSR found friends or an audience, following the Afghan affair it finds coldness and hostility.

There are also some people who claim that the USSR was reacting against something more deep-rooted, against the threat of encirclement by the United States, certain West European countries, Japan and China. Even if this were true, we still ask: Was the action in Afghanistan the best strategy for crushing, smashing that threat? Would an effort in the direction of peaceful coexistence, aimed at defeating imperialism's most aggressive forces by isolating them, not have been better? Have these forces not perhaps been given a further opportunity for broadening the alinement of the USSR's most determined enemies?

Others say that, if this is how the USSR acted, "it had its own good reasons for doing so," and this debate has revealed that this is a recurrent idea in discussion at the party's grassroots. We must be clear about this and always give a clear answer. What we must say is this: Should we therefore maintain that the Soviets have always--even in the past--had "their own reasons"? Of course they have always had reasons for taking certain actions: But were they always the right reasons? The Soviet comrades themselves have criticized some of their own past errors (remember, for instance, the condemnation of what happened in Yugoslavia, in 1948), and therefore we must never stop asserting our full autonomy of assessment, now as always.

Next Berlinguer discussed the dramatically dangerous aspect of the U.S. reprisals against the USSR. He cited the lamentable speech in which President Carter, describing the Persian Gulf as "an area of vital concern to the United States," extended to this area the threat of immediate military reprisals. This, Berlinguer said, is a new and alarming factor, which threatens to involve the Atlantic alliance countries themselves in ventures which diverge from the express provisions of the treaties. Of course, it must be added that no other country has the right to practice such a "doctrine." Next Berlinguer said that we form a very negative assessment of the successive positions adopted by the Italian Government. Indeed, we are witnessing a government attitude of inert acceptance and obedience with respect to the United States, to the extent of gravely damaging Italy's national interests. Berlinguer cited the most serious instances: the refusal to allow a ship carrying an injured man to dock in Genoa; the cancallation of the departure for Moscow of a delegation from the state-aided industries sector, headed by the minister; the "no" to an Italian delegation's meeting with a toplevel Soviet state bank delegation due to visit Italy which in fact went to Paris instead. The only government in Europe which has been even more enthusiastic in following U.S. pressure, Berlinguer said, has been Mrs Thatcher's British Government. Meanwhile profitable business and major contracts being drawn up between Italy and the USSR risk being redirected to the FRG, the Netherlands, France and Belgium, with incalculable damage to Italy's economy and workers.

The line which we have adopted, Berlinguer continued, is in fact the only line which, in view of problems of such overall importance, could prove effective--that is, to make an effective contribution to detente, disarmament and peace and thus to the unity of all the forces of peace in Italy and Europe and throughout the world. It is a line aimed at smashing the logic of rivalry and competition between the two major powers and at leading them back to dialog, detente and cooperation. [paragraph continues]

It is not, as some people are trying to insinuate, a line of equidistance and neutrality, of "nonalinement:" It is simply a "different" line, our own line, with all its individuality. And it is a line, a stance linked to powerful forces which are moving or can move in the same direction.

Italy and Europe

Berlinguer cited the leftwing forces in Italy and Europe, the Christian-spired movements, the Catholic Church and the other churches and several nonalined countries. Therefore we have adopted a solid alinement and are connected with major realities and powerful forces. Ours is a strong, clear and comprehensible line well supported among the masses.

Some people might believe that our position has been dictated by the desire to be accepted in the government. I do not know, Berlinguer said, whether--and if so, when--such a prospect (which, however, we do consider necessary for the country's good) will be realized; but one thing is certain: We will not modify the line of European and international policy which we have autonomously adopted, because we consider it the line which best matches the interests of Italy and of peace.

And if anyone believes that our option is aimed at the quest for broader convergences on a policy of detente and peace in Italy, Europe and the world, we say that this opinion prompts in us no unease and still less shame: To extend to the utmost convergence in the struggle for disarmament, detente and peace is one of our essential aims; just as our essential task and objective is the quest for democratic and national unity for resolving the grave problems of Italian democracy and our country's progress. And we do this, Berlinguer said, not only through propaganda and speeches, but with precise specific initiatives: our proposals regarding the Euromissiles which had repercussions throughout Europe and the world, our vote in the European Parliament in Strasbourg which marked a moment of convergence with forces which are certainly different from us, but with which we reached a positive understanding; and last, the five-point proposals for a European initiative, which we have put forward and will continue to present, for Western Europe (and its leftwing and workers movement) to take a leading role in an initiative favorable for detente between the two major powers, peaceful coexistence and world cooperation.

PCE CENTRAL COMMITTEE HOLDS WEEKEND MEETING

LD031932 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 3 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The PCE Central Committee, meeting in Madrid over the weekend, has passed several resolutions, the most interesting being one on autonomy policy. In brief, this resolution says that a project for the organization and timing of the development of autonomy in Spain in a global and concrete manner is being adopted. Continuing on the subject of autonomy policy, the Central Committee has decided to reject the Union of the Democratic Center's recent stand against authorizing the use of article 151 of the Constitution because it lacks detail and timetables for using article 143. This resolution, which was adopted unanimously by the Central Committee, says that they intend to change this situation and to this end will start by approaching the Spanish Socialist Workers Party concerning a joint study of a project for organizing and coordinating their action in this field.

Finally, the PCE Central Committee condemned the recent assassinations in our country and asked its parliamentary group to call on the government to investigate the incidents.

Soviets 'Sharply Criticized'

LD022233 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 2 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Santiago Carrillo, the secretary general of the Spanish Communist Party, read a report to a Central Committee meeting here in Madrid in which he sharply criticized the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and called on the Spanish Socialist Workers Party to cement the unity of the parliamentary left.

Apart from the reading of the report, the members of the Central Committee observed a minute's silence in homage to the six members of the Civil Guard killed yesterday in Vizcaya.

Carrillo dedicated almost half of the report to an analysis of the international situation. After explaining the history of the recent events in Afghanistan, Santiago Carrillo said that in that country there had never been a popular revolution and that the regime was not revolutionary itself, which is what made it vulnerable to the entry of imperialism.

The Soviets, he continued, have justified their intervention by saying that it was in response to the Kabul government's request. Further explanations say that it was carried out to consolidate the Socialist regime of that country. According to the Communist Party secretary general, this last statement is not credible.

LA VANGUARDIA: ISSUE OF DEFENSE TIES COMPLICATED

LD041511 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 24 Jan 80 p 5 LD

[Editorial: "Our Alliances"]

[Text] It is 4 years today since the signing of the treaty of friendship and cooperation between Spain and the United States. By this time next year a decision will have to be made about whether the treaty is to be extended or allowed to expire. In the latter event, 28 years of uninterrupted agreements would also come to an end--a remarkably lengthy period within the slender record of modern Spain, as far as pacts and military alliances are concerned

Without wishing to take part in the controversy about Prime Minister Suarez' recent visit to Washington and what he discussed or failed to discuss with Carter, we believe that the issue of the bases--to use the traditional description which has been applied to the agreements with the Americans--was undoubtedly part of the background to the talks. This is the most important deal--to call it that, even though in fact it has only been so for the United States--between the two nations. As long as Spain lacked other credible alternatives and the bases on its territory were a real U.S. need, the negotiations always concluded in the way in which we finally saw them conclude--renewal--and that was the end of it until the next round.

The situation has recently changed. In light of the very possible prospect of Spain's entry into NATO, the United States is likely to have concluded that this solution is simpler, cheaper and more effective for it than wresting another advantageous treaty from a Spain in which at least the opposition would offer serious resistance. As far as Spain is concerned, let us not forget that our outstanding issues include the very important issue of defining our defense policy, of which a fundamental aspect is that of military alliances. We have spend years--indeed, decades--married to the United States without the presumed romance with NATO ever ceasing to be based on hopes, intentions, rumors, and so forth, Where we were once virtually without alternatives, these now exist, and in theory we can exercise the right of every sovereign state to choose its allies. We say "in theory" because for several weeks we have had the impression that recent international events are again constricting our decisions.

In fact now, when it seemed that Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance was a matter of months away and depended only on finding the most opportune time it appears that there are clear signs pointing in the opposite direction. The turn just taken by the world situation as a result of the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan perhaps makes Spain's entry into NATO seem inadvisable to more than ourselves, contrary to what might be believed. Unless the situation clearly deteriorates, in which event Spain's entry would assume prewar tones, our entry at a time of tension could seem a challenge to the USSR--a challenge which neither the United States nor NATO will probably wish to make, especially in view of the pending Yugoslav situation. These developments combine, although with much greater real importance, with earlier developments such as the organization of the CSCE conference in Madrid and the difficulty in our relations with Britain over the Gibralter dispute. This is why we speak of a new constriction.

If all this proves correct, the "Turkish" alternative--meaning that adopted by Turkey a few days ago and involving a treaty with the United States in addition to belonging to NATO--would also be ruled out.

Nor will we fail to mention two other well-known possibilities--that of nonalinement or neutralism, and that of a hypothetical European defense community. We believe that neither is realistic; the latter because it is too futuristic, and the former--whose viability was always questionable--because it has been made known unofficially that it would prove too expensive.

We have deliberately left until last an alternative given very little consideration until recently and one which could begin to gain acceptance, if only through the exclusion of the others. The latest visit by Chancellor Schmidt and the Spanish-FRG rapprochement suggest the idea of multiple bilateral pacts, principally with the United States and the FRG, although others could be added, even with countries not belonging to NATO, such as France. It would admittedly prove an involved and complex system, but is should also be acknowledged that it would obviate many drawbacks. We confine ourselves--without this implying support from this column--to mentioning this solution, which could be termed a kind of NATO in portions.

O ANEXARTITOS URGES ROLANDHIS TO EXERT PRESSURE ON U.S.

NC040628 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 4 Feb 80 p 3 NC

[From the "Independent" column: "The Cyprus Problem and Turkey"]

[Text] Mr Rolandhis has gone to the United States. Today he will meet Dr Waldheim and later he will meet Vance, Christopher and Nimetz. He will discuss the Cyprus problem with them and he will reiterate the Cyprus Government's positions. He will point out to them, as he said, that an isolated Turkey is not useful to them. Obviously his interlocutors will ask for Cyprus' help in extricating Turkey from its isolation. Probably they will revive the old American plan or something similar to it and they will try to pressure him, to pressure Cyprus.

But undoubtedly Mr Rolandhis must be aware that regardless of their persistent pressure, they are in fact the ones under pressure, in a hurry, and very concerned about their offer of billions of dollars to relieve the Turkish economy and to supply Turkey with such quantities of war materiel that it will upset the balance of power between Greece and Turkey.

Mr Rolandhis knows that congressional approval is needed in order to give Turkey all the aid they plan. They need the silence and condonation of the Greek-American voters, and the silence of Greece and of the Republic of Cyprus.

Thus, Mr Rolandhis' pressure on them can be stronger than their pressure on him. And he can be more convincing than the "ally" who is concerned about Turkey's isolation by using the harsh language of angry people whom they have destroyed and whom they have been deceiving. We are not concerned about Turkey's isolation, its economic problems or the American interests. All we care is about Kyrenia, Famagusta, Morfou and Apostolos Andreas. We want Attila to leave Cyprus. We want all the refugees to return to their houses.

If the Americans wish to show concern about our problems, there is only one way for them to do it: to free us from our agonies. Otherwise they had better not knock on our door. We will never choose between legal or illegal occupation. This is not our dilemma. We face no dilemma. We object to occupation and we struggle for freedom and return to our homes: We do not retreat from this position.

This is the language that Mr Rolandhis must use. And he must not confine his contacts to Carter's men alone; there is also the Congress--to the extent that it is friendly toward us--and the Greek Americans. He must convey the anger and agony of Cyprus to these quarters as well.

CYPRUS FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES IN ATHENS, MEETS RALLIS

AT021347 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 2 Feb 80 AT

[Text] Cyprus Foreign Minister Rolandhis arrived in Athens this morning and will leave this evening for New York where he will have talks with UN Secretary General Waldheim. In a statement at Ellinikon Airport, Rolandhis said that the subject of his talks will be the efforts to resume a substantive inter-Cypriot dialog. He also said that he will meet the U.S. secretary of state and the British foreign secretary whom he will request to exercise their influence so that the dialog can be crowned with success.

At 1030 this morning, Rolandhis went to the Foreign Ministry and had a talk with Foreign Minister Rallis for about 1 hour. At the conclusion of the meeting Rolandhis stated to the press: We had a very constructive talk with Foreign Minister Rallis. As you know, the Cyprus Government cooperates closely with the Greek Government on our national issue, and we always have its support. The meeting took place within the framework of this cooperation in view of the seriousness of my current mission. It was considered necessary that I exchange views with Mr Rallis. We discussed various thoughts and the course we shall follow. We have agreed on all points.

In addition, Foreign Minister Rallis said: As usual, we had a very good working session with Mr Rolandhis and we have agreed on the course of action we will follow as Mr Rolandhis expressed it on behalf of the Cyprus Government.

In reply to a question, Rolandhis said that the date of Waldheim's arrival in Cyprus has not been fixed and added that it is not known whether the UN secretary general will indeed pay such a visit.

Statement on UN Abstention

NC021902 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1830 GMT 2 Feb 80 NC

[Excerpts] Foreign Minister Rolandhis met with Greek Foreign Minister Rallis in Athens today and discussed developments in the Cyprus issue.

Asked about Cyprus' stand at the UN General Assembly debate on the Afghan issue, Mr Rolandhis said he did not give instructions not to take part in the voting because this would have indicated a lack of interests. He said: On the contrary, we did take part and abstained from voting, thus demonstrating our interest as well as our objection, protest, pain and bitterness over the fact that--6 years after the tragic and condemnable events of 1974--the international community has not, in its entirety, shown adequate concern nor has it succeeded in effectively condemning the invasion and liberating Cyprus from the occupation troops. Mr Rolandhis went on: While we are sustaining the injustice with thousands of foreign troops on our territory, we are called on to deal with other interventions. He also stressed: I regard this as showing contempt for our problem and an insult to the feelings of our suffering and oppressed people.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA SCORES GOVERNMENT'S SUPPORT OF MCCLOSKEY

[Unattributed commenatry: "The Beginning of a Compromise"]

[Text] The government, which is a prisoner of the "we belong to the West" doctrine, hastened, through the statement of Foreign Minister Rallis, to aline itself with the unacceptable positions of U.S. Ambassador Robert McCloskey. Actually, in many points it overbid by recognizing the United States in the role of "arbitrator" and "moderator" in Greek-Turkish differences.

Rallis said that it is not contrary to government aims that the United States "has committed itself to guaranteeing the maintenance of the current balance of military strength among countries of the region." The minister knows very well how the United States guarantees such a balance: It has incited Greece and Turkey into an uncontrolled arms race which is burdening the economies of the two countries to the benefit of the U.S. military industry and is serving NATO aims. After all, Kissinger's doctrine is well known: Arm two opponents equally and when you want one of them to succumb, just give more to the other at a specific moment. Furthermore, it is no secret that in Greece's case the arms are bought with a thousand deprivations by the Greek people, while for Turkey the fountains of free aid from the United States and NATO are always open.

Rallis stressed that the United States' assurance "to actively and unequivocally oppose the use of force in the Aegean" is acceptable and agrees with Greek policy. But how much can we believe in such assurances in view of "Attila's" invasion of Cyprus which took place with U.S. blessings? However, this "assurance" reveals the further aims of the United States and NATO. It would not be at all difficult for them to cause tension in the Aegean and then to intervene to "avoid" the use of force, in which case they will place the Greek sea under their control, something they always have been seeking as was revealed by the Haig and Rogers plans. How can the Greek foreign minister disregard all these things?

Rallis stressed that the U.S. ambassador's position that Greece and the United States are "dedicated to a just settlement of the Cyprus problem providing for a sovereign, nonalined and independent republic" is not "contrary to our line." With what formula, however? In his speech McCloskey did not say one word about the UN resolutions which call for the complete withdrawal of all foreign troops from Cyprus and the return of the refugees for their homes. Are we, therefore, dedicated to the same formula for a settlement?

Rallis claims that McCloskey's statement that "it is important for all of us to guarantee the return of the Greek forces to NATO" is not pressure "auguring the abandonment of our sovereign rights." Does Rallis not know the conditions for return? Was pressure exerted or not for the acceptance of the Haig and Rogers plans which the government rejected? Didn't these plans provide for the ceding of our sovereign rights through the "distribution" of Aegean operational control? Finally, which NATO are we talking about? About an alliance which finally and irrevocably lost its credibility by supporting the 7-year tyranny in Greece and giving the green light for the treason and invasion of suffering Cyprus?

In his speech at the Propeller Club, McCloskey recommended to Greece a "willingness for compromise" so that "just and permanent settlements can be achieved." In view of this recommendation, what can the Greek Government's alinement with the U.S. positions mean? Could it mean the beginning of a compromise which is opposed by the overwhelming majority of the Greek people?

NAP'S TURKES EXPRESSES VIEWS ON FOREIGN POLICY

NC040805 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 3 Feb 80 pp 1, 10 NC

[Text] Ankara (THA)--Stressing the need for the countries in the region to perform their deterrent and balancing roles well, Nationalist Action Party [NAP] leader Alpaslan Turkes added: "For this purpose, we favor cooperation that will stretch from Yugoslavia to Pakistan, embracing even China."

Answering questions from the THA [Turkish News Agency] correspondent Turkes pointed out that the invasion of Afghanistan has dangerously upset the equilibrium of the world in general and of the Middle East in particular. Turkes went on: "Detente may have been debatable for some time, but cold winds have now replaced this air of appeasement after the invasion of Afghanistan."

Stating that such basic principles as nonintervention in the internal affairs of other nations, observing one another's territorial integrity and respecting as equal the sovereignty of all nations, irrespective of their size, form the main principle of protecting peace, Turkes stressed that all nations observe such fundamental rules as the principles of the United Nations and the Helsinki agreement.

The Nationalist Action Party leader stated that he would like to see the development of goodneighborly relations with the Soviet Union, provided such relations are based on nonintervention in internal affairs, on equality and on respect for mutual interests. Turkes added: "We wish to improve our relations with the Soviet Union in accordance with the principles of definitive sovereignty. In view of the fact that Turkey does not in any way pose such a threat to the Soviet Union or behave in such a way that it would violate these principles, the further development of these relations depends on the behavior of the Soviet Union. Whenever the Soviet Union has shown friendship toward Turkey, Turkey has reciprocated."

In his statement, Turkes also referred to Turkish-Greek relations. He said Turkey and Greece are two neighbors sharing a geopolitical position. Thus they must get on well and be friendly with each other. He added: "Turkey's stand on the Cyprus and the Aegean issues is known. Almost all governments have remained faithful to these principles. Our stand on these two issues has to be clearly understood if the Cyprus issue is to be resolved and if Turkish-Greek relations are to reach the desired level, for our stand is realistic and is based on historic experiences. Turkey favors wise and realistic solutions against policies envisaging the realization of enosis and the Hellenization of the Aegean, which could lead to graver disputes. It does not approve of policies which tend to mar relations easily and which are not realistic."

The leader of the Nationalist Action Party further stated that there are not tensions or differences between Turkey and Iran and that the two nations are on brotherly terms. Turkes went on: "Turkey's geographical position and its foreign policy principles demand that it develop its friendly and brotherly relations with Iran, as well as its economic relations. The communique issued at the NATO conference does not mean that Turkey condemns Iran. It has only confirmed the international status and immunity of diplomats. Moreover, the Turkish foreign minister stated at the Islamic conference that Turkey would not subscribe to any sanctions that may be imposed on Iran."

DELIVERY OF CARTER BOYCOTT LETTER TO PRESIDENCY DELAYED

LD050118 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0001 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Summary] The presidency of the republic tonight confirmed that it received only today a letter from U.S. President Jimmy Carter. The letter was held up at the Portuguese Foreign Ministry for over a week.

The Lisbon weekly, EXPRESSO, which disclosed the delay of the letter at the Foreign Ministry, stated over the weekend that in the letter President Jimmy Carter asked Gen Ramalho Eanes to use his good offices with the Portuguese Olympic Committee in connection with a Portuguese boycott of the Moscow Olympic games.

An embarrassed Foreign Ministry this morning ordered an inquiry into why the letter had been held up at the ministry for so long, without the addressee or even the minister having any knowledge of it.

Gen Ramalho Eanes is believed to have discussed the contents of the letter with Prime Minister Sa Carneiro during their 4-hour meeting at Belem Palace last night.

NO 'OPPRESSIVE MEASURES' TO BE USED AGAINST ATHLETES

LD041938 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1815 GMT 4 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The government today promised not to use "oppressive measures" to stop British athletes going to the Moscow Olympic games. Mrs Thatcher told a delegation from the Central Council of Physical Recreation at Downing Street that the government would not withdraw passports or refuse visas to sportsmen and women. Instead it would adopt a "step by step" approach--through the British Olympic Association [BOA] and the International Olympic Committee--in the hope that the venue can be changed. But it was later disclosed the BOA Chairman Sir Denis Follows has already told the prime minister that there is "little or no support" within his organisation for a switch.

Sir Denis's summing-up of the BOA's attitude came in a letter delivered to Mrs Thatcher today in reply to her request last month that the BOA suggest the games be moved. He added that the IOC, the world body governing the games, had no grounds for cancelling its agreement with the Moscow Olympic organizing committee. It was also not considered possible to fragment the games, staging various events at several alternative venues. Unless the IOC found just cause to move the games he could see no alternative but to go ahead and stage them in Moscow. But he did agree to have the question of whether to accept the invitation to Moscow placed before a special meeting of the IOC on March 4.

IOC officials, however, are due to meet on February 13 at Lake Placid in the United States, scene of the Winter Olympics, and are expected then to take a substantive decision on the matter.

Mrs Thatcher was clear today about not taking oppressive measures to win a boycott of the games.

But an unexpressed threat could exist to the pounds 400,000 which the BOA still needs to send a British team to Moscow. If this money were to be provided by the Sports Council, then it would be open to the government to subtract this amount from the money it provides for the council next year.

KREISKY INTERVIEWED ON RECENT FAR EAST TRIP

AU051502 [Editorial Report AU] Vienna domestic television service in German at 1830 on 4 February 1980 carried a 10-minute report on Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's recent visit to the Far East. The report began with local correspondent Hans Benedikt's description of Kreisky's activities in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, the last stop of his journey; then followed recorded excerpts of an interview given in Riyadh--date not given--by Kreisky to Hans Benedikt.

Asked to give his impressions of Saudi Arabia's attitude toward the USSR's intervention in Afghanistan, Kreisky said: "I am in a difficult position. I do not want to interpret the opinion of my hosts, but I can say one thing, at least to me it is clear that here in Saudi Arabia one thinks that the great problems of the moment, Iran and Afghanistan, must not overshadow the Mideast problem, which is the genuine problem, because this is the problem from which all others emanate."

Asked whether there still is a possibility of avoiding a stagnation in the Israeli-Egyptian negotiatons on the Palestinian problem, Kreisky said: "I can not judge this from here, here I think there is almost a catastrophe in the offing, since so far there have been no results in this area."

Asked whether as a consequence President as-Sadat should break off the negotiations, Kreisky replied: "I cannot say that, and I do not want to say that, but at any rate a significant prerequisite of what one thought was achieved in Camp David has not come about."

Asked whether Camp David is therefore devoid of substance, Kreisky said: "This can not be said, but it is high time to recognize where the central problem lies. The central problem is the Palestinian problem."

On the question whether some initiative might still be forthcoming from a United States busy with an election year, Kreisky said: "Since I am very frank, or relatively frank, I wish to state the following: The belief that, because presidential elections are under way in America, American politics can forego solving important questions is utterly wrong. On the contrary, I believe that an American President who consistently pursues these questions and who takes a powerful and energetic stance, will more probably be sure of the voters support than one who by a hesitant and wavering policy lets things take their course. On the contrary, I believe that in a democracy he will win who clearly and unambiguously stakes out his policy."

The report then turned to Kreisky's arrival in Vienna on 4 February. At Vienna's airport Kreisky answered additional questions by journalists on how the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan was viewed in the countries he visited. Kreisky: "Anyone can understand that there is general uneasiness the closer one gets to the center of the crisis. At the Gulf the uneasiness is especially pronounced, but also in India there is a feeling of uneasiness." Asked what he would recommend to his friends of the Socialist International at their meeting beginning in Vienna on 6 February in order to save detente, Kreisky said: "It is probably not so much a question of recommending anything, as it is a question of conveying an impression of the situation that is as accurate as possible. After all, the participants in the Socialist International meeting are very intelligent people who can make up their own minds. We will deliberate tomorrow on the policy we think should be pursued...." Kreisky was interrupted by a journalist pointing to the example of Stalin who, confronted with the moral authority of the pope, had asked how many divisions the pope had.

The journalist asked whether the Soviet Union would be very impressed by the Socialist International's opinion. Kreisky stated: "It is not a question of the Socialist International. Things are very different. For example, the case of Afghanistan has mobilized the Islamic world in a way that we in Europe cannot imagine. The Islamic world encompasses one billion people and the Soviet leadership cannot remain indifferent to their opinion. This is even aggravated by the strong movement in the Islamic world in terms of religion. This is felt in all the countries that merely have Islamic minorities. This is all far more complicated than one is inclined to believe."

Asked whether he advocated a middle way between toughness and clemency towards the Soviet Union, Kreisky said: "I am not in favor of a middle way, I am in favor of clearly stating what has to be stated; maybe we even owe this to the Soviet Union so that they do not get the wrong impression and think that it will all blow over in a matter of days. On the other hand, one must see what is the stake, and we must not topple head over heels into cold war and help to fan it. This is out of the question. We are facing a strong movement in the armaments field anyway. It will be difficult enough to advocate a sensible and balanced policy, thus one must not aggravate the situation by talk which does not lead anywhere."

On boycott measures, for example the boycott of the Olympic games in Moscow, Kreisky said: "I do not want to comment on this in detail. For the time being, we still consider this as a sporting event. We will have to examine the question, and above all those who are immediately affected will have to examine it." Reminded that in the last instance, the government's opinion will be asked, Kreisky said: "We will have time to consider the question until then."

Switching to economic subjects and to the question of how definite the agreed shipment of one and a half to two million tons per year of Saudi Arabian crude oil to Austria is, Kreisky said: "Very definite. It is only a question of negotiations between the Austrian state oil administration and the corresponding Saudi Arabian bodies. Agreements on the quantities have been reached. Those quantities can even be increased. We want to purchase oil from the producer countries, not on the spot markets at exaggerated prices. The trend is to purchase from the countries that sell at OPEC prices. Saudi Arabia is a very reliable partner. I want to repeat this, so that we may congratulate ourselves on having found such a partner."

BRIEFS

COAL POWERPLANT PROJECT--To make up for the power that was to have been supplied by the--mothballed--Zwentendorf nuclear powerplant, the Federal Power Company and the Lower Austrian Newag Power Company will each build a coal powerplant unit on a joint site at Duernrohr, Lower Austria, about 4 kilometers from Zwentendorf. Total construction cost will be 7.2 billion schillings, the joint capacity of both units 700 megawatts. The first unit--that of the Federal Power Company--is to go into operation in the fall of 1984, the second about 10 months later. Most of the fuel requirements will be met from imports of Polish bituminous coal--about 1 million tons annually. The remainder will be imported from South Africa. SCHMIDT, OTHER LEADERS COMMENT ON FRG-FRENCH TALKS

Schmidt Statement

LD052310 Hamburg DPA in German 2230 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Following the conclusion of the German-French consultations, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt emphasized the accord between Bonn and Paris in assessing the political situation following the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Speaking on ARD Television tonight, he said it is the main concern of both governments not to increase needlessly the tensions which have arisen as a result of the crisis and to prevent them being transferred to Europe.

The chancellor again decisively rejected a geographical extension of the Bundeswehr's NATO committment beyond central Europe. He said that sending German soldiers, for example, to the Persian Gulf is incompatible with the purpose of the NATO partners and with the Basic Law.

Schmidt To Reassure Carter

LD051816 Hamburg DPA in German 1648 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Hamburg--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will speak with President Carter and assure him that he can rely on the chancellor and on French President Giscard d'Estaing. This is noted by government spokesman Klaus Boelling in an article in tomorrow's BILD ZEITUNG.

"Jimmy Carter can tell his countrymen with conviction that the most important European politicians with government responsibility" stand by him, Boelling writes. Schmidt will confirm this to the President during a telephone conversation. The article goes on to note that it is, of course, an obligation to brief a friend if one has just exchanged important thoughts with another friend on a serious subject.

Genscher Interview

DW060853 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1730 GMT 5 Feb 80 DW

[Excerpts from reporter Burchardt interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The most remarkable thing about the communique that has been published in Paris is the fact that the French obviously are clinging more strongly to the alliance of the European Community than people have thought. What effects can the Paris summit have on the European Community as a whole?

[Answer] I think we made it very clear before going to Paris that Europe must act together with the United States, and that we had no doubts that our French friends realized that. The joint declaration expresses it very clearly. The significance of the alliance is stressed very clearly here. Nobody can think that the security of Europe can be guaranteed without an alliance with the United States. The firm attitude expressed in these statements, and the clearness of the demand for a withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan are an important political signal. No European country of the Community takes a position that deviates from this. Seen that way, the statement expresses a common position of the states of the European Community.

[Question] Is there not a much greater danger that the Germans and the French will again make common cause of something they agreed on long ago and force it, so to speak, on the smaller European Community partners?

[Answer] That fear is unjustified. Please, we must not ignore the fact that the German-French summit in Paris was preceded by a number of bilateral consultations. I met with a number of foreign ministers the week before the summit. It shows that we as well as our French friends were interested in working out an approach the basic elements of which we knew would be shared by our partners. Last but not least, the talks I had in Washington contributed to strengthening these positions. The intent jointly expressed in Washington, namely to develop an overall Western strategy, is clearly expressed in that joint declaration.

[Question] Has the Western position following the Paris meeting become more unambiguous with respect to economic sanctions and the Olympic boycott issue?

[Answer] If one views the action of Western states, a number of concrete steps have either been taken already or are envisaged. It must not be narrowed down to a few, perhaps spectacular problems. That would not mean living up to the claim of an overall Western concept or overall strategy.

Bahr: 'Unreserved Support'

LD051222 Hamburg DPA in German 0139 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The SPD has welcomed the result of the German-French consultations as being constructive and clear. SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr said in Bonn today that it deserved unreserved support. It would positively affect Europe's significance if other members of the European Community endorsed the content of the statement.

"It would be helpful for stability, the continuation of the policy of detente and the defusing of the international crisis if the echo from Washington and the reply from Moscow were equally constructive," Bahr stressed. The Paris statement is a political act whose effect ought to reach beyond Europe. It is to be hoped that this European signal will be understood.

Strauss Critical

LD051224 Hamburg DPA in German 1112 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Munich--The Bavarian minister-president and CDU/CSU candidate for the federal chancellor's office, Franz-Josef Strauss, believes that the agreement reached by the French and German governments at the Paris summit to the effect that in the present situation West Europe must assume special responsibilities should not be construed to mean playing a mediating role between the United States and the Soviet Union. In a statement published in Munich, Strauss says the United States would not want this. The agreement should mean rather that the West Europeans, in a joint strategy with the United States are prepared to assume specific tasks to relieve the United States of some of its burden.

Strauss says the statement that "detente will not withstand another blow of this kind" is almost foolish. Similar statements had been made following the Soviet march into Budapest and the invasion of Prague by the Warsaw Pact forces. The Kremlin is counting on the fact that "instead of political reactions it will receive statements of this nature from West Europe following its next act of aggression."

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON CONSEQUENCES OF AFGHANISTAN

DW041815 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 4 Feb 80 pp 24-33 DW

[Undated interview in Bonn with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt by editors Rudolf Augstein, Klaus Wirtgen and Dirk Koch]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Federal Chancellor, one has the feeling at the moment that what we used to consider established, namely a certain agreement, a certain harmony between the world powers and the more important powers--such as the Federal Republic of Germany--has been completely upset.

One has the feeling that the normal lines of communication are not open, such as advance information or simultaneous information. One has the feeling that the necessary consultations are not taking place in the Western alliance and that this has created a certain new quality in politics because of the impeding severe raw material crisis. One could even say--with all reservations--that there is a certain threat of war.

Schmidt: If a European journalist of political importance indicates that he has perceived things the way you have just described, and if he goes so far to express his opinion in an interview in the form of a question, this is in itself a sign that one should not feel unconcerned.

I would not like to casually accept what you, personally, have said to illustrate your concern. It needs qualification, but I will leave that aside. I would like to take one point up immediately, however.

It is wrong, it is not to the point, if you have the impression that consultations are not taking place in the West. That is not the case. Contacts are unusually close and numerous. I am much more concerned by the fact that communication between the world powers has become much weaker than it was up until late summer 1979.

I am equally concerned by the fact that it obviously does not seem to be so easy for us in the West to clearly diagnose the underlying motives of the Soviet Union and that, on the other hand, it seems obviously very difficult now for the Soviet leadership to correctly deduce what the West wants. For Soviet spokesmen to say publicly that the American President is unpredictable is just a propagandistic response to the fact that the West reacted differently than the Russians had figured.

SPIEGEL: Was it all of no use--the agreements in the decade of detente on "red telephones," communications and negotiating levels? Has all that been suddenly brushed away?

Can one consider SALT I and SALT II as anything other than confidence-building measures? Basically, they do not involve disarmament, but are only talks between the only world powers--loud talks, signed talks--just to prevent something being left undone as a result of lack of understanding, which did occur in earlier times because of a lack of understanding.

Schmidt: First I will deal with the question of whether the extent of contact spheres between the two world powers, which has increased more and more in the course of more than a decade an a half, has been of no use. I clearly say no to that. It was of enormous significance.

It was of enormous significance that immediately after the harmonious mastering of the conflict--or as I said in the Bundestag, the joint "crisis management" of the Cuban missile crisis of October 1962--that immediately thereafter, as early as in 1962, a beginning was made for the frist time through the nuclear test ban agreement, with the harmonious limitation under international law of the nuclear strategic arms race that had been completely unrestricted up to that time.

That was continued in the course of the sixties in a number of mutual rapprochements at the time of Johnson and Brezhnev. It experienced a strong upswing with regard to Brezhnev when Nixon took over.

You mentioned SALT I--rightly so. You should also have mentioned the four-power agreement on Berlin. It is also of world political significance.

It means that all this lasted for a decade and a half, beginning in 1963 and lasting into last year, when eventually--very much too late--Messrs Brezhnev and Carter met each other face to face in Vienna.

Both sides have established in a decade and a half more than merely areas of contact, opportunities to listen to each other, opportunities to offset their mutual factual interests and to achieve compromises in important fields. In addition, they gave hope to the world, particularly through SALT II, justified hope that at least the two superpowers were firmly determined, out of their respective interests and because of a common responsibility for peace in the world, not to permit a further unrestricted arms race in strategic nuclear means of destruction.

The deterioration of relations between the two world powers does not make me feel concerned that the two world powers will abandon their desire to prevent an unrestricted arms race. At present I do not have that concern.

But I am concerned that the many talks and negotiations on other arms limitation problems will not proceed. It is not merely that so-called intercontinental weapons must be limited; medium-rance weapons must be limited also. There are also conventional armed forces in Europe--take the Vienna MBFR negotiations--that must be limited. There are mutually desired measures for stabilizing peace under the umbrella of the Helsinki Final Act. There are followup conferences that must not stagnate.

If one takes all this together, I would say that my concern is that all this must not be allowed to stagnate.

The American President said last week in his "State of the Union Message" that adherance to the limitations of SALT I and II lies in the true interest of both countries and contributes to preserving peace in the world. I welcomed that very much, and I consider it very important that a corresponding statement with similar authority be made by the Eastern side. Since elections will take place in the United States this year, it would be desirable for other persons, persons striving for offices, to publicly commit themselves in a similar way; all the more so because a ratification, that is a two-thirds majority, in the U.S. Senate is obviously unachievable in the present situation.

SPIEGEL: Your information is undoubtedly much better than ours--which is nothing against us--but we have the feeling that the Soviets are really disappointed, and we do not have the feeling that they just pretend to be disappointed by the so-called closing of the arms gap in central Europe, is it possible that a misunderstanding exists here also?

Schmidt: Not a misunderstanding, but a false assessment on the Soviet side. The Russians figured that out incorrectly. Every serious rational activity is inevitably exposed to the danger of human error. Whether it be philosophy or politics or chess, whether it be mathematics or Einstein's theories--prior to or after Einstein--everything is exposed to the danger of error.

Errors can be very grave: They can be of only literary significance, or they can later on be of enormous subsequent significance in the history of science. I will leave that open. It is a broad philosophical field. Errors are also possible in politics.

If Mr Augstein says that his impression is that the Russians could be disappointed by the fact that something has happened differently than they expected, I say to that: I consider it possible. But somebody who feels disappointed in Moscow because of this has imagined something that was wrong; maybe he has not listened attentively enough.

I could say the reverse--I am theorizing at the moment. I do not want to state it, but I do not rule it out either--I could say that I am disappointed that my Soviet discussion partners, maybe Leonid Brezhnev himself almost 2 years ago here in Bonn, perhaps did not feel the seriousness of the concern with which many of their Western discussion partners pointed out that the developing imbalance in medium-range weapons--such as the SS-20 or the "Backfire" bomber--could not go on like that.

It does not get you anywhere--and in this way I sum up these considerations--for the sides to subsequently add up who has more reason to feel disappointed, or whose fault it is that he has made a wrong estimate.

SPIEGEL: Some Western politicians believe that even the Afghanistan crisis might have been avoided had negotiations been started. Do you think it would have been helpful to have entered negotiations, as Gromyko requested during his latest visit to Bonn, so that the Afghanistan crisis...

Schmidt: ...That is a futile question. It was absolutely impossible for one to be building a new missile every week, and the other saying: I am doing nothing, but I am prepared to negotiate. It is a question one can only ask theoretically; but no responsible politician could have answered it in the affirmative at that time.

SPIEGEL: In the reverse situation you would not have been in a good position if you had hindered the closing of the arms gap--you could have done that--and Afghanistan had taken place. You said that Brezhnev and Carter met too late; are you offering your good services so that also in these times of increased tension--maybe of even ever-increasing tension--such contact could take place at the top level between East and West?

Schmidt: These two world powers do not need the good services of the Federal Republic of Germany to talk to each other; and Mr Brezhnev and Mr Carter do not need the services of the German federal chancellor if they want to talk to each other.

The Federal Republic of Germany is not the pointer on the scales. The Federal Republic of Germany is a part, an important part, of the Western alliance system, a part whose absence is unimaginable.

On the other hand, seen from our point of view, our security depends on the solidarity of our alliance with the United States and the entire Western alliance system. We have no opportunity, no desire and no eventual intention to adopt some sort of third position and we cannot have that.

What we are publicly and audibly telling the two world powers--I remind you of the government statement on Thursday, 17 January; I remind you of Genscher's speech the same day--what we are repeating over and over again in diplomatic talks and exchanges of opinion is that people must talk with each other. They must tell each other what they want and what they do not want. Otherwise things can become precarious.

I said in that government statement--without knowing how welcome I would be to Eastern discussion partners in present times--I said, to give a real example, that I intended as before to meet with Mr Brezhnev.

SPIEGEL: Would you welcome a meeting of both leaders of the Eastern and the Western camps in the present situation?

Schmidt: I am for it on principle, but I do not want to judge whether that would be possible in the present situation; and naturally that must be prepared.

SPIEGEL: Do you expect a further escalation of the conflict? Are you including that in your calculations? As a chief of government you must think a crisis through to its end in order to be prepared for emergencies.

Schmidt: In difficult situations one must visualize all theoretical possibilities. One must examine the possible alternatives one has, and one must use such analyses of the situation, such assessments, as the basis for using the influence emanating from one's own government, one's own country, with a view to its possible advantage to positive developments.

Further escalation could touch off further dangers. It would be senseless to assume that further escalation is unavoidable. It would be even more senseless to say that general worldwide escalation is inevitable. On the contrary, it is a matter of limiting the present tensions and of reestablishing violated interests, of thinking of mechanisms and guarantees, of implementing them in order to avoid extension to other fields.

But in connection with all this one must clearly say again that the Federal Republic, by God, is not a political midget, and the international authority of the Federal Government in this connection is considerable; but we are a link in the European Community--one of nine states with equal rights--we are a member of the North Atlantic Treaty--one of 15 states with equal rights--we are a power without a veto right in the Security Council, without nuclear arms. We are the historical successors of Adolf Hitler with everything the world still remembers about that. We are a part of a divided nation at a most precarious situation at the interface...

SPIEGEL: ...With a Berlin outpost...

Schmidt: ...Correct, let your remark stand--at an interface; and therefore we must not overrate our own role and the weight we carry. I do not consider it as little, but I do not want to overexert myself in a German flight of fancy.

SPIEGEL: Are you under the impression that in the future you have to expect more imponderables than rational action, based on your most recent experience?

Schmidt: The question is too philosophical for me. It is open to too many interpretations.

SPIEGEL: Let me put it differently: The social-liberal coalition has scored many positive points and has survived by the fact that it introduced the term "detente" to the people in this country and that that it really pursued detente. Do we have to change our thinking with regard to the meaning of the term "detente"? Is detente now the permanent attempt not to increase tension, not to let it escalate?

Schmidt: I do not want to decide in favor of this or that speculation. The thing that must be given priority now is safeguarding peace. Old quarrels of German political parties, parliamentarians or leading political figures do not matter--such as: Was it right to enter the United Nations, was it right to have used the term "detente"? I do not want to discard the word "detente" today.

There is the danger that the world could experience additional tension, and I feel all of us are against that. Therefore, even Strauss says, to the disgust of some of his fellow party members, I have noted, that he does not reject detente at all. He is in favor of realistic or real detente.

SPIEGEL: For the new detente.

Schmidt: Well, I have nothing against that. It does not matter to me here. Mr Strauss must naturally also try not to disappoint his followers completely.

As regards the meaning, the contents of the word "detente": I belong to those who have used it for 10 years, and I will continue to use it.

But if you look up what I said or wrote as faction chairman of the Bundestag at the time of the Great Coalition and later as defense minister, or as minister in another department, or as federal chancellor, you will see that first of all I gave priority to another term with regard to safeguarding peace, namely the term "balance of military forces."

SPIEGEL: Yes...

Schmidt: ...Just a moment. I would like to expound this philosophy. Please, you are giving me the opportunity to say something in SPIEGEL about the current situation in the world and you must let me say it. I am not playing journalistic games, here.

SPIEGEL: No, we though you had finished.

Schmidt: No, I have not finished! I think slowly, I am a bit, a bit...

SPIEGEL: ...But ready to be printed.

Schmidt: ...Older now and things don't come as easily. For me the concept of balance has always been in the foreground, the balance of military forces in Europe and those from without that affect Europe.

I have always added--I have written a whole book about the strategy of balance, and the book is 11 years old now...

SPIEGEL: ...And a foreword to Hermann Kahn.

Schmidt: Yes, 11 years old. I have always added: The desire to have only a balance is not sufficient. I have always added: One cannot establish a balance once and for all so that it will exist forever; it must be established over and over again.

The second idea in connection with this was always that the balance must be be established daily by both sides watching that the other does not run away in the arms race, and that one side must be able to run as quickly as the other. On the contrary, balance must be established and stabilized for a longer time, if possible by an agreement on how much will be done on both sides so that a limitation of forces can be achieved in that way, a balance on a contractually agreed decreased quantitative and qualitative level--key word: arms limitation.

That includes own defense efforts. It includes an equally serious desire to achieve arms limitation. It includes an equally serious desire to go beyond maintaining a merely numerical balance and to pour no oil, no gasoline on those fires that burn here and there in the world.

The latter, condensed in the principle of arms limitation, can be quoted as the key work "detente," if one wants to.

You will see that I used it that way if you read Schmidt's speeches, books and essays written or given in the past 10 years. There is nothing for me to revise. It was always realistic.

SPIEGEL: Also with regard to the sequence?

Schmidt: Yes, and I have the satisfaction that at least since 1972 and the SALT I agreement and then in the SALT II agreement it has turned out that both world powers can accept this kind of philosophy: The principle of a balance to be stabilized through limitation if possible--and in addition to try on the basis of that temporary balance to limit conflicts because the one will not need to be afraid of the other. That will remain my line as long as I bear responsibility.

SPIEGEL: But we cannot avoid the fact that such a wise observer as Henry Kissinger warns the Europeans--and in doing this he probably means you also--not to continue with a "differentiated detente" because temporary alleviation would be bought at the price of its real influence and long-term security. Does something like differentiated detente exist? Should it or does it need to exist?

Schmidt: I am not familiar with that quotation. I will take it as you have inserted it here.

The danger that somebody will buy temporary calm for himself through action, thus violating with his action the principle of balanced military strength that I mentioned before is a feasible danger.

It existed in the fall of 1979 when some people believed that one could simply let the Soviet Union continue its medium-range armament which is aimed against China, the Middle East and Europe, without doing anything oneself. The main thing it was felt, was to talk to the Russians about it.

Had the Soviet general secretary said in his great speech on 6 October, which contained some positive signals, now we, the Soviet Union, will immediately interrupt our SS-20 and "Backfire" armament, it would have been theoretically feasible. I do not say that I would have acted for this in such a case. But, at any rate, it would have been possible that somebody in the West could have answered: Good, on that basis we can first negotiate without deciding immediately what we have to do.

I am not familiar with the Kissinger warning you quoted. But I have been trying to explain things with this example and trying to say simultaneously that this warning was certainly not directed at the Germans.

The Germans have clearly said--the Social Democratic Party with a nine-tenths majority at a party congress where hundreds of people debated it and reached a decision--we will buy nothing at the expense of a balance that will later be deformed, a later imbalance. We will not do that.

On the other hand, we have not been blowing any military trumpets either. We have used very proper language in making our decision, language which insults nobody.

I do not believe that a danger such as you have cited exists in the West. I also do not believe that somebody could think in Moscow that Soviet psychological strategy--psychological-political strategy--would have a chance to exploit such "weaknesses" that could appear in the West.

SPIEGEL: Key word, escalation. You were one of the first, maybe the first, German politician to excite interest in the mid-sixties for Herman Kahn's book "Escalation." Is it time to look again at Herman Kahn's book with the 44 steps of escalation, where the end of Europe would probably take place at step 20?

Schmidt: Help me before I answer that question. I do not know at all what I wrote in the foreword.

SPIEGEL: In short: We must try to stop the still uncontrolled arms race.

Schmidt: I did not agree with Kahn on many details. That was not important for me. What was important for me was the rational idea of banning the danger of irrational action. I would like to say one thing clearly, however: The world has no reason now to adapt in thought to the 12th, 18th, 30th or 40th steps of Hermann Kahn's escalation illustrations. No Reason!

SPIEGEL: In addition, he still owes us the 45th escalation...

Schmidt:...And I urgently warn against having such thoughts. What the Europeans need is careful thinking, reason, Being reasonable means being aware of the danger. Part of being reasonable is not feeling frightened, even if unintentionally, by anybody. Fear is a poor adviser--for an individual political leader as well as for whole governments and nations as well as published opinion. Fear destroys the ability to think reasonably.

SPIEGEL: You refuse to talk about the danger of war?

Schmidt: But most certainly!

SPIEGEL: The leading Western power at present aims for "containment," and in this context one can interpret "containment" very easily as being some kind of rearmament. It also seems that this development will outlast the U.S. elections in the fall.

How can one represent current policy in a credible way if both sides consider "containment" as rearmament. Would we not arrive in this way at differentiated armament indeed?

Schmidt: That has been the case so far. The existing arms limitation agreements have been limited to certain sectors, especially dangerous sectors of Soviet and American armament.

Armament at sea, with the exception of strategic nuclear-carrying submarines, for example, was pursued by the Soviets massively and without limit.

Arms limitation policy has not advanced so far in the world that it has included all arms or all regions. After all, it is something that is being tried seriously for the first time in world history by powers of the same class facing each other in the heavyweight class. It is something completely new.

It was to be expected--and we have said so repeatedly--that there will be setbacks. Now we must watch out that the setback will not be too great and not tear down everything that has been achieved, so that later on one will be in a position to continue what has been achieved to date.

In the overall context I want to recall an agreement between President Nixon and General Secretary Brezhnev voiced jointly in Moscow in 1972, at a time when the Vietnam war was still going on, that means at a time when very strong tension existed in another part of the world. I want to recall a joint statement of these two world powers aimed at avoiding a nuclear war.

Who ever looks at the texts published by the two world powers at that time need not quote Hermann Kahn and 1965, or whenever that was. I would recommend having another look at these two texts.

SPIEGEL: But then the Americans were withdrawing from Vietnam, not advancing.

Schmidt: I just want to say that it was a time when sharp tensions existed in another great part of the world.

SPIEGEL: That was evidence of communications which existed and functioned, while what we see now in Afghanistan...

Schmidt: ...That's right. I remind you of that in the present situation. We are in times of great tension now.

SPIEGEL: What do you think are the Soviets' motives for invading Afghanistan?

Schmidt: I think there are a number of motives. It is clear that Soviet preponderance in Afghanistan has existed for a long time, following the English-Russian dispute over influence there. Until recently it had not been the reason for a great conflict between Moscow and Washington.

The modern airfields the Soviet Air Force is finding in Afghanistan today were not built by the Afghans but by the Russians. The great highways, the ring highway, are not the results of development aid given by the Germans or the Americans.

The Russians probably thought the West had accepted the fact that they have a certain influence there, and that therefore it would also accept it if they were to march in there with four or five divisions. Consequently the West would also accept the creation in this way of a base for their air force operations in the Gulf and Indian Ocean that has been moved 500 kilometers further forward. That was certainly a miscalculation.

The Russians, from their point of view, may have been concerned about domestic and maybe also foreign developments in Kabul. I do not want to assess that. I am not here to pursue motive research.

The result is obvious. A military invasion has taken place in a nonalined country of the Third World, the "nonalined world." That is a breach of fundamental international legal principles. Simultaneously--and this also cannot be disputed--military positions involving the entire region have been changed to the advantage of the Soviet Union. It is not decisive now what motives played a role or what motive was more important to what person. We must look at the facts and assess them, and then we will arrive at the conclusion that things cannot remain as they are.

SPIEGEL: At any rate what you said in the beginning is still valid: Brezhnev did not know what the West wanted. How does the action of the Soviet Union in the case of Afghanistan correspond to Herbert Wehner's statement that the armament of the Soviet Union is defensive?

Schmidt: I believe Herbert Wehner is right when he starts out from the assumption that the Soviet leadership does not want war, that it is afraid of war and that it does not want to do anything that could touch off a war.

I believe we must assume, because of the examples set on the Arab Peninsula, the African continent, in Southeast Asia by the invasion of the Vietnamese--allies of the Soviet Union--in Kampuchea, that the Soviet intent to avoid the risk of war, which is my starting point, does not rule out the fact that the Soviet power, if it finds the proper opportunity, would like to play power politics here and there if that would work without the risk of war.

SPIEGEL: Do you still assume that the West wants to avoid the risk of war if NATO does indeed extend de facto its sphere of influence, with the Americans under the national flag wanting to strengthen their presence in the Gulf region, and with the other NATO states in exchange taking the burden off the Americans with regard to their specific NATO tasks?

Schmidt: The North Atlantic alliance certainly is--and that has been demonstrated in the more than 30 years of its peace-preserving role in Europe--not merely in its intention but also through its success an instrument for preserving balance and thus peace. Also in the future it will most certainly not be an instrument for other purposes. No one wants that, also no one in the United States.

If the United States, not because of a joint decision by the North Atlantic alliance but because of its own decision, concluded that the vital interests of our people, our economy, our families, our working people and the vital interests of other people in the world could be seriously jeopardized if the oil were cut off; and if the Americans made a timely statement that this is an area of vital interest to the United States of America--that is my free interpretation of the "State of the Union Message"--then that is not a threat to peace. This means and explains in time that those who do not recognize this, the vital interest defined that way, could possibly endanger peace.

SPIEGEL: It is possible that as a result of a solution to the desolate situation in Turkey, a solution on the basis of a division of labor, we will become more involved than we would actually like to be?

Schmidt: We will not be involved. We want to help Turkey, no one has to urge us. We have already done so to a great extent when the U.S. Congress thought it was not in a position to do so. We have continued in past years to give balanced military aid to Greece as well as to Turkey.

We have used our diplomatic and political opportunities to help Greece become a member of the European Community. That has been negotiated and concluded. The contractual legality need only be implemented for it to become fact. For that purpose there is a transition period of several years; it will require great efforts and much money.

There is also the economic weakness of Turkey. It is one of those countries severely hit by the oil price explosion, one of those countries that uses almost its entire export gains to pay for the oil they need to keep transport and industries functioning at all.

SPIEGEL: Like many other developing countries in the world.

Schmidt: Yes, but Turkey is one of those hit the hardest, and for us it is an important alliance partner.

We have always helped Turkey more than others have; we have helped it more financially than other partners. In the past year, in 1979, we made a unique and extreme effort, and we have prompted others to help also.

We Germans--by God not the greatest power of the West--have given the most financial help, and last week we decided, at my suggestion, to tell our allies that we will do so again in 1980. Corresponding talks are underway. Nobody has urged us to do this.

This is a contribution we will make on our own because we believe we are best suited for it due to our good political connections, traditional and actual good political connections between Turks and Germans. We have very good relations full of understanding between the Greek Government and the German Federal Government, because we know that worries of our other alliance partner in that region, namely Greece, must be taken into consideration.

SPIEGEL: How much does that cost and how will it be paid for?

Schmidt: It will not be cheap, but naturally we cannot do more than our economic ability, our economic efficiency permits. We will not do it alone, we will head a list. It is a little too early to answer that question.

SPIEGEL: Let me get back to the last question. Division of labor can be expensive should we want to take the burden off the Americans in central Europe, in middle Europe.

We say we do not want to rearm. Hans Apel says: I do not want a higher defense budget; I can manage. But there are doubts whether this is so; we must rearm if we want to take the burden off the Americans. We must create more transport capacity. We must possibly increase the numerical strength of the reserves.

Schmidt: The Bundeswehr has sufficient transport capacity for our purposes with regard to the decisions of the alliance. No strengthening is necessary there. We have sufficient reservists. Reinforcement is not necessary there. The 1980 defense budget has been passed...

SPIEGEL: ...The Bundestag can pass supplementary budgets.

Schmidt: It will probably be necessary to have a supplement for the Bundeswehr because of the increased oil price, the gasoline price. There might also be other reasons. I would like to keep them open at the moment.

SPIEGEL: Mr Brown, the U.S. secretary of defense, is always talking facts. He says that we have not fulfilled our NATO commitments; instead of the promised 3 percent we have increased the budget by just 1.6 percent. That cannot be mere interpretation difficulties, can it?

Schmidt: The decisive additional financial burdens in 1980 regarding the adopted federal budget of 1980 will not appear in the defense budget but in development aid for a number of countries, in aid for Turkey, Pakistan, for Afghan refugees, and so on and so forth.

SPIEGEL: Will these be increases or shifts?

Schmidt: And so on. I said burdens. But here, too, no exorbitant changes of amount will be involved. We have made enormous efforts to increase the development budget far beyond average budget increases.

I do not like making money available that cannot be sensibly spent. I do not want to set up a new Julius Tower [finance reserves] on the books which later on, when it is suddenly used, produces inflationary consequences. I think that is out of line.

But I want to oppose the idea which obviously exists that a great armament of all European states will be necessary at any rate, which would cause additional expenditures regardless of purpose.

We have no reason to set a course on our part for an additional military budget race. If weaknesses should be seen somewhere, we will cooperate in making the necessary decisions and implementing them, as was done last fall, last December--that will also be done in the future.

SPIEGEL: Do you see weaknesses today?

Schmidt: I do not want to talk about that.

SPIEGEL: You have mentioned the vital interests of the West in the Gulf region, a region which ought to be defended militarily in an emergency, as Carter said. Cannot the Soviets claim vital interests in the Gulf oil if one bears in mind that as of 1985 they will also have to import oil, which was said, among other things, in the analyses of several federal ministers?

Schmidt: All states of the world have a legitimate interest in a proper share in exploiting the existing resources of energy, a share justified by an international comparison.

That pertains to the United States, which has great amounts of its own energy resources. It also pertains to the Soviet Union, which itself has great energy resources. It pertains to Italy, which has no energy resources at all. It pertains to Germany, which has only coal. It pertains to Denmark, which has no energy resources at all. It pertains to Turkey. It pertains to Brazil. It pertains to everybody.

All states have adapted their energy supply to certain supply lines in the course of decades, following World War II.

The Soviet Union has adapted to obtaining 100 percent of its energy supplies from its own country. Beyond that, the Soviet Union has even been in a position to export for money, very large amounts of money, gas and crude oil to some of its allies. It has had exchange deals with the FRG, for example, or Italy or other states. The Soviet Union has supplied gas and some smaller quantities of oil products to Western countries in normal trade exchange.

SPIEGEL: Its most important foreign currency source?

Schmidt: Yes. It may be true that the Soviet need for energy is increasing faster than the ability to satisfy the need of its own country. That may be. That may result in legitimate interests. Therefore, I considered it correct and I supported in public the holding of the all-European energy conference suggested by Brezhnev.

It is a completely different matter, however, if individual countries have to feel concern, jusitified concern, that their routine energy supply lines will be cut off or curtailed through a unilateral act of another power, or if they must take into consideration the possibility that this could happen. That concern exists for Jimmy Carter, and not only just for him, also for me...

SPIEGEL: ...But not a claim for exclusivity?

Schmidt: Nobody has made that claim. Leave that story out. Carter has not made an exclusive claim either. I do not have the right or the duty to suggest subsequently that he did so.

Since the end of 1979 the structural routine energy supply streams of the world--not at all by the two superpowers--have been so severly dislocated that this has led to the gravest economic crisis since World War II, to an economic crisis, a deep recession plus a deep structural crisis in the world economy that has not yet been overcome.

If, in addition to these eruptions, energy supply is jeopardized owing to power politics, one has to feel very concerned, at least as an economist. I share the concern of the American President in this matter. I publicly stated that concern when I was minister of economy and finance. I publicly stated it as federal chancellor.

That was one of the reasons we set up the institution of a world economic summit meeting. We decided to hold the first meeting of this kind in the first year following the oil price explosion. The decision was made in 1975. The Germans had a decisive share in it.

We have always considered it an extreme danger--at that time not mainly as a matter of power politics, at that time mainly under the aspect of how we could preserve a high standard of employment, a functioning economy in industrial countries, how we could preserve in developing countries at least a standard of living which is still insufficient in many cases, the standard of living they have achieved so far.

SPIEGEL: The Soviet Union in the past appeared to be a power that created order, or very much like such a power...

Schmidt: Say instead "considered itself".

SPIEGEL: Considered itself. It has acted in a peace-making way in the area where there is so much of a crisis now, between Pakistan and India. Key word: The Tashkent agreement of 1966. Could you imagine that an energy conference suggested by Brezhnev could offer a solution also for the Gulf area?

Schmidt: That goes far, far beyond possible positive developments. Moreover, it would interfere in the Gulf states' sphere of decisions.

The following is valid to begin with: It is the oil of the Iraqis, the oil of the Iranians, the oil of the Saudis, the oil of the people in Kuwait, in Abu Dhabi, the United Emirates and in Oman. It is not the oil of the Europeans, Americans or Russians.

We have just been in a position so far to buy it. We have built the installations for them. We have paid for their oil. They have doubled the price, they have increased it fivefold, tenfold, twentyfold. We have paid their price. But it is their oil. We have no right to control it.

SPIEGEL: Willy Brandt, in a SPIEGEL interview, quoted De Gaulle with regard to the leeway a medium-size European power can have between the superpowers. Do you share Brandt's opinion that European powers, also the Federal Republic, ought to claim more leeway?

Schmidt: Vis-a-vis whom?

SPIEGEL: Vis-a-vis their respective main allies.

Schmidt: I do not believe he put it that way. It has been a long time since I read the interview. I would like to answer the question differently. It would be erroneous to believe that the European alliance partners of the United States do not have enough leeway.

We saw how much leeway was exploited, for example by Denmark, by Holland, by Belgium a few weeks ago in a most important problem that involves us all. The Federal Republic of Germany also has its leeway. It does not at all lie in our interest to use our leeway on every occasion just for the sake of principle. That would be a misunderstanding.

The French certainly have even greater leeway that we. They do not have the fate of being divided into two states.

French leeway is greater than ours, but I do not see French policy using every leeway just for the sake of the leeway principle.

SPIEGEL: That was so earlier.

Schmidt: I have not observed anything like that since I have been federal chancellor.

SPIEGEL: It was the Schmidt-Genscher government that discontinued the offset agreement, that implemented the Brazil deal against American wishes and that eventually revised the neutron decision.

Schmidt: Go ahead and add the following: I was the one who helped take the economic leadership of the Western world in firm hands again.

You could also add: Without the Federal Republic of Germany, the dual decision of the North Atlantic alliance in December of last year could not have been achieved; the Soviets blame us for it now.

I can give you similar examples of this kind to illustrate that we have leeway, but it would be a bad mistake to use leeway for the sake of prestige if it does not serve the common good.

SPIEGEL: So you cannot imagine a situation where a conflict of interests could arise between our immediate responsibility for the 17 million people in the GDR and our solidarity in the alliance with the United States?

Schmidt: It is my job to see to it that no conflicts of interest accumulate or take place.

SPIEGEL: When will you go to Moscow: After your visit to the United States?

Schmidt: I would like to repeat that I consider personal meetings extremely important in order for one to get to know and have a feel for the other person. Because one knows him--only if one knows him can one have a feeling for him--one feels how he might react in certain situations.

I consider personal contacts very important in a world that today has become so small, as well as in the same community, the same alliance, and particularly in bilateral relations between America and us.

But naturally there are daily contacts, also without spectacular top echelon visits, and that has to be the way it is.

I assume that the talks President Jimmy Carter and I will have in the first week of March will produce a confirmation of all we have been exchanging in the meantime on various levels between various ministers and aides, and also on the personal level of telephone conversations. Such personal confirmations are important, although there are no doubts at all with regard to our agreement.

I may add that I hope the Soviet side will be interested in a personal meeting. But more important than interest in a meeting with the German federal chancellor is for both world powers to have an interest in keeping in touch with each other.

SPIEGEL: Mr Federal Chancellor, we thank you for this talk.

STRAUSS DISCUSSES TALKS WITH CEAUSESCU, INTERNATIONAL SCENE

DW051255 Bonn DIE WELT in German 2 Feb 80 pp 1, 3 DW

[Wilfried Hertz-Eichenrode and Manfred Schell interview with CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor Franz-Josef Strauss--date and place not specified]

[Text] WELT: Why did Romanian chief of state and party leader Ceausescu in the climate of world tension demonstrate to the Soviet Union that the opposition candidate for chancellor finds hosts and interlocutors within the Warsaw Pact even if Moscow does not invite him?

Strauss: The invitation for a visit to Bucharest was announced as early as in November and was extended formally in December prior to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. However, when I asked whether the invitation or the date of my visit would be adhered to or whether a later date would be envisaged in the light of the changed circumstances, I was told there was no reason for a delay. That is probably the most remarkable thing.

WELT: Foreign Minister Genscher had a different experience with an invitation to Prague?

Strauss: I was not invited demonstratively, but it is noteworthy that a postponement was not proposed, nor was the invitation withdrawn.

WELT: How do you explain this different treatment?

Strauss: I think the Romanian state and party leader, who talks about peace, detente, security and noninterference, wanted to demonstrate to others that in arranging this visit that he does not consider the situation dramatic and that he wants to continue to keep the great center of talks, Bucharest, alive.

WELT: Do you think it is possible that Moscow was interested in your meeting with Ceausescu, in order to obtain direct information in this way on the Western assessment of the situation?

Strauss: I prefer to believe that Moscow would have preferred a postponement of this visit. On the other hand, I assume that Moscow will be informed about the course of the talks. I do not object, although I uttered some very clear words.

WELT: Mr Prime Minister, what did you say "clearly" to the Romanian chief of state?

Strauss: I pointed to the fact that there is a great political discussion going on in the FRG, not only since the Russian invasion of Afghanistan, a discussion on the purpose, the nature and the objective of Soviet armament. I told him that some say this armament is defensive, others say it is offensive; some say it is peaceful, others, aggressive. My political friends and I would assess Soviet armament by three criteria: first, the Soviet potential; second, the political intentions of the Soviet leadership for the foreseeable future; third, the long term strategic goals of the Soviet Union.

WELT: Was Ceausescu interested?

Strauss: We had ample time for this part of the talk. I said, regarding these three criteria, we held the view that the Soviet potential is built up at a greater rate, that it absorbs a much larger share in the national product than is compatible with the state of the economy and that the potential shows an increasingly offensive component and allows many military options. That was my opinion.

WELT: What did you tell Ceausescu about Moscow's obvious intentions?

Strauss: That the Soviet leadership--as far as we can see at this point--does not strive for a great military conflict with the West, for a third world war in the struggle for the rule over the world; that, however, the long term strategic goals of the Soviet Union give reason for utmost vigilance. It is not only now that Afghanistan is an important pivot in world politics.

WELT: The conclusion?

Strauss: The conclusion we draw from it, I said, is: We must build up our armament to an extent guaranteeing that every attempt of the Soviet Union to capitalize politically on its armament will demand a price which will be in no proportion to the desired benefit.

WELT: Did you have a controversial discussion about this subject?

Strauss: We agreed that neither will disclose what the other said.

WELT: The federal chancellor does not have an opportunity at present to meet Honecker. His visit to Moscow also is more than doubtful...

Strauss: ...the foreign minister's visit to Moscow has also become doubtful...

WELT: Earlier Prague withdrew its invitation to Foreign Minister Genscher, which caused Labor Minister Ehrenberg to cancel his trip to the Soviet Union. Although Brandt, Bahr and Schmidt were the architects of the treaty policy with the East, could it be that the CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor is the only German politician now able to contribute to reasonable detente in direct talks?

Strauss: I don't think I will be invited as an interlocutor to East Berlin, Warsaw or Prague. Nor would it be in keeping with the political situation if I were to be a substitute detente politician now.

WELT: You talked about East Berlin, Warsaw and Prague, but not about Moscow?

Strauss: I understand that Moscow time and again considered an invitation. Once I was to be invited, but then the invitation was not expressed formally. Moscow always held the view that I should join in the large chorus of detente euphorics and admirers of Brandt and Bahr if I wanted to be invited to Moscow. I always said that talks could not be made dependent on acts of political penance. I will never make the sacrifice of the intellect (sacrificium intellectus) to consider this ostpolitik a success. The whole development proves me right. If anybody wants to talk with me, then [they must take me] the way I am, but not as a dummy of Strauss.

WELT: You said earlier that Ceausescu wanted to show that he does not consider the situation dramatic. Did you agree with him in this assessment?

Strauss: I do not think the situation in Europe is dramatic. Neither did I believe in a Soviet military action in Yugoslavia.

WELT: Doesn't the danger exist that we might stumble into a war just like in 1914?

Strauss: Here I can report from the talk I had with Mr Brezhnev that fewer wars broke out as a result of an intention than as a result of the fact that the parties concerned did not recognize the point of no return. But this exactly is the development in the Middle East and above all in Africa. This danger exists indeed. Without expecting an answer, I told my interlocutor in Bucharest that a threat to the lifelines of the Europeans and Americans, as far as the oil fields in the Middle East and the raw material bases in Africa are concerned, would by no means be accepted and that any action to this effect would surely result in extremely dangerous situations.

WELT: Is that where the real danger of the world crisis lies?

Strauss: The development in South Yemen should also be watched closely.

WELT: What information do you have?

Strauss: According to our information there are in South Yemen between 4,000 and 6,000 Cubans, 2,000 of Honecker's policemen and soldiers and, in addition, an unknown number of Russian instructors, who are primarily in charge of training South Yemenis in the use of modern weapons. There also are reports of intelligence agencies, which have not been disproved, that missile-launching sites are being installed there opposite the Horn of Africa.

WELT: What type of missiles are they?

Strauss: I have no information about whether they are SS-20 missiles or missiles with a shorter range. But they certainly do not solely serve the security of South Yemen. In addition, we have seen in South Yemen that there, too, a loyal satellite was replaced with an even more loyal one. All these are indications of developments which primarily are directed against its Arab neighbors.

WELT: Back to Europe. Some days ago there were signals from Hungary that this Warsaw Pact country also wants to pursue its own interests in the present world situation. Does the fact that until recently Honecker kept open the possibility of a meeting with the federal chancellor indicate that East Berlin has also tried to safeguard a certain interest of its own?

Strauss: Of course, Honecker would have liked to talk with Helmut Schmidt. Of course, the people in Prague would have liked to talk with Genscher. But at the present icy stage of Soviet policy, Moscow wants to portray Schmidt and Genscher as lackeys of U.S. imperialism. Talks in East Berlin, Moscow and Prague do not fit into this scheme.

WELT: Poland is strangely quiet.

Strauss: Poland is in an extremely difficult economic situation. To express it in figures: Poland has debts of $19 billion; that is more than the Soviet Union has. Poland will have to repay $5 billion, roughly DM8 billion, in 1980. Poland is unable to repay these sums. But it does not want a moratorium, because that would mean a lack of creditworthiness. Therefore, Warsaw wants to have considerable credits to effect the repayments, but also to finance the necessary foreign investment projects. That is also why the Poles were not happy when the federal economics minister canceled his trip to Warsaw.

WELT: Do you know why?

Strauss: In Poland they asked whether it had something to do with Afghanistan or whether it meant a fundamental change in the FRG's foreign policy. As far as I know Bonn expected the visit of a high Polish official on 1 February who was supposed to prepare for negotiations on a substantial credit to be granted by a group of banks and to be secured by the Federal Government. By the way, as far as I know, Lambsdorff's visit was canceled because 3 days before the planned visit the Poles stated their comprehensive wishes. Bonn was irritated because in a way the Poles acted too rashly.

WELT: How do you assess Gierek's position?

Strauss: Mr Gierek sees an extremely gloomy economic future. He does not tackle the problems. The Polish leadership is afraid that as a result of a dramatic worsening of the economic situation an explosive situation will emerge, like in 1970 and 1976. There are apprehensions in Warsaw that the Soviet Union will then pursue a tougher policy and possibly even take power in Poland itself. Catchword: Prague.

WELT: Does aid for Turkey now have precedence for us?

Strauss: Turkey is in a very difficult situation. The Turkish ambassador informed me comprehensively about the economic, social and political situation in his country, including neutralist movements away from the West. He mentioned economic figures which really are alarming. Here the Federal Government in my view has the proper concept. However, it should study where reductions can be made. There are possibilities on several continents and in several countries where funds can be reduced to give Turkey more aid. Of course, Turkey must meet the requirements for a sensible use of these funds.

WELT: In the present situation, what is your idea of the Bonn crisis management which the federal chancellor mentioned in parliament?

Strauss: A new government.

WELT: What would you do if you were chancellor?

Strauss: If I were the head of a new government, my opponents would not be behind me but before me. Helmut Schmidt can only pretend that he is a crisis manager, and that is also why he talks so energetically and even pronounces the phrase "crisis management" almost voluptuously. He likes to talk himself into a state in which he can never be, because his party is not suitable for it.

WELT: Would you be in a better position, Mr Strauss?

Strauss: We would have no problems with our own people in adopting necessary resolutions on an arms gap closure, on the intensification of our defense and on securing energy supplies.

WELT: You pledged CDU/CSU support for the government. What could that be related to specifically?

Strauss: The development of civil defense, meaning the construction of shelters, the elimination of certain weaknesses in the technical equipment of the Bundeswehr; the strengthening of the Bundeswehr in case the allies have to carry out tasks in the Middle East and to that extent are not present in our defense area in Europe.

WELT: Does that also mean no tax reliefs in the next one, two or three years?

Strauss: I stated expressly, with the full consent of Helmut Kohl and Friedrich Zimmermann, that we would be prepared to renounce or postpone the validity of parts or all of our tax program, totaling roughly DM15.6 billion, if it is necessary to strengthen our security. These are the measures the Federal Government could not take without the opposition. In its weakness it could never revoke tax reliefs promised to the citizens for the purpose of enhancing military defense. To do that it definitely needs us.

WELT: Herbert Wehner has applauded your appearance in Bucharest. Are you happy about it?

Strauss (laughing): Then I must have made a mistake.

SCHMIDT, AUSTRALIA'S FRASER DISCUSS WORLD SITUATION

ID052212 Hamburg DPA in German 2133 GMT 5 Feb 80 ID

[Excerpt] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser discussed in Bonn this evening the world political situation created by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and its consequences for the West. A government spokesman announced afterwards that the "very intensive and friendly" exchange of views had been regarded as stimulating and important by both sides and had shown agreement in the two sides' views. Prior to the chancellor's discussion with Fraser, which lasted several hours, the latter had been received by Federal President Karl Carstens.

Observers believe that the Australian head of government emphatically expressed his support for Washington's attitude on the present crisis in the Middle East, as he did earlier to U.S. President Jimmy Carter in Washington and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in London. Fraser is also in favor of moving the planned Moscow Olympics. He has further indicated his country's readiness for greater defense commitments in the Indian Ocean.

NEW BATTLE TANK TO BE PRODUCED JOINTLY WITH FRANCE

ID051344 Hamburg DPA in German 1246 GMT 5 Feb 80 ID

[Text] Paris--Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel and his French counterpart Yvon Bourges signed an agreement on the joint production of a new battle tank to succeed the German Leopard and the French AMX-30 in Paris today. In the final press conference of the French-German summit, French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing praised this agreement as the biggest financial contract between the two countries.

Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt stressed the complete agreement between the two countries. Giscard d'Estaing stressed France and Germany's special responsibility for security and peace. He called upon the nonalined countries not to let themselves be drawn into the conflicts between the two blocs.

Chancellor Schmidt said that the Federal Republic and France do not want to take on a mediating role between the United States and the USSR. He affirmed the loyalty to the Atlantic alliance, although such a commitment is self-evident. The chancellor described the summit as an exchange of views with a happy result. He also announced that the next German-French summit will be held in Bonn in July and will be linked to a state visit to the Federal Republic by President Giscard d'Estaing.

AGREEMENT REACHED WITH FRANCE ON ARIANE EUROPA ROCKET

ID051340 Hamburg DPA German 1100 GMT 5 Feb 80 ID

[Text] Paris--Minister of Research and Technology Volker Hauff and French Minister of Industry Andre Giraud achieved far-reaching agreement today at the French-German summit in Paris on the commercial use of the Ariane Europa rocket, first launched in December. German industry will assume some 16 percent without further state participation, in the joint production of the carrier rocket for purely nonmilitary satellites. Bonn, with DM580 million, has so far financed about 20 percent of the project. In France, which bears 60 percent of the costs, state participation will remain high.

It was also said in Paris that Bonn rejected the French proposal that the European partners in the project should commit themselves to the exclusive use of this carrier rocket for all satellites. Bonn also wants a fair market price for the sale of the rocket, whereas Paris wants to grant new customers special conditions. Each Ariane launching is expected to cost DM40 million.

GOVERNMENT RECALLS AMBASSADOR FROM LIBYA

NC051501 Paris AFP in English 1457 GMT 5 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Feb. 5 (AFP)--France has recalled its ambassador to Libya and has asked Tripoli to recall its envoy here, it was announced today. A French Foreign Ministry communique said Ambassador Charles Malo was being recalled along with all his staff following Monday's storming and burning of the Tripoli Embassy by demonstrators. The communique said that France was demanding the recall of an equal number of Libyan diplomats from Paris. The communique called Libyan authorities' behaviour "unacceptable."

GISCARD, SCHMIDT COMMENT ON SUMMIT

Joint Press Conference

LD051328 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The joint press conference given at the Elysee by Giscard d'Estaing and Helmut Schmidt has just ended. There were simply two joint statements by the president of the republic and the German chancellor, and Valery Giscard d'Estaing stressed in essence the privileged role of France and Federal Germany in face of the international situation:

[Begin Giscard d'Estaing recording] Germany and France--which are among the countries that had suffered most in the last two world conflicts and which have shown their attachment to the cause of peace by establishing between themselves peaceful relations, by participating in the organization of Europe, by making a significant contribution to detente--Germany and France wish to explore together the paths that can allow the reduction of international tensions. In this respect they consider that their attitude must be reciprocated by their interlocutors, and in particular the Soviet Union, which must confirm by concrete gestures the indications it has given of its intention to withdraw its forces that had entered Afghanistan. [end recording]

Here also is a word from the German Chancellor, just a sentence. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt simply said: This has reinforced cooperation between our two states. This summit was need not a routine one--a sentence to conclude this 35th French-German summit. [as heard]

Giscard Statement

NC051530 Paris AFP in English 1521 GMT 5 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Feb. 5 (AFP)--The 35th Franco-German summit conference which ended today had shown the solid entente between the two countries and the important contribution they could make together to security and the search for world peace, French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said.

Speaking at a press conference at the end of his talks with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing said that the summit had been important not only because of the international situation but also because of the decisions which had been taken. Peace and security were complementary objectives which France and Germany intended to pursue, and it was significant that in the current tense situation the two countries were able to express identical viewpoints.

While wishing to explore together ways of reducing international tension France and Germany were still awaiting concrete gestures from others, in particular [word indistinct] by the Soviet Union of its declared intention to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan, President Giscard d'Estaing said. Consultations on finding peace and security would continue, with the examination from next Thursday of the documents for reflection drawn up by the respective foreign ministers. France and Germany considered that European powers had special responsibilities in the fields of security and peace, while "genuinely non-aligned" states should not be dragged into competition between the main power blocs and should make their voices heard.

The president stressed the importance of an agreement signed between the two defence ministers envisaging the joint building of a tank to equip both armies which, considering the expense involved, was one of the largest projects on which France and Germany had co-operated so far. A further agreement making operational the plan for a joint communications satellite, decided at the last summit, should be signed by the end of next month, Mr Giscard d'Estaing said.

He underlined the shared determination to make progress with the European Economic Community (EEC) and seek solutions to problems while respecting existing institutions and the rules established to ensure the life of the Community. The president added that a summary of his talks with Chancellor Schmidt would be sent to Italian Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga, who is current chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers.

European 'Special Responsibilities'

[Excerpts] Giscard and Schmidt not only make the same analysis of the international situation but they are acting as friends. Before saying goodbye to his German guest, Mr Giscard d'Estaing himself summed up the results of these 3 days of fruitful talks with Helmut Schmidt:

[Begin Giscard recording] Up until the present time two great voices have been heard in the world--the voice of the United States of America and the voice of the Soviet Union. Other voices were only expected to express themselves in relation to these. I think that it is very important in these circumstances and hereafter to make it clear to the European powers that they have special responsibilities. It is very important that the Soviet Union know in advance the reactions of the main European or world powers on this or that initiative which it might come to plan. Thus, it is very important to make it known and, moreover, through the diplomatic contacts which we have with the Soviet Union. [sentence as heard] From the beginning of this crisis we have pointed out its limits very precisely. On the other hand, as long as these limits are not exceeded, it is on the contrary legitimate to seek the means and conditions which would allow the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan to come to an end. When one wants to obtain a result, and if this result presupposes that there are exchanges on the analyses and situations, it is clear that dialog should be pursued, and thus this dialog will be pursued. CGT DELEGATES DISCUSS TRIP TO AFGHANISTAN

LD051005 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Jan 80 pp 6, 7 LD

[Jose Fort report: "We Return From Kabul"]

[Text] The CGT delegation consisting of Pierre Gensous, Jean-Claude Laroze and Joseph Jacquet has returned from Kabul. It will be recalled that the CGT Executive Committee decided to send an information-gathering mission to Afghanistan with the particular task of meeting Afghan trade unionists. The delegation stayed in Afghanistan from 20 through 25 January. Monday morning it reported to the CGT Bureau and then to the Executive Committee. It held a press conference at the end of the afternoon.

Just prior to that, the CGT delegates willingly answered L'HUMANITE's questions. Confederation Secretaries Pierre Gensous and Jean-Claude Laroze and Executive Committee member Joseph Jacquet, who is also Rhone-Alpes regional secretary, represent the CGT's diversity of political and ideological attitudes.

What is happening in Kabul? What is the reality? I cannot resist prefacing the interview with the CGT delegation with yesterday's frontpage headline by Francois Luizet in FRANCE-SOIR: "I Return From Kabul." There he saw "Afghan faces burning with hate." He heard "from time to time a shot or a burst of gunfire followed by guttural cries." He confirmed "the Russian order" there and the "17 million colonized Afghans." He took refuge in the Kabul Hotel. And the esthetic Luizet found "ugly, lifeless, young" Russians there.

What is the truth?

Jean-Claude Laroze answers: "My first feeling on arriving in Kabul was of having been misled, deceived. I am head of CGT propaganda and I have to say that I, too, was victim to the pressure which dominates in France. I arrived in Kabul with clear ideas. I believed that I would see street fighting, confrontations between Soviet and Afghan tanks, and military partitioning of the capital. I was told not to take walks for fear of being taken for a Russian. I was deceived. I speak out against the assertions made in the press. In Kabul I met honest journalists with their own sensitivity. But there are others who lie."

Street impressions?

For Pierre Gensous, "We arrived in Kabul still believing that there were clashes between Soviets and Afghans. What did we find? A quiet city going about its business. Soon after arriving we went walking late into the night. Well, I must say that we never felt in any danger. We had been told that the city was being put to fire and the sword. It was quiet. We arrived barely 3 weeks after the upheavals. In fact there are some soldiers in front of public buildings."

Jean-Claude Laroze broke in: "I was in Istanbul recently. The atmosphere there is far more alarming than in Kabul."

"Our impression? Most people seem happy with the changes. Everyone breathes easily."

"How has the Soviet intervention been taken? We questioned several working people. They are in favor. The storekeepers and businessmen are divided.

"But there is one way of testing. We were four whites. Right now there are few tourists. We were sometimes taken for Russians. We never felt threatened or the subject of comment."

For Joseph Jacquet: "We found that things were not as they had been described to us. The streets were teeming with people. The city was peaceful. There was no hostility. While walking alone in the bazaar I was jostled by a storekeeper. A dozen people surrounded him immediately, telling him: 'You have no right to do that. Leave him alone.' I have just come back from Kabul, and I can state that life has been transformed. I must say that the hatred conveyed by the French press reminds me of those dark prewar days."

Jean-Claude Laroze continues: "The prime example of dishonesty is today's FRANCE-SOIR. I do not usually attack journalists, but this is too much. Here is an article published on the very day of the CGT delegation report, an article which is part of an anti-communist, anti-Soviet campaign reminiscent of former times."

Manipulation

"I confess that reading such a piece makes me afraid. Look at what hatred it contains. And the author dares call himself a journalist. I traveled with this man. Do you know that this FRANCE-SOIR 'journalist' entered Afghanistan on a visa as a history and geography teacher. And do you know that he mistook an Aeroflot captain for a Soviet Army general. It would be funny if it were not so serious. Such a journalist does the whole profession a disservice. This is how the French citizens are being misled.

"I must say that this slanderous campaign has one aim: to distract the working people from their problems. We are watching a veritable manipulation of public opinion. Whatever understanding we are to have of Afghan events, we must not let the media run loose on this track.

"Today, Radio Channel 2 was to have let the CGT delegation speak. Despite this arrangement, Channel 2 cancelled the interview. Is that not a demonstration of the intention to hide anything contributing to impartial information."

Thousands Have Disappeared

On Amin's repression, Pierre Gensous Relates: "We met with an International Red Cross delegation. This organization had applied three times to Amin for permission to visit Afghanistan. The last request was on 20 December.

"Amin's reply arrived in Geneva on 3 January. Between 20 December and 3 January came 27 December. On 30 December the first Red Cross members were on the spot. The Red Cross says that the new authorities granted them every facility. The only people actually imprisoned were 18 members of Amin's family and 39 close collaborators in the repression.

"As for those who disappeared--and it is difficult at the present to establish a final list--the government has set up a special central office to deal with all the cases. First estimates for Kabul city alone are 40,000-50,000 reported missing. The Polytechnic Institute alone has 350 missing. The Afghan trade union leaders have given a preliminary list of missing members. Three of the four Afghan trade union delegation members we met have been imprisoned and tortured. We met the three women's organization leaders. All three had been tortured. The organization president, Soraya, had been tortured most terribly, as had Sultan Kajman, now planning minister and Revolutionary Council deputy chairman. And when you think that there was a fiendish plan afoot to wipe out all these people...."

Joseph Jacquet continues: "It would be wrong to minimize the new government's first decisions. The first was to release all the prisoners, including the royal family and relatives. Dictatorships fill prisons. Take Chile. In Afghanistan they are opening freedom's doors. I believe these 6,000 releases are a sign of strength and democratic will. Do you know of many such examples?"

Prospects?

Pierre Gensous assures us: "There are question marks. The government's measures are accepted. The new authorities must now overcome the problem of credibility. The people are in agreement. But they are waiting for this to be carried out. Will the desire for unity bear fruit? First signs are favorable."

Joseph Jacquet concludes: "We wanted to find out, to know, to understand and not to judge. Our comrades there were aware of our approach. We return bearing a message to the French people. Our comrades ask us to help and understand them. We cannot aid the Afghan people by pursuing an anti-Afghan, anti-Soviet campaign. We give the Afghan people our solidarity."

L'HUMANITE CONDEMNS INTERNAL EXILE OF SAKHAROV

LD041107 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 24 Jan 80 pp 1, 10 LD

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "A Serious Difference of Opinion"]

[Text] "We do not give unconditional support to anybody and reserve the right to say no, to the Soviet Union too, each time we think it right to do so.... We do not support anything in advance, and above all not blindly." That is what I wrote just a few days ago on 14 January for the benefit of those who suspected us of intending to aline with Moscow in all circumstances because of our position on Afghanistan.

Unlike our adversaries, who readily aline with Washington against us, we have the annoying habit of taking our decisions ourselves, in complete independence.

That is why we consciously and unhesitatingly condemn the internal exile of Soviet Academician Sakharov.

It is not that we support the political positions and activity of this man, who is generally portrayed here as "the most famous human rights campaigner" while the authorities in his country accuse him of "subversive activities" and complicity with "reactionary circles in imperialist states."

In fact, I do not think that Andrey Sakharov deserves either this extreme honor or this humiliation. A member of the Academy of Sciences at the age of 32, a Stalin prizewinner, a hero of socialist labor, this great physicist received the Nobel Prize in 1975 for other reasons; he had gradually become the adversary of the Soviet Government, against which he leveled severe and frequently unjustified criticism.

You just have to read his books to realize that this eminent scientist is a poor politician. Was it defending human rights to hail the Chilean putsch, as he did, as "a period of revival and consolidation," to support the U.S. war against the Vietnamese people, to urge the U.S. Senate to refuse to grant the USSR most favored nation status and, more generally speaking, to call on the United States to take a "tougher" line toward his country? It is not surprising that this activity brought him a letter in 1977 in which Carter encouraged him.

However, it is worth wondering what reasons--personal and political--led this man to adopt an attitude of total rejection to the extent of gradually isolating himself from his national community. Obviously he is not entirely to blame, although the Soviet authorities gave him almost complete freedom for 10 years to act as spokesman for the dissidents to foreign journalists. It seemed to be when the Soviet Union intervened in Czechoslovakia in 1968 that his criticisms of the regime turned into total opposition. There is good reason to deplore this lone behavior, which was not inevitable, to regret this waste of intelligence and talent and to imagine what he might have become.

Sakharov's removal from Moscow will not eliminate the causes which push a number of intellectuals to enter into conflict with the government. It is probably true, as in all societies, that some of them are social misfits who do not accept the rules of the game. However, it is equally true that the democratic rule should take account of this diversity and not present anybody with the dilemma of accepting everything unconditionally or being rejected by the community.

This is the vast and difficult problem of democracy, which should be a process of continuous creation. In this respect the steps taken against Sakharov, whatever his misdeeds, bear witness to the existence not only of conflicts between Soviet society and some of its members--which is only natural--but also of a persistent desire to settle them by means other than ideological debate.

That is one of the serious differences of opinion recorded in the official texts of the recent meeting between the PCF and CPSU delegations. The commentators who loudly proclaimed the PCF's alinement with Moscow would have done better, had they been honest, to meditate on this passage from George Marchais' speech: "We note that, while it is appropriate to continue an unprecedented effort to boost democracy, some socialist countries place limitations on democracy which we find incomprehensible and which go so far as to replace the vital political and ideological struggle by administrative measures....Therefore, the question of socialist democracy is a major issue for us which must be approached openly and directly, since we differ seriously on this point."

The measure against Sakharov has raised a storm of righteous indignation in the West. In Washington the State Department expressed "the grave concern of all free societies" at the internal exile of a man in the Soviet Union, but to my knowledge it did not raise the least objection when Father Ben Chavis and the "Wilmington 10" were sentenced to 282 years imprisonment following provocation by the Ku Klux Klan. In France the press, radio and television have all been in full voice. Why not? But why is so little said about the crimes of the so-called free world? About Guatemala, for instance, so dear to the United States, where there are "on average five assassinations per day" according to the Christian Democrat leader; about Uruguay, where communist mathematician Jose-Luis Massera has been sentenced to 20 years' hard labor; about Israel, where thousands of people are in prison in the occupied territories; about East Timor, where Indonesian troops have killed 60,000 people. I could continue the list without any trouble.

Almost all commentators present the measure taken against Sakharov as a sign that the Soviet Union wants to end the detente policy. For instance, the French Government sees it as "a worrying sign in the present international situation." There is nothing to justify such a conclusion. If you look at the facts more closely, this is a reversal of roles. It was the Western governments, behind their American leader, which took an increasing number of initiatives which were dangerous to peace, well before the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan or Sakharov's internal exile.

It was the Americans, not the Soviets who first delayed and then indefinitely postponed ratification of the SALT agreements. It was the Americans and NATO which decided to revive the arms race by deploying 600 new nuclear missiles in Europe. It was Western circles which long ago started a campaign against holding the Olympic games in Moscow. These are remarks which must be made in view of Sakharov's internal exile and the campaign it has prompted.

CRAXI INTERVIEWED ON DOMESTIC, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

LD051649 Rome AVANTI in Italian 27-28 Jan 80 pp 1, 2 LD

[Text of Italian Socialist Party (PSI) Secretary Bettino Craxi 26 January interview with the Genoa LAVORO: "PSI's Aim Is To Open the Way to a Long-Term Agreement"]

[Excerpts] [Question] The Christian Democratic Party [DC] has postponed its congress: Has this decision influenced the PSI's stance toward the government in any way?

[Answer] The DC does not need to ask our permission if it considers it opportune to postpone its congress 2 weeks. What it cannot postpone, however, is a clear political reply, which it now owes to almost everybody. The Cossiga government was formed thanks to a responsible attitude on our part. We did not negotiate any deals. We permitted a political truce until the DC Congress. Everyone realized this and agreed with it. To put forward threatening suggestions or even blackmail means violating the rules of the game. In fact the time is drawing near for a political clarification, which cannot be evaded.

[Question] Could you specify the PSI's objectives with regard to the government and the initiatives which it intends to take?

[Answer] The objective which we are setting ourselves is to open the way to a long-term agreement which will give the legislature some breathing space, free it from the present state of disturbing uncertainty and at last restore stability of political leadership to the country's government.

Let the DC tackle courageously and responsibly the political problem before it which is to facilitate creation of a framework of political stability and to cooperate--given its prime responsibility as the party with the relative majority--in defining a program and a policy which can secure the consensus and adherence of all the major national political forces, and chiefly of the leftwing parties. Let it take the initiative of a direct and unprejudiced dialog on the basic domestic and international guidelines. On this basis, once a sufficiently strong degree of unity has been established in the commitment and desire to cooperate, then we could tackle the problem of translating into systematic parliamentary and governmental terms a policy of democratic solidarity and its emergency implementation.

[Question] Let us look at Afghanistan: Is peace really in jeopardy?

[Answer] It is not a local conflict. It is the latest link in the expansionist chain that characterizes developments in Soviet policy. In Southeast Asia the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea depended and still depends on a Soviet airlift. In Africa the USSR is using the Cubans as the British imperialists once used the Gurkhas. This is a dangerous policy which undermines the foundations of detente. Above all we are wondering what is happening in Moscow and who gives the orders in Moscow. [paragraph continues]

We are wondering how it is possible to halt this grave process of intoxication in international relations, which could have terrifying developments. There is a great body in the world that favors peace, and it must manage to prevail by reestablishing the conditions of security, balance and dialog.

[Question] But why is this break in detente taking place precisely in Afghanistan?

[Answer] It is Afghanistan's turn to experience--in a much bloodthirstier manner--what other countries, traditionally friends of the USSR, have had to experience. Back in 1919, in a letter addressed to the emir of Afghanistan, Lenin saluted that country as "a flourishing nation, the only independent Muslim state in the world. Fate," Lenin wrote, "sets for the Afghan people the great historical role of uniting around themselves the enslaved Muslim peoples and showing them the path to independence and freedom." Fate has decided that the Muslim peoples should cease to be slaves of, but that Afghanistan should lose its independence at the hands of Lenin's heirs. The USSR wants to annex a country and approach the oil region. The results of the undertaking are uncertain.

[Question] You said that we do not know who is in charge in Moscow. What do you mean by that?

[Answer] Jean Paul Sartre once wrote that the Soviet Government is "a thing." Soviet political society hides from the eyes of the world. In various conversations that I have had, some with Eastern bloc representatives, I have had portrayed to me the picture of a composite government--on the one hand, a bureaucratic and gerontocratic oligarchy, and on the other hand a powerful military force--the whole imbued with a nationalist spirit with ancient roots. This would explain the domestic rigidity, of which the Sakharov case is the latest shameful episode, and the prevalence of the military approach in international actions.

[Question] In your opinion, what is happening in the United States?

[Answer] Carter is naturally inclining toward exploiting the international crisis for electoral ends. This means that we have months of tension ahead. I do not approve of the decision to suspend ratification of the SALT-II nuclear treaty, even if Carter lacked the majority to achieve it. There is no connection between the issue of the limits on strategic nuclear weapons to which the major nuclear powers must adhere and the developments in the Afghan crisis. The danger is of reopening the way to an uncontrolled resumption of nuclear proliferation. There is an active role and function which Europe--and within Europe, our country--must perform.

PCI'S INGRAO COMMENTS ON INTERNAL PARTY DEBATE ON USSR

LD041155 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 24 Jan 80 pp 1, 18 LD

[Unattributed report: "Ingrao's Interview with RINASCITA on Afghanistan]

[Text] Rome--The extreme gravity of the international political situation, particularly since the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, poses dramatic and decisive problems for all Italian and European progressive forces; internationalism and the peace and detente policy are at stake.

This week's RINASCITA carries a lengthy interview with Pietro Ingrao. "First," he says, "we must be able to appreciate the full significance of the current debate within the party and come to terms fully with the objections, reservations and questions. Issues which invoke fundamental aspects of our strategy are at stake." Therefore, Ingrao points out, we must make our initiative equal to the solemn words which we use. "But people will not mobilize unless they grasp the underlying ideological and practical reasons for our attitude.... Therefore there must be open and thorough discussion among other things, on what has happened in Afghanistan."

And when the PCI condemns the USSR's intervention, invoking considerations of principle, it is not simply being "moralistic," but is invoking "basic requirements of our time, which are extremely specific. If the logic of reprisals and military interventions prevails in the world, the crazy rush toward a nuclear confrontation will accelerate frighteningly."

Therefore we must overcome all abstractness and tackle the essence of the matter: "There are some comrades," Ingrao points out, "who reason as follows: 'The world is divided into two camps; we cannot be neutral; we must aline; even though we may not like it, we are with the socialist countries' camp.' Well, my first objection is that this approach fails to take the real situation into account. It seems to be a realistic and specific attitude, but it is in fact oversimplified... It overlooks a whole range of forces which identify neither with the United States nor with the USSR. Let us remember that the detente process and an entirely new growth process within the world workers and progressive movement developed when the scheme had been left behind both in theory and in practice."

Since that time--we are talking about 20-25 years ago--we have progressed a great deal. "The scope of the agents acting in the international arena has become much more diversified and complicated. Behind these new institutional and political situations lie therough social and material changes, alterations in relations and balances of forces affecting the very conditions for everyday industrial civilization: energy, strategic raw materials, manpower, consumption. The 'two camps' scheme overlooks and eliminates this major innovation, with which we must come to terms." Furthermore, this scheme, "precisely because it simplifies the real situation, fails to reveal the insidious and systematic ways in which imperialist groups and U.S. extremist currents are reacting to world innovations... Unless we carry out this specific and systematic analysis, we will miss the essential point and fail to see the resistance being met by the imperialist currents and therefore the forces which we can address."

But, RINASCITA points out, it is precisely as a result of this imperialist recovery that we are seeing the emergence of the positions of those who say that the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan must be understood and justified as a response to the new phase of U.S. aggressiveness....

"Behind this stance," Ingrao replies, "is the idea that the answer lies in the use of force, and this is a metaphor for the military balance of forces. I do not want to recall now the desperate logic behind such a response: wars, perhaps the war, a nuclear confrontation....

"But is this action by a small force for the sake of the military machine correct and perceptive? I could be mistaken, but it seems to me that the reasoning regarding the balance of forces in this world of ours, which is so full of interconnections, has become much more complicated. And strategists explain to us that there are types of damage inflicted on an enemy which threaten to backfire on whoever inflicted them. Today even a major power, in some fields and for certain things, 'depends' on minor powers and must take them into account."

This raises the issue of internationalism. What would happen if the image of the USSR linked to a detente policy were to be entirely obscured? This would be damaging not only to the USSR. "In our country," Ingrao says, "we talk a great deal about the youth crisis, of young people's relationship with the prospect of socialism. I confess that I am unable to explain--and have never had explained to me--the story of Amin, of how he became a 'CIA agent,' of his assassins and conspiracies. I do know that I was late to realize Pol Pot's conspiracies and massacres. And I believe that something must be done to prevent young people from believing that the path of socialism depends on such things. I criticize the 'two camps' theory partly because it can lead to the conclusion that one single path exists--the same for everyone. This eliminates our entire strategy and so many possibilities."

The critique of the "two camps" theory leads to the following question: Is bipolarity finished?

"One cannot ignore how essential bipolar relations are and will be in the future for defending peace and tackling the world's unresolved problems. What seems to me to be in a state of crisis is the strategy which saw the world's life organized into two major areas..."The world has become, is becoming, multipolar and it can no longer be governed by two-way negotiations and bargaining. The monetary chaos mirrors this fact. In this framework I confess that I am not convinced that the automatic application of Soviet-type state, social and poltical models to the situations of certain countries liberated from colonialism and now the USSR's allies is a satisfactory answer to the entirely unprecedented problems facing those countries."

Internationalsim and the battle for peace are therefore becoming a major, arduous undertaking, demanding an extraordinary ability to comprehend the complexity of the new process and a thoroughly renewed political culture. But is democracy not in danger of withering away in view of the crisis of the old orders and the emergence of new problems?

There is, Ingrao replies, the problem of "how a development of democracy can proceed, how it can bring about structural changes without disintegrating or resulting in authoritarian leadership. However, we have our whole heritage and experience behind us, and they can play their part and mobilize forces and masses of people. Therefore, it is a matter of taking an initiative in a great spirit of truth with respect to these forces, taking into account the innovations which, for instance, are present in the Catholic world and the social democratic forces, without overlooking the differences and without thought of being able to surmount them by an act of will."

RINASCITA'S last question concerns Eurocommunism: Is it true that it is in a state of crisis? Is this the significance of the differing stances adopted by the PCI and PCF on Afghanistan?

"Eurocommunism," Ingrao replies, "is something more ambitious (and more difficult) than the underhand agreement spoken of by the bourgeois press and leaders. Nor can it be dismissed as a diplomatic understanding among certain communist parties. It is a long-term strategy which has taken its first steps: There are and will continue to be moments of difficulty and even tensions."

GIUSEPPE BOFFA ON U.S. INTERNAL, FOREIGN POLICY CRISES

LD041537 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 1 Feb 80 pp 1, 16 LD

[Giuseppe Boffa commentary: "Detente Crisis Did Not Start in Kabul"]

[Text] In the current discussions on the new international tension, we are again hearing crusadelike tones, Manichaean commands for a drastic choice of camp. We are not naive enough to be unaware that these are the expressions of petty domestic political concerns--petty at least compared to the tragedies possibly facing our country. We believe what we need now more than ever are objective analyses capable of helping us promote considered political approaches. We have already done so for the USSR. But we must also do so for the other side.

U.S. Options

Indeed, to claim that it was Afghanistan which brought about the recent U.S. foreign policy options announced by President Carter and now loudly proclaimed by Congress in Washington is unfounded. Of course the Soviet armed intervention provided a very useful opportunity for the most extremist tendencies, which had been emerging with growing insistence in U.S. leadership circles, to impose their own ideas: This is a further reason for deprecating and censuring that action. [paragraph continues]

But the new attitudes which have prevailed in America have very different origins and other causes.

Back in 1978 a reluctant Europe saw itself dragged by the United States into decreeing an automatic annual increase in military spending within NATO. The quest for new bases in the Indian Ocean and the fleeet's movements in those waters had, after all, begun some time before the Afghan crisis despite prolonged efforts by the United Nations and the seabord countries, which this year should have seen major developments in aiding a demilitarization of the region. Not just since yesterday, but for several years pressure has recurrently been brought to bear on making NATO extend its field of action outside Europe. Similarly the tendency to play the famous "China card"--a tendency, for that matter, publicly encouraged by some Beijing leaders--dates back further than just a few days.

The establishment of the so-called "quick strike" force was also decided a long time before these latest events. It was decided upon not in order to deal with an outside threat, as is now being asserted, but on the contrary to curb the indigenous movements for change occurring in a number of countries, starting of course with the countries with greater or lesser control over Mideast oil. This initiative became a system only in the ambiguous and dangerous "Carter doctrine."

The "Persian Gulf region"--itself a somewhat imprecise term--has been identified as an area of "vital concern" to the United States, where there will be recourse "even to the use of armed force" in the event of an "outside" threat. Outside? Just a few hours after Carter spoke, one of his closest aides hastened to announce that the same principle applies also in the case of "internal subversion." We all know how elastic the interpretation of these words can be. Let us not forget that plans of this kind have been evoked in the past even during crises caused by the recurring oil price hikes and that until a few weeks ago there was talk of their application even to Iran. One can therefore see where the assertion of such a "doctrine" could lead.

Last, there is the SALT II affair. There is no need to recall how much opposition there was to this treaty in Washington from the moment it was signed. Its opponents' continued pressure has now paid off. But the most troubling point is not just the decision to shelve its ratification indefinitely. Much more serious is Carter's subsequent announcement that the United States intends to preserve its world military supremacy at all costs. In this instance, as Raniero La Valle has already correctly pointed out, we are witnessing the negation of the very principle which made possible the strategic arms limiation accords, that is the principle of "equal [equale] security" for both sides or the essential parity of their military strength--a principle which no less than three U.S. Presidents have underwritten in international documents, the last of the three being Carter himself a few months ago in Vienna.

Missiles in Europe

The U.S. President's latest formulations also throw revealing light on the recent decision to deploy the new missiles in Europe and justify our suspicion that the intention was not at all to reestablish a mutual balance, but rather to create a unilateral superiority on the European continent as well. This being the case, one cannot take seriously Carter's assertion that his decisions stemmed from the realization that Breshnev was "lying" to him. Unfortunately, the mutual lack of trust between the leaders of the two major powers is all too evident and, for that matter, has been publicly expressed by them both, but it is a manifestation of the growing tension and not its cause.

It has already been noted how the present phase of cold war stemmed from the difficulty experienced by the two blocs, and especially the two hegemonic powers, in maintaining their cohesion in a phase of growing international cooperation. We have seen on other occasions how this applies also to the USSR, its internal life and its alliances.

But this analysis certainly applies to no less a degree to the United States: It is in the national crisis and in its foreign relations that the real reason for the approaches chosen by Carter lies.

First and foremost, the internal crisis. This has not been soley an economic crisis, though the economic aspects have been the ones most discussed, but also a political and even an ideological crisis. One must always remember that the United States was brought to detente precisely by its defeat in Vietnam--a defeat felt painfully by the majority of the public as a "decline" in prestige and power. The first answer which Carter sought was an ideological one, in his famous human rights campaign which, however, by no means yielded only successes for the United States. A more explicit nationalism therefore prevails today. The old formula of "we are and must remain the world's first nation" suddenly seems to be becoming the satisfactory solution to every problem and difficulty. Is this not the so-called "end of the Vietnam complex?"

There is also the crisis in its relations with its allies. Of course, in this field public manifestations are always less spectacular. Anyone who has closely followed international affairs, however, knows how ill-concealed mistrust and latent commercial and financial conflicts have spread. It is amazing that Carter announces that an area as "vital" to U.S. interests which is even more so for Europe and Japan and then asserts his right to intervene there even when (the recent Iranian crisis has shown that this is not an abstract hypothesis) his traditional allies might not be in agreement at all.

But, above all--and this is the decisive aspect--there is the crisis in relations between America and the rest of a world "in turmoil" (in Kissinger's words.) The oil problem is only the most obvious aspect of a more general state of tension. The clash with Khomeyni's Iran, the inability to extend in the Middle East the partial success of the Begin-As-Sadat agreement, the persistent difficulties with several African countries and the revolts in Latin America are all different aspects of the same phenomenon. Of course this phenomenon did not appear today, but when America, the world's wealthiest country, showed itself to be incapable of giving any substantial aid to the emerging peoples' aspirations to development and progress.

A further observation should be made. The latest thrust toward cold war is coming above all from the principal powers, from their crises and from their difficulties. Hence their very dangerous nature. But they are already damaging too many states and peoples, which can now make their voice heard much better than 30 years ago. Therefore it is not futile to fight tenanciously for a resumption of the detente process.

FOREIGN DELEGATIONS BANNED FROM PEOPLE'S STRUGGLE MEETING

LD042354 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 4 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The Portuguese Foreign and International Administration ministries in a statement tonight explained why the government had decided to ban foreign delegations from a 4-day international meeting of peoples in struggle, due to be held in Lisbon this coming Thursday.

It said the government decision was based on the fact that--quote--the majority of the delegations invited to attend the meeting are organizations that are waging an armed struggle and using violence against the institutions and the legitimate governments of democratic countries friendly to Portugal--unquote.

As far as this radio could find out, the Zimbabwe Rhodesia Patriotic Front, ETA, POLISARIO and the Chilean Government of the Revolutionary Left were among those invited to send delegates to the Lisbon meeting.

CABINET DECIDED TO CUT SPENDING ON PUBLIC DISPLAYS

LD051234 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1100 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Text] We have received the following official note from the prime minister's office:

Considering that the country's grave economic and financial situation makes imperative a serious effort to curb public expenditure in demonstrations or commemorations of a merely festive nature; further considering, for the same reason, the urgency of channeling available public money to priority national needs; also considering that all the anniversaries seen as justifying festive celebrations can very well be duly marked without this necessarily entailing public expenditure; and finally taking into account that the restrictions hereby determined must on no account be allowed to affect Portugal's international image and prestige, the Council of Ministers, having met on 26 January 1980, has decided that:

1. Any public expenditure from the general state budget or from the budgets of autonomous bodies and state-owned enterprises to finance any festivities or celebrations planned for 1980 such as national, international or world days will be considered on a case-by-case basis without prejudice to marking the said dates with public acts or declarations not entailing the spending of public money.

2. Ways and means will be considered for reducing the expenditure initially envisaged for the celebrations of 10 June and 25 April without detriment to the due emphasis and dignity which should characterize the celebration of these two anniversaries.

3. Public expenditure on preparations for the first congress of the Portuguese communities and for the celebrations of the 400th anniversary of the death of the poet Camoes is hereby suspended pending a final decision by the Assembly of the Republic on the legislation on the two aforesaid initiatives whose ratification is pending.

4. Each minister is to take appropriate steps within his ministry with a view to implementing the stipulations of the above paragraphs.

LEFTISTS TAKE OVER EMBASSY IN SAN SALVADOR

Seven Hostages Released

LD061040 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 6 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The 12 hostages in the Spanish Embassy in San Salvador, including the ambassador, Victor Sanchez-Mesas y Juste, have had a peaceful night, according to reports from San Salvador.

The Salvador Government junta declared during the night that the demands of the leftists who have taken over the embassy constitute blackmail and a violation of human rights. It also said that if the prisoners they are referring to come under the common courts, the junta has nothing to do with securing their release.

Meanwhile in Madrid, high-level officials at the Foreign Ministry and the Office of Diplomatic Information began a working meeting first thing this morning to study the situation in the Spanish Embassy.

Throughout the night staff at the ministry have kept in contact with El Salvador, trying to find a peaceful solution to the occupation of the Spanish Embassy. It has also been reported that the El Salvador diplomatic representatives in Madrid have not been called to the Foreign Ministry and are not involved in the conflict as the contacts are being maintained directly between the foreign ministries of the two countries. El Salvador does not currently have an ambassador in Spain, as the former ambassador, Luis Roberto Flores, left in December.

We have just received the following dispatch, datelined San Salvador:

Of the 14 hostages in the Spanish Embassy in San Salvador occupied since midday yesterday, Tuesday, by members of the 28 February People's Leagues, 7 have so far been released by the occupiers, EFE was told this morning, Wednesday, by a spokesman for the leftwing group.

IRAQI EMBASSY DENIES RUMORS OF TURKOMAN DEATH SENTENCES

TA051624 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1555 GMT 5 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 4 Feb (AA)--The press counselor of the Iraqi Embassy in Ankara has denied reports appearing in certain Turkish dailies and news agency bulletins that 5 Turkomans with Iraqi citizenship had been sentenced to death in the Kirkuk region.

The statement from the press counselor also described as "groundless" certain press reports of alleged "oppression" by the government of certain citizens of the Kirkuk region. The "chauvinist propaganda based on no official sources" had been purposely accelerated in recent weeks, the counselor's statement claimed. It noted all citizens of Iraq were equal before the law regardless of sect or race.

DEMIREL SAYS DEFENSE WILL ALWAYS HAVE PRIORITY

TA051323 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1300 GMT 5 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Speaking after the briefing of the Council of Ministers members at the office of the chief of the General Staff, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said that Turkey's defense will always have priority and that nothing will be spared to insure it. Demirel, the chief of the General Staff, cabinet members, the air, ground and navy commanders, the gendarme commander and the National Security Council secretary general attended the briefing which lasted from 0930 to 1330.

On leaving the meeting, Demirel said: We reviewed Turkey's defense needs. Turkey's defense will always have priority. Our nation and state have always attached more importance to Turkey's defense than anything else, and this will continue to be the case. The valuable members of our armed forces who serve in all corners of the country and all the members of our lofty nation should know that Turkey will never spare anything to insure its defense.

AYDINLIK SCORES ECEVIT, SEES SOVIET THREAT

NC040856 Istanbul AYDINLIK in Turkish 1 Feb 80 pp 1, 7 NC

[Article by Oral Calislar: "Ecevit's Petty Policies"]

[Excerpts] Ecevit is at the zenith of irresponsibility. His actions run counter to the needs of our country. Judging by his attitude toward recent happenings, we see that he has dissociated himself from the future of our country.

As the threat to our region increases, so does Ecevit's irresponsibility. Terrorist acts and aims are strongly inciting the people to a civil war. Moscow audaciously instructs its forces in our country to increase their subversive activities, while the Republican People's Party leader is almost urging the leaders of the pro-Moscow organizations in Turkey to "carry on their acts of agitation."

Undoubtedly, the economic burdens imposed on the people by the Demirel government are totally unacceptable. We must struggle against these burdens. We must strongly oppose the policy of encouraging ill-gotten gains. We would be glad if Ecevit acted likewise. But instead, he is advancing arguments that cannot undergo serious analysis. He is saying that the Demirel government is trying to introduce a pro-American fascist dictatorship in Turkey.

Ecevit is either insincere or else has shut his eyes to realities. The current international events have absolutely no bearing on the establishment of pro-American dictatorships. Even those set up earlier are now crumbling. [paragraph continues]

The revolutionary waves set in motion by the peoples of the world are completely destroying such dictatorships. Even Carter has ceased to support them. The United States is trying to preserve what it has. Therefore, new pro-American dictatorships are mere illusions.

The argument concerning new pro-American dictatorships stems from Moscow. The Soviet Union advances such an argument in order to cover up its own aggressiveness. The allegation, being propagated so strongly by the pro-Moscow journalists nowadays, that Turkey is a pawn of the United States is the outcome of such intentions.

The danger confronting Turkey is no different from the danger confronting Yugoslavia, Romania, Pakistan or Iran. Tito's request for assurances from the United States is well-founded. As a realistic leader, he realizes that the clouds of danger hovering over his country come from the Soviet Union. He is, therefore, trying to activate all the positive factors that will help to safeguard his country's independence.

Ecevit's arguments do not tally with reality. They usher no solution to the economic issues. Has he any suggestions to make against black marketeering? Is he in favor of a general mobilization concerning the exploitation of our national resources? No, Ecevit is not concerned with such matters. Like the small and irresponsible leftist groups, he sends his love to Moscow's subversiveness. Such a policy will further belittle Ecevit and the Republican People's Party. For a vast majority of our nation has begun to realize that the threat comes from the Soviet Union. It wants peace and unity. If the Republican People's Party continues to act contrary to the wishes and needs of the people, it will continue to lose the remaining segments of its popularity.

ANATOLIA REPORTS 'ACTION' BY 4,000 ANTBIRLIK WORKERS

TA021727 Ankara ANATOLIA in French 1610 GMT 2 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Antalya, 2 Feb (AA)--The action of the 4,000 workers in ANTBIRLIK [Antalya Agricultural Sales Cooperatives Union] is continuing today. The workers started their action yesterday, to protest the annulment of the labor contracts of four of their colleagues. The workers also claim that the new ANTBIRLIK administration hired 36 "militants, claiming that they would be responsible for civil defense." The security forces have surrounded the building that houses the ANTBIRLIK Directorate General and are calling on the workers to stop their action.

Security Forces End Occupation

TA021708 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 2 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The security forces have put an end to the occupation of the ANTBIRLIK Directorate General building in Antalya by some 200 [as heard] workers which began yesterday. The security forces were given the order to evacuate the building at 1400, after the ANTBIRLIK officials and the leaders of SOSYAL-IS [Social Workers Union], Gida Is [Turkish Food Industry Workers' Union] and Tekstil is [Textile Workers Union] unions, all affiliated to DISK [Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions], failed to agree in their negotiations. The workers smashed most of the windows of the building and damaged furniture during the security forces' operation. The workers then surrendered to the security forces and were taken to the security directorate for interrogation.

Following the incidents, ANTBIRLIK Director General Seref Topuz issued a written statement saying that democratic rights and freedoms will be discussed within a legal framework at the negotiating table not through illegal actions. He added that the incident, which had created great losses to the country's economy, was a plot.

EEC PLEASED WITH TURKEY'S DESIRE TO REVIVE RELATIONS

TA051723 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 5 Feb 80 TA

[Text] A statement issued following the first meeting of the Turkey-EEC Association Council held in Brussels says that the EEC will do whatever it can to help Turkey overcome its economic difficulties. The Association Council met for the first time since 1976 in Brussels at 1500 Turkish time today. Our correspondent Selma Berksoy reports from Brussels that the EEC ministerial council also completed part of its meetings today.

In a speech at the Turkey-EEC Association Council meeting today, Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen said that Turkey wanted to revive its relations with the Community and to establish the basic principles to achieve that. Commenting on international developments, the foreign minister stressed the importance of Turkey's strategic position and said that the country needed military and economic aid. He pointed out Turkey's increasing economic difficulties, particularly following the oil crises. Erkmen noted that Turkey's final target was to become a full EEC member. He said that more advanced steps must be taken regarding customs unity and regarding agricultural and social rights. He added that negotiations must start immediately to activate the fourth financial protocol.

Addressing the Turkey-EEC Association Council meeting later, Italian Foreign [as heard] Minister Attilio Ruffini, who is also the chairman of the EEC ministerial council for the present term, expressed the EEC's pleasure over Turkey's steps to revive its relations with the Community. A statement issued after the Association Council's first meeting says that the Community will do whatever it can to help Turkey overcome its economic difficulties. The statement says that the Association Council decided to continue with the dialog at the ministerial level, stressing that the dialog is important politically as well. The statement then confirms the parties' loyalty to the principles of democracy, peace and independence--the principles of the Ankara agreement.

The Turkey-EEC Association Council is expected to meet again in Brussels at about this time.

INDEPENDENCE PARTY ASKED TO FORM GOVERNMENT

WA051939 London REUTER in English 1840 GMT 5 Feb 80 WA

[Text] Reykjavik, Feb 5, REUTER--President Krisjan Eldjarn today asked the rebel deputy leader of Iceland's Independence Party to form a new government and fill a political vacuum left by inconclusive general elections last December.

Gunnar Thoroddsen told reporters after meeting the president that he expected to form a coalition government by the end of this week. A veteral politician, Mr Thoroddsen claims the support of 31 of the 60 members of the Althing (parliament), mainly from the Centrist Progressive Party and the Communists.

His own Independence Party has declared him a rebel and its leader, Gein Hallgrimsson, has said the move sabotages his own efforts to form an all-party government. The party is expected to go into opposition.

Mr Thoroddsen has been a stalwart of the rightist Independence Party for several decades but never achieved the leadership. He has led a minority faction within the party supported by industrialists.

FRASER WARNS OF RENEWED TENSION IN SOUTHEAST ASIA

OW051607 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 1230 GMT 5 Feb 80 OW

[Text] The prime minister, Mr Fraser, has warned of a danger of fresh fighting in Southeast Asia if the Soviet Union tries to divert attention from its actions in Afghanistan. Mr Fraser was speaking in London after talks on the issue with his British counterpart, Mrs Thatcher, whose views on the matter, he said, were almost identical with Australia's.

Mr Fraser said his government was ready to discuss closer defense cooperation and aid with Australia's traditional allies in Southeast Asia as part of a regional response to the Soviet threat. He said a greater degree of vigilance was necessary to secure the area's continued safety. Mr Fraser added that Australia needed to be very concerned about the concentration of 22 Vietnamese divisions in Kampuchea and reports of Vietnamese troop movements near the Thai border.

Mr Fraser and Mrs Thatcher have again endorsed the move for a boycott of the Moscow Olympics with the Australian leader declaring that any country sending athletes to Russia would, in Soviet terms, be endorsing Moscow's foreign policy including the Afghanistan invasion.

Mr Fraser leaves Britain today for separate talks with the West German chancellor, Mr Schmidt, and France's President Giscard d'Estaing.

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL MEETS IN VIENNA, ISSUES STATEMENT

AU061328 Vienna KURIER in German 6 Feb 80 p 3 AU

[KURIER dispatch: "Socialist Summit Began in Vienna--East-West Dialog Suffered a Backlash of Years!"]

[Text] Under the cloud of the Afghanistan crisis, socialist party leaders from 25 countries and four continents started their deliberations in Vienna on Tuesday [5 Feb] on what has become of the policy of detente in Europe. After the first few hours of discussion, former Finnish Prime Minister Kalevi Sorsa, of all people (his country has a special relationship of friendship with the Soviet Union), stated: "We need at least 3 to 4 years to regain our point of departure--and this is a rather optimistic estimate."

The 70-odd delegates, among them numerous acting and former European prime ministers, agreed in their denunciation of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, just as in their avowal that the collapsed East-West dialog must be renewed as quickly as possible. The majority of the socialist leaders present seemed to take the view that detente is indeed divisible: One must negotiate with the Soviet Union in any field where positive chances exist--even if there are hotbeds of crisis in other parts of the world.

During the discussions at the Vienna Hilton Hotel, former Dutch Prime Minister Den Uyl even suggested sending a Socialist International delegation to Moscow to urge a withdrawal of the Russian troops from Afghanistan. The dialog with the Kremlin must not be permitted to be interrupted, he said.

There was disagreement among the assembled party chiefs on an Olympic boycott. The meeting chairman and president of the Socialist International, Willy Brandt, said that the participants would inform each other but not attempt to formulate a decision.

The Vienna talks are scheduled to last until Wednesday afternoon.

Statement Scores Soviets

LD061859 Hamburg DPA in German 1534 GMT 6 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Vienna--At the end of its 2-day conference of party leaders in Vienna, the Socialist International called today for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan and also for the utilization of all possibilities for the continuation of East-West contacts. The statement says: "The Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan has violated both international law and the sovereignty and right to self-determination of this country. The Socialist International condemns the intervention by Soviet Armed Forces in Afghanistan and calls upon the Soviet Union to withdraw all its troops from this country."

The document also stresses that the process of detente has progressively deteriorated. But the achievements of detente must not be endangered, because there is no reasonable alternative to detente. The Socialist International therefore regards it as important that all possibilities for bilateral and multilateral talks be taken advantage of and the preparations for the Madrid followup conference to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe be continued.

The USSR's proposals for a European conference on energy questions must also be examined as soon as possible and new possibilities for negotiations found in order to stop the deployment of new nuclear weapons in Europe. The Vienna troop reduction talks should be speeded up and every effort made to start the negotiations on a third treaty on the limitation of strategic arms (SALT III) as soon as possible.

In its statement, the Socialist International expresses deep concern at the "dangerous escalation of detente [as received], the intensification of the arms race, the rivalries between the superpowers and the increasing use of force in international relations." It appears that the world is in danger of arming itself to death.

There are no plans to send an International delegation to Moscow, according to the organization's leadership. The International is not taking on any illusory mediating role. The document published today states that the member parties should use every opportunity for contacts in order to promote the continuation of the policy of detente, improvement of relations between the United States and the USSR and the attainment of concrete results in negotiations on arms control and disarmament.

With regard to Afghanistan, the International's leadership states that it could well be of interest to know, as far as opinion-forming in the West is concerned, when anything happens there--perhaps a thinning of the troops--and how the USSR envisages the gradual reestablishment of the country's sovereignty. "Brezhnev must be taken at his word," it is stressed.

The International's statement also mentions the violation of human rights. Many democratic socialists in South America have lost their lives in the fight for human rights and in the USSR, the harrassment of Andrey Sakharov is a clear example of the constant persecution of those who express divergent opinions in communist countries. In its statement, the International also calls for the release of the U.S. hostages in Tehran.

MEDITERRANEAN NONALINED MEETING OPENS IN MALTA

LD051418 Algiers APS in English 1220 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Valetta, 5/2/80 (APS)--The meeting of the non-aligned member-countries of the Mediterranean region opened Monday in the Maltese capital Valletta.

Though informal, this meeting convened on the base of the Sixth Non-Aligned Summit's recommendations will have as a goal the promotion of cooperation and mutual understanding about international problems between the Mediterranean non-aligned countries.

Participants will study means and ways to keep out of the conflicts between superpowers in the Mediterranean zone.

In his opening speech, Malta's secretary for foreign affairs, Maurice Abela, recalled the Mediterranean non-aligned countries' contribution to the various phases of the European conference since Geneva until Helsinki and Belgrade.

He expressed his hope that this meeting will be fruitful, stressing inter-relation of security in Europe and in the Mediterranean region, with all its conflictual situations and problems, which have a direct influence on the general situation in the world.

GOVERNMENT LEADERS, PRESS ASSESS PARIS SUMMIT

Government Statement

LD061642 Hamburg DPA in German 1536 GMT 6 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Government today stressed the special importance of the German-French summit statement for the internal unity of the whole Western alliance. During a cabinet meeting, which lasted several hours and was devoted almost entirely to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's Paris meeting with President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the view that Bonn had to make a choice between Paris and Washington was rejected as "absurd."

After the cabinet meeting, Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling stressed to the press that in a telephone call to U.S. President Jimmy Carter late yesterday evening, Schmidt apparently gained the impression that the German-French statement had met with a "very good" response in Washington.

According to Boelling, Genscher pointed out that the dangers of an escalation were openly stated in the joint statement and that it was clearly apparent from this document that its authors assessed the existing tensions with complete clarity and did not exclude the possibility of such tensions increasing. The wording of the document, Boelling said, was clear and definite. Thus, the occasionally expressed suspicion that Europeans could come to accept the situation resulting from Moscow's intervention in Afghanistan was automatically put to rest. France and the Federal Republic had demonstrated several times in the document their loyalty to the NATO alliance and all its partners.

Chancellor Schmidt Interviewed

DW061125 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2130 GMT 5 Feb 80 DW

[Reporter Wickert interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt; place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, this summit, which was extremely important, ended in a German-French statement on a world political issue. The statement has a special Atlantic touch, one would say, but it also says simultaneously that the European powers must now bear special responsibility. Does it mean that they must fill part of the role that has been carried out so far by the United States?

[Answer] No, I believe that would be too one-sided an interpretation. You are right that this statement stresses very strongly--for France as well as for Germany--our adherence to the Atlantic alliance and our solidarity with the United States. It stresses equally plainly our condemnation of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. It makes it clear that a point has been reached that is not tolerable any longer.

Third, this statement makes it clear that both of us, the French and the Germans, view the present world situation very much alike, with the same eyes, so to speak. This also includes the fact that naturally both of us are interested in seeing that the tensions that have arisen in the world do not increase unnecessarily and that they do not involve Europe unnecessarily.

We have common European interests. By the way, that is realized very clearly by our other alliance partners in the North Atlantic alliance. Nowhere in life is solidarity a one-way street--not within an alliance, not within the European Community and, by the way, not between France and Germany. We are very close to each other, but when we talk to each other for 2 or 3 days, there are also clearly different interests on individual points that will be achieved. That is the way it is between 2 states; that is the way it is between 15 states; that is the way it is between 9 states.

[Question] The consultations will certainly lead to the result that the European powers must live up more to their responsibility. Does it mean that the special kind of co-operation calls for more consultations?

[Answer] Actually in the community of Western states--if I may use that as a main term for the North Atlantic alliance, for NATO, for the European Community, and in some way or other Japan also belongs to it--consultations in this community of Western states presently are certainly particularly close, closer than in quieter times.

[Question] Could the Federal Republic also play a military role?

[Answer] That depends more on the region you have in mind. We have a clear military mission that has been defined by the alliance for more than 25 years; we must make a clearly defined defense contribution in Central Europe. It is possible that the tasks of the Bundeswehr will be changed there in the course of time, that it will obtain a different emphasis, that it will have to adapt to certain changes that may take place on the part of one or the other alliance partner because of problems in other regions and because of certain changes of priorities on his part. That cannot be ignored at the present time. I would like to reject once more the idea voiced by some rash German politicians and commentators that German soldiers might appear in the Persian Gulf. That would not be in accord with the idea of the 15 governments representing the 15 states of the North Atlantic alliance, nor would it be in agreement with the German Basic Law.

Further Schmidt Interview

DW061200 Bonn ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 5 Feb 80 DW

[Peter Scholl-Latour interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Paris--recorded]

[Text] [Question] It was said in today's German-French communique that detente could suffer if the Soviet Union does not remove its troops from Afghanistan. Well, no sensible person expects the Soviet Union to withdraw from Afghanistan in the foreseeable future. In this case isn't detente, the indispensability of detente, obsolete and isn't a certain fetishism linked to this continual clinging to the term "detente"? Shouldn't we rather return to the term "containment", which has no aggressive meaning and which can very well be applied to the Berlin situation where a certain containment is also necessary?

[Answer] The connotations of the terms "containment" and "detente" need not be mutually exclusive. For myself, I would not like to discard the term "detente", but I am very much concerned about one thing in this connection. Detente necessarily presupposes several prerequisites, such as the condition that both parties must want detente. If one does not want it, there will be no detente. There is, for example, the objective condition that the basis of legality must not be abandoned. If one party violates the law, detente is impossible--if it violates international law, for example.

Third, and I consider this most important, detente presupposes that one party is not much more powerful than the other, who would then fear being overpowered one day. In other words, detente presupposes a balance, particularly a balance of military factors. The concept existing in Nixon's and Brezhnev's time, and later on in Jimmy Carter's and Brezhnev's time, the concept behind the SALT negotiations--SALT I and SALT II--was balance of nuclear-strategic forces on both sides as a basic prerequisite for detente as such.

I believe, by the way, that in the present epoch of world developments it is most important that both world powers abide by the principles of balance in strategic nuclear arms. Carter has done this in his public speeches, but the Soviet leadership has not. There are also other fields, other regions and regional sectors in the world where that balance does not exist, where it has not yet been established, or where it has been vilolated.

Naturally, one can establish a balance in two ways: Through an arms race, where one tries to run as fast as the other which would lead to a most dangerous spiral. It can also be achieved through mutual commitments to arms limitation. Detente is impossible without a balance. The reestablishment of a balance, the stabilization of a balance, this is one of the most important tasks in 1980 and beyond.

[Question] The German-French meeting in Paris has proceeded very much under the sign of Atlantic solidarity, and yet we ought to aim in the long run for a certain European autonomy, also in the interest of the Americans, who cannot remain the protectors of Europe forever. The only possibility for realizing European autonomy in the alliance would probably also be intensified military cooperation. Will it suffice to plan joint work on a tank for the nineties, or should concrete steps be envisaged between the Germans and the French?

[Answer] Well, a tank is very concrete, but it will take some time until it has been developed, produced and introduced. That is not the only joint effort we are undertaking in the field of defense. I recall the jointly developed and produced planes such as the Transall, Alpha Jet, or Atlantique. I recall one or two missiles, short-range tactical arms for air defense and tank defense.

But you are right, it is. I will put it differently. I assess it positively that the French and Germans in past years have come somewhat more closely together in the field of common defense. That process is likely to continue. I would not headline it as "European autonomy." I think you can see that very clearly from the joint German-French statement. You yourself have stressed the Atlantic character of the statement. You were right in doing so because it contains a strong Atlantic element.

It says that Europe, that France and Germany, do not imagine that they alone, with disregard for the remaining partners of the Atlantic alliance, can safeguard their security autonomously, so to speak. That is impossible without the alliance and without the United States of America. Certainly the European powers have a certain latitude for pointing out their specific interests. Certainly the French latitude is a bit bigger than that of the Germans; but autonomy would be term for me that goes too far.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG Comment

DW061037 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 6 Feb 80 DW

[Dieter Schroeder editorial: "Paris Appeals for Moderation"]

[Excerpts] The Atlantic alliance has not come away unscathed from the Afghanistan adventure of the Soviets. The "German-French statement," with which President Giscard d'Estaing and Federal Chancellor Schmidt concluded their talks, clearly demonstrates that the differences between the Americans and Europeans on the motives of the Soviet action and the necessary countermeasures continue to exist. [paragraph continues]

While Carter seems to believe that the world has changed since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Giscard and Schmidt still cling to the belief that Moscow's action has been some sort of an "accident" of detente policy that could be compensated with good will.

The Soviet Union is asked first to show its good will and withdraw its troops from Afghanistan. Giscard and Schmidt are showing it themselves by doing something that they believe Carter ought to have done: They are signaling their readiness not to cut off talks with the East and dissociating themselves from ultra extreme calls for sanctions--at least this time. Behind this is the conviction that one must give the Soviets opportunity to withdraw without losing face, and that nothing is more dangerous than steering toward total confrontation.

Behind this, however, is the two men's calmer assessment of the situation. They believe that the Soviet Union, as the federal chancellor formulated it in his DER SPIEGEL interview, "on a suitable occasion would like to gain power-political advantages here and there, if it works out without the risk of war;" that Moscow's action in Afghanistan is probably limited because it wanted to avoid letting this country slip away from its sphere of influence; that the Soviet Union has been punished hard with its loss of face and that it possibly realizes its error in assessing the international reaction. At any rate, both want to avoid uncontrollable reactions that consist more of words than action. They want to slow down an escalation that could jeopardize in a willful, inconsiderate and premature way the achievements of detente in Europe--and, not least, the small leeway of the East Europeans.

In doing this, however, both are running a risk--the risk that their assessment of the situation is wrong, that Carter as well as Brezhnev do not want to, or cannot, follow their appeals to be rational, either because they are involved in domestic political jockeying for position or because the Russians simply cannot leave Afghanistan now if they do not want to lose their investment. In such a case Giscard and Schmidt could be proved wrong by events very quickly. Moscow could interpret this as a weakness, thinking that Bonn and Paris will "take measures" only if a "new blow" against detente were made; it could believe that nothing much need be feared from the Europeans. Washington could feel abandoned and harbor the suspicion that Giscard and Schmidt, despite their oaths of loyalty to the alliance, will permit Moscow to drive a wedge between America and Europe. The Americans probably consider Brezhnev's and Ponomarev's recent exercises on the peace flute as a melody played mainly for European ears.

People in Washington could be asking whether the Europeans recognize their own interests correctly. After all, they depend much more than the United States on the oil from the Gulf. It should be obvious that they ought to be more open toward American desires for a stronger Western presence East of Suez than before, instead of looking at the distribution of roles for the more pleasant and less dangerous task of maintaining detente. The Soviet bridgehead system around the Gulf and their unrestrained rearmament ought to appear to the Europeans in a different light following Afghanistan.

If, however, the superpowers do not want to call off their confrontation, the Europeans are powerless anyway; they will then be more deeply involved in the conflict, and they--including the French--will have to demonstrate their loyalty to the United States with their participation in the Olympic boycott and intensified aid for endangered states such as Turkey and Pakistan. A "third" position of mediator does not exist. Schmidt, who is striving for a distribution of roles in crisis management, does not even dream of that. The Americans would not give the Europeans a monopoly on detente, as Kissinger put it, while shouldering the monopoly of the defense of Western interests without complaint.

GISCARD'S AFRICA ADVISER DIES IN PLANE CRASH

NC070937 Paris AFP in English 0926 GMT 7 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Yaounde, Cameroon, Feb 7 (AFP)--Rene Journiac, French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's right-hand man on African affairs, died last night in a plane crash in northern Cameroon, a reliable source said here today. The source said that the Grumman aircraft bringing Mr. Journiac from Ndjamena, Chad, to Libreville, Gabon, had crashed about sunset near Ngaoundere, 700 kilometres (400 miles) north of here, as it came in to land for refueling. A nephew of Gabonese President Omar Bongo was piloting the plane, which was Gabonese, and there were three other crew members--two Gabonese and a French lieutenant, an authoritative source said.

Mr. Journiac was on one of his frequent trips to Africa on behalf of the French presidency. He had arrived Monday in Chad to discuss a possible official visit by President Oueddei Goukouni to Paris, and to hold talks on the continuing presence of 1,200 French troops in Chad.

MITTERRAND CONDEMNS TRIPOLI EMBASSY INCIDENT

LD061112 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 6 Feb 80 LD

[Text] There has been a clear cooling of relations between Paris and Tripoli following the freezing of diplomatic relations decided by France in response to the more or less remote-controlled incidents at the embassy in Tripoli and the consulate in Banghazi. The French ambassador has been recalled and the Foreign Ministry is similarly asking several Libyan diplomats serving in Paris to pack their bags. Francois Mitterrand approved the French decision at the Socialist International meeting in Vienna. This is the explanation he gave to our special correspondent Pierre Ganz:

[Begin Mitterrand recording] If people were able to occupy, invade--occupy, destroy--scatter embassy documents, without intervention by the public forces of the state where this embassy is situated, I think that this is a serious offense against the country thus represented. In this case we are talking about France and an embassy in Libya. It is occupied, it is invaded, people [word indistinct] to burn it. No one is harmed and in the end the occupiers are driven out. The Libyan police did not stir. I think it is quite natural for France to register its refusal to be treated in this way and to recall its ambassador. [end recording]

ANTISUBMARINE SHIP TO STRENGTHEN INDIAN OCEAN FORCE

LD051651 Paris LE MONDE in French 1 Feb 80 p 5 LD

[Unattributed report: "Corvette 'Georges-Leygues' Rejoins French Fleet in the Indian Ocean"]

[Text] The French fleet's best equipped antisubmarine vessel, the corvette Georges-Leygues, will set sail from Toulon in a few days to rejoin the French naval force protecting the Indian Ocean oil route.

Naval experts believe that by sending this modern ship to relieve the squadron escort ship Du-Chayla, France is anxious to stress the importance it attaches to its naval presence in an area made increasingly sensitive by the events in Iran and Afghanistan.

The French fleet, comprising four corvettes, one supply tanker, one repair ship, four patrol vessels and one landing craft, is in the Indian Ocean mainly to cruise the waters of the Persian Gulf, the Strait of Hormuz and the Mozambique Channel. This permanent force has been strengthened for 5 years by two capital ships (one of which is being relieved by the Georges-Leygues) and one or two naval patrol planes based at Djibouti. The aircraft carriers can be added to this presence.

The 4,200-ton Georges-Leygues, which entered active service at the end of last year, specializes in antisubmarine work and, in addition to its electronic detection and destruction equipment, has two Lynx helicopters for this purpose. It is also armed with Exocet antiship missiles and Crotale antiaircraft missiles.

PONIATOWSKI ARGUES FOR EUROPEAN NUCLEAR FORCE

LD060903 Paris LE MONDE in French 29 Jan 80 p 11 LD

[Unattributed report: "Mr Michel Poniatowski Speaks in Favor of a European Nuclear Force"]

[Text] Political Futures Institute President Mr Michel Poniatowski, the guest of Europe 1's "Press Club" on 27 January, spoke in favor of forming a European nuclear force.

"If we are to move toward an armed conflict, especially a nuclear one, I believe that France and Europe must not take part in the superpowers' supersuicide," he declared. "We must build an adequate nuclear force, and we will have one in the next 3 or 4 years. All French submarines, the sixth as well, will be armed with multiple warheads, 500 in all, and if we reach an agreement with Britain we will have a truly deterrent force."

This argument should lead the other European countries to what he calls a "de-NATOization." He sees NATO as "the outcome of a reaction of fear which has meant seeking the shelter of the American umbrella." "Now," he added, "this umbrella has holes and America's representatives have not hidden that fact from us when dealing with this. The American umbrella will probably only be effective in one case out of four that might arise. That is all. Consequently, if the European countries do not want to be part of a nuclear conflict, they must have the same defensive reaction, which is the result of protective action. If we want nuclear suicide, we have only to ally ourselves with either of the two camps: If there must be a nuclear war, our suicide is totally assured."

Mr Poniatowski remarked: "This will certainly be a totally new military structure. We shall probably need 10 years of negotiations to establish a new system. We must try to build gradually over the years; this will not be done in a day but, I believe, it will be an inevitable change for Europe."

For France, Mr Poniatowski wishes to see "a protection policy: for example, the building of nuclear shelters in all new apartment blocks.... There are," he said, "numerous places in France where existing installations can be used and adapted for passive antinuclear defense."

PCF CENTRAL COMMITTEE APPROVES POLITBURO REPORT

LD041211 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 23 Jan 80 p 10 LD

[Apparent text of PCF Central Committee resolution at the Central Committee meeting in Ivry on 22 January: "Resolution"]

[Text] The Central Committee unanimously approves [PCF Politburo member] Maxime Gremetz' report.

It has taken account of the change in the global balance of forces in a direction favorable to the forces of progress, liberation and peace and the imperialist counteroffensive and has decided to devote greater efforts to the struggle for peace and disarmament. This struggle is indispensable and enables imperialism's ventures to be defeated and imperialism to be pushed back still further.

The Central Committee adopts the stance taken by the Politburo on Afghanistan.

The Central Committee approves the initiatives taken to implement the international strategy defined by the 23d Congress.

It notes the content of the various international meetings which party delegations have had recently.

It heard a detailed report on the meeting between the CPSU and the PCF. It approves of the actions of its delegation headed by Georges Marchais. It welcomes the joint communique which was adopted. It believes that this meeting has launched new relations between the two parties. These relations are part of the development--the need for which was stressed at our 23d Congres--of a new theory and practice of relations between communist parties characterized by independence, frankness, clarity, and solidarity of major common objectives.

The French bourgeoisie, its political representatives in government, and the Socialist Party are maneuvering to make the workers accept extreme austerity, unemployment and our country's alinement with imperialism's overall strategy. That is the aim of their violent anticommunist campaign.

During the Central Committee's discussions, many examples were given that bear witness to the party's sound condition and in particular to its vigorous reaction to the present wave of lies and curses. The Central Committee calls on the whole party to turn this attack back on its perpetrators and to use it as the motive for a powerful Communist upsurge to boost unified action against the Giscard-Barre economic and social policies and to promote disarmament, detente and internationalist solidarity.

The Central Committee calls on all Communists to explain and support their party's policies and stances. It urges them to read and distribute L'HUMANITE and to make an exceptional success of the launching of the new L'HUMANITE-DIMANCHE.

It urges them to deploy their initiatives and efforts to insure the success of the membership campaign and the popular rallies and to strengthen our party with tens of thousands of new members.

ITALY-USSR ASSOCIATION DEPLORES SOVIET ACTIONS

LD052332 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 5 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The board of the Italy-USSR Association, which met today to define its position on Soviet behavior both in the international and domestic spheres, has deplored, and declared itself to be deeply disturbed by, the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and the repressive measures taken against Academician Sakharov. The Italy-USSR board did not, however, discuss the recent resignation of historian Paolo Alatri from the association. The governing committee, it was stated at the association, would consider Alatri's gesture. We can only repeat that we do not agree with what Paolo Alatri has done in the belief that it is unproductive.

L'UNITA REJECTS OLYMPIC BOYCOTT AS DISCRIMINATORY

LD051245 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 2 Feb 80 p 1 LD

[Arminio Savioli commentary: "Rupture That Would Affect Not Only the USSR"]

[Excerpts] The European Olympic committees have made a wise decision. They will not boycott the Olympics. But it is just as well to look squarely at the truth. There remains a grave risk that the blindest sectarianism will prevail over reason. Therefore, irrespective of the outcome of this affair, we would like to say a few words about the wind of suicidal madness ("let Samson die with all the Philistines") which seems to be blowing across the stadiums, gymnasiums and swimming pools. Many people (too many) are wavering under political pressure or have already decided to yield to it.

The Olympics issue has very broad implications. The boycott, if it takes place, would assume an evil and perverse significance almost from the outset. It would introduce a deep rift not only among leadership groups but also among the peoples. It would tell mankind (that is, even the simplest and most humble men and women whose situation in the world's outlying areas and societies removes them from "high-level political" debates) that the Soviets must be isolated as a people, just as lepers and sufferers from the plague were once isolated; that there must be no relations of any kind with them, even in the sporting field; that nobody must compete with them even in running or jumping; and that one must not shake hands with them at the end of an honestly contested race.

If the boycott really did take place, the USSR (that country accused of the most aggressive actions and the most evil intentions) would indeed become the victim of not simply ideological but almost racial discrimination. A grave spiral would be set in motion. It would strengthen in the minds and mouths of the unfortunately abundant and ubiquitous anti-Soviet fanatics the peremptory idea and the arrogant assertion that if it is impermissible to enter the same stadium as USSR athletes, then neither should we invite visits from Soviet ballet companies, Soviet scientists or Soviet poets, or read or translate Soviet literary works, show Soviet movies or teach Russian at school. And since the erroneous equation between "communist" and "Soviet" belongs not only to the past but also to the present in so many circles, in many countries there would be a return to the McCarthyite witch hunt for "Reds", and there would be a recurrence of deep rifts of ideological hatred.

It does not take a great deal of imagination to foresee the profound and lasting mass psychological repercussions of an Olympic boycott. In any case, something similar has happened before, and not in ancient history. These are things which were experienced and suffered in Italy too in recent times by an entire generation.

PCI'S NAPOLITANO VIEWS RELATIONS WITH SPD

LD051513 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 26 Jan 80 p 3 LD

["F.Pe." undated interview in Rome with PCI Secretariat member Giorgio Napolitano: "Time for Dialog With SPD"]

[Excerpts] Rome--Comrade Giorgio Napolitano, accompanied by PCI foreign section aide Comrade Michele Ingenito, visited the FRG from 15 through 20 January at the invitation of the Cologne Federal Institute of International Studies. During his stay Napolitano delivered a series of lectures and had a number of meetings centering on our party's foreign and economic policy. Napolitano also had talks with Deputy Karsten Voigt, member of the Bundestag Foreign Affairs Committee; Liberal Party Directorate member Helmut Schaefer; and Horst Ehmke, authoritative member of the SPD leadership and deputy chairman of the SPD Parliamentary Group. Our first question to Comrade Napolitano, whom we met after his return to Rome, concerned the nature of his visit to the FRG.

"My visit to the FRG," Napolitano said, "took place on two levels: First, as an effort to extend the debate on the PCI which has already been under way for some time in politico-cultural forums such as the Cologne Federal Institute of International Studies; and second, as a contact with political and government circles, especially in connection with the aggravation of the international situation.

"I was asked to deliver a lecture at the Cologne Institute on the PCI's views on economic policy as they have evolved over the years and on the concept of 'elements of socialism'. I believe that this is an important course for developing relations between our party and various West German political and cultural forces; the debate which followed my lecture confirmed this."

[Question] In light of your various contacts, do you believe that it will be possible to strengthen and extend relations with FRG political forces? And with which of these in particular?

[Answer] I believe so, particularly with the SPD, and I say that the time has come to examine the SPD's and PCI's respective positions on fundamental issues regarding government and economics, the transformation of society, and the development of democracy in our countries and socialism in Europe. There has always been considerable divergence between the parties on these topics, but a real dialog has never been conducted. Contacts in the past have been prevalently diplomatic in nature; they have been very useful for discovering significant convergences in foreign policy issues and for highlighting the major innovations in the PCI's theories and general policy. Now it is both possible and necessary to surmount these limitations.

In the debate at the Cologne Institute I noted what keen interest there is in gaining a more thorough acquaintance with the historical and theoretical background of our present positions, and I was pleased to see that people were asking me specific questions on precise and important points rather than indulging in ideological schemes. Indeed, in my opinion it is not a matter of constantly wondering in general terms about the differences between the PCI and the SPD or between the PCI and social democratic parties as a whole, but of carefully verifying how both sides think and act--proceeding from very different backgrounds--in connection with very major problems which are calling into question highly interconnected situations such as the West German economy and society and prompting a reassessment of the traditional positions of both the communist and the social democratic parties.

[Question] Is there a full convergence of views between the PCI and the SPD? What is the FRG Government's and SPD's attitude on relations with the United States?

[Answer] Of course there are still differences between our party and the SPD and, especially, the FRG Government of analysis and emphasis with regard to international issues. Our harsh verdict on NATO's Euromissiles decision remains unchanged; we make an openly critical assessment of the Carter administration's foreign policy (on whose substantial ambiguities and contradictions in its approach to and conduct of relations with the USSR the authoriative and independent U.S. scholar Stanley Hoffmann recently made a thorough and penetrating analysis).

But Chancellor Schmidt's reaffirmation (and circumscription) of solidarity with the United States and his invocation of the inalienable U.S. role in West German security cannot conceal the importance of the renewed commitment to act to preserve and extend the detente process, primarily in Europe, which certainly constitutes an area of convergence with the line pursued by our party. And when Chancellor Schmidt or Chairman Brandt declares: "We will not permit what has taken us 10 years of detente to achieve to be discredited or dismantled"; when they speak out against "the policy of insults" and warn against impulsiveness and impassioned speeches; when they adopt a stance against any geographical extension of NATO's obligations, they are polemicizing not only with the German Christian Democratic opposition...

[Question] It is often objected that the PCI is hypothesizing a kind of "equidistance" for Western Europe. What do you think of this?

[Answer] This is a false argument, which some people use to deny the need and opportunity for a special role for the West European countries in this phase of very grave crises in international relations. I am talking in particular about those European countries that belong to NATO which, as members of one of the two military alliances, obviously cannot be "equidistant" from them but which can perform an extremely important role--primarily within NATO itself--in averting a return to cold war, containing the crisis and recharging detente between the major powers, between East and West on a world scale. One significant aspect of the government parties' approach to last week's Bundestag debate was the very open attitude to the problems of North-South relations and the development of Third World countries' autonomy: These problems were viewed as an integral part of a process of strengthening and extending detente and peaceful coexistence.

BRIEFS

ETHIOPIAN FINANCE MINISTER--Rome, February 4 (ANSA)--Ethiopian Finance Minister Wolde-Semayit Teferra moves into the third day of a five-day official visit to Italy today with a schedule of talks designed to expand economic, financial and commercial exchanges between the two countries. Semayit is accompanied by high-ranking officials from the Addis Ababa government's Ministries for Transport, Mines, and Agriculture. He was to meet with Treasury Minister Filippo Maria Pandolfi and Foreign Trade Minister Gaetano Stammati, and was also to visit ENI [National Hydrocarbon Corporation] and Fiat factories in northern Italy. Semayit is seen here as repaying the visit which then Foreign Undersecretary Luciano Radi made to the Ethiopian capital two years ago. "The main aim of my visit is to identify, together with the Italian Government, ways and means of extending the already good relations between the two countries," the minister told journalists on arrival at the weekend. He added that the major topics would be cooperation in the fields of industry, farming and transport. [Text] [Rome ANSA in English 0850 GMT 4 Feb 80 AU]

ENVOY TO WASHINGTON VIEWS SPANISH-U.S. RELATIONS

LD061415 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 1 Feb 80 p 15 LD

[Mary Merida interview in Madrid with Spanish Ambassador to the United States Jose Llado: "Our Foreign Relations Now Have a Normal Structure"--date not specified]

[Excerpt] Jose Llado y Fernandez Urrutia, Spain's ambassador to Washington for approximately the past 18 months, has spent a few days in our country after accompanying Prime Minister Suarez on his return journey from the United States.

Taking advantage of this very brief stay in Madrid, I had a somewhat informal conversation with him (he systematically refuses to make statements) and, in characteristically colloquial and direct language, we discussed a number of very topical national and international issues, which proved particularly interesting because Mr Llado never uses strictly diplomatic or technical language, but comments on events with the natural approach of a simple observer, though with the thoroughness and from the standpoint afforded to him by his involvement in them in his daily work.

Also I felt it would be interesting to interview him just 4 years after the signing of the friendship and cooperation treaty with the United States.

I wanted to know about the repercussions and scope of Prime Minister Suarez' recent Washington visit, bearing in mind that here it was regarded as a sudden and somewhat surprising event, because of the lack of detail with which it was reported. Mr Llado told me in this connection that visits from prime ministers are very common there, that generally they are working visits, as was this one, and that they are not accompanied, as they once were, by preparations and pomp. The visits are arranged because they are desired by the interlocutors, at the time which they consider opportune. The closer the relations between the countries, the more frequent and less formal they are.

[Llado] In crisis situations such as the present, I regard the mere opportunity to listen and explain and to compare and analyze situations affecting us so directly as enormously important in itself. We are in the same world and many of our interests--many of them shared--are at stake. Great heed was paid to Suarez, as shown by the fact that that country's top leaders--Mondale, Vance and Brzezinski--accompanied Carter at the talks, which is quite unusual.

You will not believe this, though it is me telling you it, but the fact is that this visit created a new level of understanding among us.

[Question] What really worries us is the possibility that, with things as they are in the world, we will have to go begging to the United States, since we are its allies and have friendship and cooperation treaties with it.

[Answer] Our present situation permits us to take decisions from within a framework of freedoms which we did not have before. And, thank God, our present level of understanding and the agreements which we reach neither have nor need to have any secret clauses, because they are located within a framework of substantially different relations. There is now a political clarity which should reassure us and since this political clarity applies not only to the government but also to the Constitution, it means that the decisions belong to us all and therefore pursue the well-being of all Spaniards. Our foreign relations now have an open and natural structure--not shameful as before. Now we can be less dependent and more interrelated.

Our Western Option and the United States

[Question] So does this mean that our Western option does not necessarily depend on our relations with the United States?

[Answer] Of course, but the United States is in the heart of the West and we too are part of the West.

[Question] Could we therefore permit ourselves to modify our treaties with the United States without any prejudice and with benefit to ourselves?

[Answer] The possibilities of modifying the treaties with the United States would not affect us now as in the past, because now they would not affect our credibility or our prestige as a country. In very simple terms, the previous regime changed agreements for reasons of political credibility. Now we have credibility, irrespective of our agreements. Therefore, our attitude toward them is now freer and less dependent, more balanced, in fact. Our progressive intensification of such relations not only with the United States but with the rest of Europe and other Western countries is what I would call "immersion in the West", that is, identification with the Western world, but from the standpoint of our own identity and freedom. This is and remains the asset of freedom which we gained through the voting booths.

NATO Membership

[Question] Mr Ambassador, does our Western option not necessarily depend on NATO membership either?

[Answer] No, I do not believe so. This is a topic which is being examined and which is prompting polemics, but to which I personally attach less importance, because I insist that our relations must be so diversified and extensive that NATO membership does not need to be the key to our integration into the West--not that I would try to belittle its importance either. There are European countries which are not NATO members and are very Western in their principles. I stress that I believe that this is not a "sine qua non" for our being a Western country, as some people claim. We already have relations with NATO through the Spanish-American agreements and these can be effective. In any case, a decision on this undoubtedly polemical topic will be taken by our representatives in the Cortes after a careful analysis; then all of us will decide.

[Question] Nevertheless, do you regard our EEC membership as essential for assessing our degree of Westernization?

[Answer] I do regard this as important, because relations with the EEC will produce profound parallels in economic, social, financial, commercial and other policies--in other words, in lifestyles. This is what we are talking about--how we want to live, which model we like and which we do not like.

MINISTER DENIES CLAIM ABOUT GENERALS' POLITICAL TALKS

LD061621 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 31 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Unattributed report: "Defense Minister Rejects Remarks by Carrillo"]

[Text] Madrid, 30 January--Defense Minister Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun has rejected remarks Santiago Carrillo made yesterday evening to a group of journalists, in which he claimed he had information concerning talks which commander in chief of the First Armored Division General Torres Rojas allegedly had with other military chiefs in connection with the country's political situation.

In these remarks the PCE secretary general claimed that the government, [Spanish Socialist Workers Party Secretary] Felipe Gonzalez and he himself had been informed of these talks a few days previously.

Last night Defense Minister Rodriguez Sahagun said that "Mr Carrillo will know why and with what intention he made the remarks attributed to him." He added, "If he has any concrete information, I am surprised that he has not duly informed the right people. And if they are merely rumors it seems incredible to me that a party secretary general would undertake to spread them so irresponsibly and without pondering them sufficiently."

The defense minister concluded by stating that "this kind of behavior profoundly irritates an institution and a society which now want more than ever to live in peace and harmony."

PCE'S AZCARATE: MANY PCF MEMBERS DISLIKE AFGHANISTAN LINE

LD051215 Paris LE MATIN in French 25 Jan 80 p 9 LD

[Christian Casteran interview: "Manuel Azcarate: 'I Know French Communists Who Think As We Do'"--date and place not specified]

[Text] Manuel Azcarate, 63, Politburo member and PCE international section chief, presents the smiling face of Spanish Communism. After the differences of opinion between his party and the PCF, he says: "The French example does not influence us at all. We have some old comrades in our party who approve the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. But they are museum-pieces...."

[Question] You publicly condemned the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, but, it seemed, less clearly than the PCI.

[Answer] The Soviet Union is committing an act of aggression in Afghanistan in violation of UN principles, and we said this. On the day of the "Kabul Coup," 27 December, I was in Rome. We had the same position as our Italian comrades. I even believe our condemnation went further than theirs.

[Question] The PCF is absent in this general disapproval!

[Answer] I do not understand their position. In the past they have condemned such incidents. I believe that there is an objective danger of a return to cold war. When two blocs clash, some communists believe that they must maintain privileged relations with one or the other. Alinement now with one of the two blocs is suicide for the European communist parties. Nonalinement and Eurocommunism seem to us more necessary than ever. The Afghan events present a fundamental question for the communist parties: If one justifies the Soviet intervention, how can one condemn imperialism? But I know many French Communists who think as we do...and who disapprove of L'HUMANITE's insulting articles.

[Question] Under these conditions, does Eurocommunism still exist?

[Answer] You Frenchmen should not always imagine yourselves to be the center of the world. Indeed, the PCF is alined with the USSR, but to conclude therefore that Eurocommunism is dead....You should not exaggerate!

[Question] How do you define your relations with the USSR?

[Answer] We have good relations based on noninterference. For us, the right to criticize coexists with our role as communists. Having said that, we have not broken away; we have simply abandoned the idea that the USSR has to be the model. My generation has changed greatly on this question. We had the civil war, World War II and the resistance, and each time the Soviet Union performed illustriously. But that period is over. Today they still want to label us pro-Soviet. But the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, for example, has more links with the USSR and the people's democracies than we do. They sent a delegation to Czechoslovakia while we broke off relations with the Czechoslovak party after Dubcek. Ours is the only party to have gone to China, last November.

[Question] Is that enough to make the PCE an independent party?

[Answer] As Ingrao said, we seek the third Marxist road between the old communism and social democracy. We are searching for a new relationship between the Third World and the European working classes. This is the key issue of our time.

[Question] What is your strategy here in Spain?

[Answer] We seek an agreement with the democratic forces, that is, with the socialists and centrists, but we do not want a popular front type agreement with the socialists alone. We believe that communists and socialists should influence centrist government to stop its sliding to the right. Today we say that the left cannot govern but that it can prevent the center from moving to the right on such important questions as the economic situation and the status of autonomies.

[Question] You remain faithful to democratic centralism?

[Answer] We reject democratic centralism without democracy. We have condemned it. But we want to combine democracy and the authority of government organs. We do not accept organized tendencies which make a debate on ideas into a personality clash. Centralism is a must for an organized party, even if sometimes it hides old habits.

Alleged Azcarate Retraction

LD051217 Paris LE MATIN in French 28 Jan 80 p 11 LD

[Unattributed report: "A Spanish Communist Embarrassed"]

[Text] Following LE MATIN's publication on 25 January of an interview with PCE Politburo member Manuel Azcarate, the latter sent us the following telegram: "Note inaccurate phrases in my interview. In particular did not mention French comrades' attitudes different from those of their party."

Has Manuel Azcarate given way to friendly pressure from his French comrades to withdraw his earlier statements ("I know many French Communists who think as we do...and who disapprove of L'HUMANITE's insulting articles")? In any event LE MATIN defends the validity of Manuel Azcarate's interview. Its special correspondent repeated the most controversial expressions to him, especially the word "insulting." L'HUMANITE was quick to exploit this denial to insult our paper on Saturday. Under a big headline. Say no more.

CARRINGTON SPEAKS TO PARLIAMENT ON AFGHANISTAN

Commons Committee

LD061450 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1406 GMT 6 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington today declined to rule out the use of British military force in support of the United States in the event of a military invasion in the Gulf or elsewhere.

He was answering questions on the objectives of British foreign policy before a Common select committee on foreign affairs, and had been asked by committee member, Conservative backbencher Sir Anthony Royle, about the possibility of a Gulf intervention. Lord Carrington said he believed Soviet subversion was a greater threat than military force. But he added: "If there were a military invasion of one or other country in circumstances which were clearly unprovoked aggression and the United States decided--I hope in conjunction with its allies--what it would do, I hope we would be amongst those who would do it."

Lord Carrington said that Britain was consulting with its allies on the protection of the Straits of Hormuz, through which most of the West's oil supplies from the Gulf had to pass. An attempt to block the Straits would be considered by the West to be "an act of aggression which could not be ignored."

Lord Carrington said the West should be absolutely firm in its resolve not to accept the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan and to insist that however long it took there should be a withdrawal. But despite what had happened Lord Carrington did not think it should prevent the West seeking to achieve an arms limitation agreement with the Soviets.

Lord Carrington also criticised the recent United Nations Security Council resolution attacking British policy on Rhodesia. Some countries which criticised Britain's efforts to have fair and free elections "would not know a free and fair election if they saw one. I find the double standards curious," he said.

Address to Lords

LD061924 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1808 GMT 6 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington today warned that the West would have to begin a new long term construction of a system of detente "free from the assurances of the past." In the past the West had operated "on one set of rules," he said, "but the Russians operated on another." He added: "To them it was quite compatible with the idea of detente to push their luck whenever the opportunity presented itself."

Speaking at the start of a major debate in the House of Lords on the threat to international security by the Afghanistan invasion, Lord Carrington warned that the Russians were using Afghanistan as a "testing ground" comparable to the crisis they provoked in Berlin.

Russia had probed in Europe and the Far East after the war--now they were probing again, Lord Carrington said. "It is in the interests of the rest of the world that this probing should be contained and that positive understanding should be built after that." But this would be a "long process," he told peers. In the meantime Russia's influence had to be limited and contained. And if possible the West had to repair the damage that the Soviet invasion had caused.

"We must look to the future and maintain our lines of communication with the Soviet Union and continue negotiations in the fields of arms controls where everyone on both sides has an interest," Lord Carrington said, "and in the long term construct a system of detente free from the assurances of the past providing a firm framework for the management of detente".

"I think we have made a start," Lord Carrington said. "There is an underlying unity of purpose in the West and we in Britain our doing our share." Lord Carrington said he believed that the Afghanistan crisis had brought the Third World and the West more closely together. "I believe that the Soviet action will have demonstrated to them that the community of interest between us is greater than they had generally appreciated."

DIPLOMATIC INITIATIVE TO BREAK MIDDLE EAST DEADLOCK BEGUN

LD071143 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 7 Feb 80 p 6 LD

[John Bulloch report: "Britain Seeks To Break Middle East Deadlock"]

[Text] Britain has launched a quiet new initiative to break the deadlock in negotiations between Egypt and Israel for a general Middle East peace.

British ministers privately accept that the Egyptian-Israeli talks begun with the Camp David accords have gone as far as they can. Recognising this impasse, Britain is now making efforts to bypass a total stalemate. But first efforts are directed towards Europe rather than the Middle East.

At the same time Britain has clear ideas of how progress should be made. And the first step, it is thought, should be an amendment to the basic British-inspired passed by the Security Council in November 1967, which called for Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab lands in return for recognition. An addition to this resolution would be designed to accept in unequivocal terms "the rights of the Palestinian people."

Such a move would be bound to lead to conflict with Israel, and would have to be concerted in advance with America. If agreed, it would also obviously pave the way for a dialogue between European states and the Palestinian Liberation Organisation, increasingly accepted as the legitimate voice of the Palestinian people.

The second and more important part of the British proposal being floated in Europe is that a new conference should be convened. The aim would be to avoid Geneva, where Russia would act as co-chairman with America, and go for some totally new grouping. One British idea is that if Jordan were involved, other states would feel bound to join in. All would depend on persuading America to "deliver" Israel, which in a presidential election year could not be relied on. Action is nevertheless thought to be needed now.

ELEVTHERI KIPROS SCORES DENKTAS' NEW STATEMENT

NC060700 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 6 Feb 80 p 3 NC

[From the "Comments" column: "Continuation of Intransigence"]

[Text] One would expect that with the promotion of the UN Secretary General's fresh initiative for the convocation of the intercommunal talks the two parties--since they favor the dialog procedure--would refrain from proceeding with activities or statements that would impede Dr Waldheim's mission. Such a policy would prove in a way the good will of the interested parties for the promotion of a fair solution through the process of talks. But unfortunately the Turkish side, and Denktas in particular, do no such a thing. Denktas never misses the opportunity to stress in almost daily statements his intransigent and negative stand. Moreover, his recent statement to the magazine KARVAN leaves no room for optimism in connection with Waldheim's new initiative. With his new statement the Turkish Cypriot leader appears to be provocative, aggressive, violent and terribly intransigent and to be actually undermining every effort for the resumption of the dialog.

Dr Waldheim must correctly "weigh" Denktas' new statement and must note the Turkish side's strong intransigence, which is the main impediment to his mission. Moreover, he might be led to the conclusion that he is hoping in vain to lead the two sides to the talks and is hoping in vain that a basis for agreement would be found through these talks. These are some questions that must definitely be seriously considered by the UN secretary general, particularly following the Turkish Cypriot leader's intransigent statement.

Now let us deal with the substance of Denktas' statement. He describes the recent UN General Assembly resolution as totally invalid, impudent, immoral and harmful; he asks Dr Waldheim to neutralize it since, as he maintains, it has been adopted contrary to the summit meeting agreement.

What is the meaning of the Turkish Cypriot leader's statement? It means that he establishes as a condition for the resumption of the talks the neutralization of the UN General Assembly resolution. It also means that we must remain indifferent toward the occupation of 40 percent of our territory by the invasion troops. It means that we must not seek any assistance, even moral assistance, from the international community and so forth.

In his same statement, Denktas maintains that the basis of the republic to be established in the future must be a partnership regime with the Turkish Cypriots. He even goes further and tells Dr Waldheim to try and find out what the Greek Cypriots think about this question because, as he says, without accepting the existence of this basis they would not be assisting in the settlement of the problem. This means that he is imposing another condition.

We must point out again that the Greek Cypriot side has never refused to discuss at the negotiating table any proposals by the Turkish Cypriot side. However--and this must be stressed--the Greek Cypriot side will never accept any preconditions, or any conditions for that matter.

ERKMEN SAYS TURKEY WILL APPLY FOR FULL EEC MEMBERSHIP

TA061615 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 6 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen held a news conference in Brussels after the Turkish-EEC Association Council concluded its work there. TRT correspondent Selma Berksoy reports from Brussels on the Association Council meeting and other developments:

[Begin Berksoy recording] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen said that Turkey might apply to the EEC before the end of the year for full membership in the Community. Erkmen, who participated in the Turkish-EEC Association Council meeting held in Brussels yesterday, held a news conference at the International Press Center today. The news conference, which began at 1130 Turkish time, lasted for about an hour. Many foreign correspondents attended the news conference. Erkmen said that in accordance with the provisions of the Rome agreement, Turkey has the right to apply for full membership in the EEC. He added that he hoped that such an application will be made before the end of the year.

Erkmen said the following on the issue: The positive conditions necessary for Turkey's full membership in the Community exist. Our government has the necessary parliamentary majority to have this decision passed at the National Assembly. However, this does not mean that we will not face various difficulties.

In reply to a question by a journalist on whether or not such an application would be made because Greece could create obstacles, Erkmen said that this might affect the decisions to be taken, but that it would not be the sole factor.

Referring to Turkey's economic difficulties at the news conference, Erkmen said that this was not a problem faced only by Turkey and recalled that the necessary measures had been taken to solve these difficulties. Erkmen added that Turkey expected economic support from the West and that this support could be in the form of money, loans and foreign investment.

Erkmen will pay a courtesy call on NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns at 1730 Turkish time today. Erkmen will leave Brussels for France this evening. In Paris Erkmen will meet with the OECD secretary general and with Emile van Lennep, chairman of the aid to Turkey consortium set up within the framework of the OECD. [end recording]

ERBAKAN: RECENT ECONOMIC MEASURES ORDERED BY IMF

TA061756 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 6 Feb 80 TA

[Text] National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan held a news conference at the parliament today. He said:

[Begin Erbakan recording] Why did Demirel do what he did? No one can believe what he said, that it was necessitated by the economy. The reason why Demirel introduced this [the economic measures] is as follows: He surrendered to the IMF as soon as he came to power. He is following the IMF's orders. He did what he did because the IMF ordered him to do so. It is as simple as that. All these decisions are taken by order of the IMF. He then appeared on the television and the radio and made a statement to cover his shame, to deceive and to explain certain pretexts.

What is the essence of these decisions, what will the outcome be? Millions of peasants, workers, civil servants and small shopkeepers--the limited income groups--have been pushed to starvation, poverty, shortages and famine. This is the first result.

These decisions made by Demirel will increase gaps between classes. Overnight, various persons have made profits of billions of lira as a result of these decisions, while millions were condemned to starvation. This gap between classes will certain result in social explosions.

Honorable Demirel frequently appears on television and says: Am I provoking anarchy? Yes, with these decisions one calls for anarchy. The hungry may get desperate. In addition, Honorable Demirel has stopped beneficial investments and has opened Turkey to Western goods, to foreign capital. We are thus returning to the age of assembling parts and making sodapop in industry. There is a regression toward a colonial type of suffering. This cannot be called development. I would also like to point out another important issue. Demirel has eliminated the Turkish middle class and is preparing the ground for communism because the middle class has become poor as a result of the economic measures. Now it is clear why communists in Turkey wanted Demirel to come to power and to become stronger. What he is doing is not gambling, but suicide, because in gambling one has the chance of winning, whereas the measures taken in accordance with the IMF's orders can only lead to disaster. [end recording]

Erbakan said that he will reply to questions on whether or not the NSP will continue to support the government during a news conference he will hold on 13 February. He concluded by saying that given the present prices, the minimum wage must be 100,000 lira for a family with four children.

Further Details

TA061921 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 6 Feb 80 TA

[Excerpts] National Salvation Party [NSP] leader Necmettin Erbakan has said that the government made the recent economic decisions upon the orders of the IMF and that with these decisions millions of citizens with limited incomes have been condemned to starvation, poverty, shortages and famine. Erbakan held a news conference at the parliament today and described the recent economic decisions as a great disaster. Speaking at the news conference Erbakan said:

[Begin Erbakan recording] I would like to ask the following question in order to clarify what Demirel has done. Demirel claims the following: Had we raised the value of the dollar to 56 lira, in other words, had we determined the exchange rate for the dollar as 56 lira, it would have been sufficient. However, I am a very brave man so I have devalued the Turkish lira more, making the exchange rate for the dollar 70 lira. That is what he says. Would not one ask the question: Since it was possible to secure foreign currency with an exchange rate of 56 and since the exchange rate would have been determined as 70 why did you [Demirel] not secure foreign currency at 56 and then make a further devaluation? Why did you enable the Tahtakale [a business district in Istanbul] people to earn millions? We are obliged to ask Demirel another question: How does he do his bookkeeping? He claims he will import goods worth 7 billion [presumably lira]. He says he will pay 5 billion for mazut and oil. Two billion is needed also for the interest payments on foreign debts and installments. If we add to this the 1979 oil debts and the oil purchases which we have to pay immediately, his accounts show that he has to secure 15 billion in foreign loans. What kind of accounting is this, my honorable friends? For years Demirel has been praised as a man of finances. What kind of finances is he managing? My honorable friends, I ask: If you need so much money in foreign loans then why are you supporting Israel? Why have you announced that you will not abide by the resolutions of the Islamic conference? Why are you tarnishing our relations with Islamic countries? We should secure our loan and oil needs from brotherly Islamic countries. [end recording]

AUSTRIA

DEFENSE MINISTRY, GENERAL REACT TO PRAVDA ARTICLE

AU061244 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 6 Feb 80 AU

[Text] Soviet Union: The party organ PRAVDA has reaffirmed the USSR's disapproving attitude toward equipping the Austrian Federal Army with rockets and has attacked in this context General Kuntner, the chief of the [Austria] National Defense Academy. The reason for this was various statements by Kuntner, who had repeatedly endorsed the view that equipping the army with rockets would not conflict with the state treaty stipulations. PRAVDA now states that the rocket question was answered for Austria with extreme clarity by the state treaty; nevertheless, certain political quarters attempt now and again to suggest that Austria and its army can no longer do without modern rockets.

Austria: The Defense Ministry stated in this context that there is no need for a comment on the PRAVDA article because Minister Roesch has repeatedly pointed out in the past that he does not intend to make any attempt to alter the state treaty.

General Kuntner has stated that he has never maintained that an alteration of the state treaty was necessary. Rather, he had tried to sound out article 13 of the state treaty. The head of National Defense Academy underscored that in the discussion one must break with the term rockets and he has once more endorsed the need for better combat field weapons for the Austrian Federal Army. He stressed the population's concern for the young Austrian soldiers in the event of an emergency.

NETHERLANDS

FOREIGN MINISTER ARGUES BOYCOTT CASE IN PARLIAMENT

LD060907 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 31 Jan 80 p 1 LD

[Diplomatic correspondent report: "East-West Dialog Must Continue"]

[Excerpts] The Hague, 31 January--The military occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union and the arrest and deportation of Russian human rights movement leader Sakharov are violations of international law. However, it is extremely important to continue dialog. Therefore, the second security conference in Madrid this fall must go ahead as planned, as must the various arms limitation negotiations between East and West.

[Dutch Foreign] Minister Van der Klaauw explained that this morning in his reply to the second chamber during the debate on the question of boycotting the Olympic games. The minister said that President Carter's decision to postpone ratification of SALT II is understandable, since the chance of the agreement being rejected had increased under the circumstances. He did not share the view expressed by Democrats '66 yesterday evening that President Carter's decision was an overreaction. "Postponement does not mean cancellation. The U.S. Government still regards SALT II as an important agreement because of the possibility for further limitations of nuclear weapons," Van der Klaauw said.

According to him, recent events in the Soviet Union are in clear opposition to all that was agreed in Helsinki and signed by the Soviet Government there. The minister illustrated this point by reading the relevant passage in the Final Act on respect for human rights and basic freedom. The minister said that the government's stand on a boycott of the Olympic games could only be altered if there were "a clearly more favorable picture" regarding both Afghanistan and Sakharov.

The government advised a boycott of the Moscow Olympic games immediately after the arrest and internal exile of Sakharov.

PORTUGAL'S AMARAL DISCUSSES EEC INTEGRATION IN BRUSSELS

LD062306 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1930 GMT 6 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] Portuguese Foreign Minister Freitas do Amaral is in Brussels to take yet another step toward the materialization of what he describes as the topmost priority of his government, namely, Portugal's integration in the EEC. Here is a report by our correspondent Mario Sampaio:

The 2 days of intense work which Freitas do Amaral has gone through in Brussels may well have been a psychological boost in the negotiations between our country and the EEC since due to the recent political developments in Portugal these negotiations were showing a tendency to drag on. One could sum up Freitas do Amaral's visit by saying that it was divided into two parts: The first consisted mainly of contacts with the EEC Commission, including its president Roy Jenkins, and Lorenzo Natali, in charge of problems connected with EEC enlargement. Prof Freitas do Amaral also had contacts with the remaining ministers of the other EEC member countries.

Pursuant to these contacts, the following timetable for Portugal's entry was agreed upon: definition and analysis of the relevant problems to be concluded by the end of this year; signing of membership agreements to take place in the middle of next year; and another year or 18 months for the agreements to be ratified by the member countries. The likely date for our country to become an EEC member will be 1 January 1983.

Prof Freitas do Amaral also had the opportunity to assure the EEC that Portugal's EEC membership is the topmost priority--according to his own words--of Portugal's foreign policy. It was also agreed that Lorenzo Natali will visit Portugal in the middle of this year.

The second part of Freitas do Amaral's visit consisted of a meeting with the Portuguese ambassadors accredited to the various EEC member countries, as well as to Greece and Spain. Following this meeting, the Portuguese ambassadors were given explicit instructions to give top priority to this matter in the course of their duties. Here are some statements by Prof Freitas do Amaral himself:

[Begin Amaral recording] I was gratified to note that the EEC Council of Ministers decided to speed up the implementation of the financial protocol signed with Portugal in 1976 which ultimately amounts to the granting of greater credit facilities by the European Investment Bank for promoting the development of the Portuguese economy. This in itself is already a guarantee and a commitment on the part of the EEC to the process of Portugal's development, and proves that the EEC is prepared not only to conduct a negotiation process envisaging Portugal's integration into something that already exists, but also to develop a parallel process of economic and financial aid from the European countries to Portugal therefore enabling our country to improve its well-being and standards of living and to integrate itself in the best possible conditions in the European economic and political area. [end recording]

USSR ENVOY TO GDR CRITICIZES BONN'S BERLIN POLICIES

For the text of the Fritz Pleitgen interview with Petr Abrasimov, USSR ambassador to the GDR and CPSU Central Committee member, in East Berlin, carried on the Cologne WDF Regional Television Network on 6 February, see the World & Regional Issues section of the 8 February Soviet Union DAILY REPORT.

Government, Opposition Reply

LD071508 Hamburg DPA in German 1427 GMT 07 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Both the Federal Government and the CDU/CSU opposition today rejected the criticism of Bonn's Berlin policies by the Soviet Ambassador in the GDR, Petr Abrasimov. "We are interested in having political calm in Berlin, and we behave accordingly," Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling replied to Abrasimov's charge that the Federal Republic and the West Berlin Senat had made many attempts to "interpret the Berlin agreement more than arbitrarily, to circumvent it or even to violate it grossly." Boelling emphasised that, as in the past, Bonn did "not want to disturb the principle" that the four-power agreement had to be adhered to strictly and fully implemented.

Meanwhile, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has confirmed to Moscow his readiness for a visit to the Soviet Union, planned for this year. Boelling said in an NDR [Norddeutscher Rundfunk] interview on yesterday's meeting between Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko and Bonn's ambassador in Moscow, Hans-Georg Wieck, that one could assume that the ambassador had once again submitted the idea that Schmidt was available for a meeting at the very time when the responsible leaders in East and West ought to talk with each other about the reduction of tensions and the prevention of a further escalation.

Boelling gave no details about the meeting between Wieck and Gromyko, which took place at the former's request. Bonn observers assume that the German-French declaration following the Paris summit was explained to Moscow at the same time. Schmidt and Giscard had demanded in the declaration that Moscow should create the prerequisites for further successes in the policy of detente by withdrawing troops from Afghanistan.

The West Berlin Senat "resolutely" rejected Abrasimov's charge that the Federal Government and the Senat interpreted the Quadripartite Agreement more than arbitrarily. Senat Spokesman Hermann Meyn said that such a charge in this matter was "wholly and totally unjustified." Meyn emphasized that the Senat had never questioned the importance of the Quadripartite Agreement for detente in Europe and for improving the situation in and around Berlin. If the Soviet ambassador in the GDR spoke of an overall positive result of the practical application of the agreement, this met with the Senat's approval. Berlin CDU Group Chairman Heinrich Lummer said that Abrasimov's charges were unjustified and had the clear aim of again diverting attention from the many "violations and twisting of treaties" by the Soviet Union and the GDR and also from the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The CDU/CSU spokesman for German affairs, Manfred Abelein, described Abrasimov's criticism as "pure fabrication." It was clear that the purpose of his claims was to "give himself phony authority for possible pressure against Berlin." Together with the Western protecting powers, the Federal Government must make it unmistakably clear to the Soviet Union that any kind of attacks against Berlin's viability would provoke a dangerous situation. Ekkehard Voigt (CSU) said that the Soviet Union had delivered through Abrasimov another kick against the government after canceling a number of visits from the East and had made it clear that it was hoping in vain for "partial detente."

Deputy FDP Bundestag Leader Hans-Guenter Hoppe said that the charges made by the Soviet ambassador were without foundation and must be rejected. If there had been unilateral changes in Berlin's status, it had come from East Berlin. Hoppe, on the other hand, stressed "with pleasure" Abrasimov's assessment that the Berlin agreement must remain "crisis proof" also during international political turbulences.

In Boelling's words, the Federal Government cannot understand why Abrasimov was creating the impression that there were grounds for concern about the situation in Berlin. Boelling pointed out that during Gromyko's visit to Bonn at the end of last year, in talks with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and the chancellor, the positive effect of the Berlin agreement was noted unanimously and that there had been no mention of concern about Berlin.

Regarding Abrasimov's statement in the television interview last night on the East-West relationship, the government spokesman said that the ambassador, "in dealing somewhat nonchalantly with the facts," had said that the Europeans were collecting fuel for the fire with slavish obedience. Boelling said that "this is a formulation which really cannot be justified by the facts." Bonn had repeatedly made the expectation clear, as in the recent German-French declaration, and together with its allies, that the Soviet Union must follow its words with deeds and withdraw from Afghanistan.

Press Comment

DW080947 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German 0605 GMT 8 Feb 80 DW

[Press review on statements by USSR Ambassador to the GDR Petr Abrasimov]

[Text] BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG states: For the second time in a week a high-ranking Soviet diplomat has mentioned the Berlin agreement and thus the special situation of the divided city. While Valentin Falin recently warned against burdens, his colleage Petr Abrasimov went a step further, speaking of Bonn's attempts to arbitrarily interpret the Berlin agreement or even grossly violate it. Not one plausible reason exists for the Kremlin to launch such an attack, but from a Soviet point of view it is always good, depending on the political weather, to point to Berlin as a possible hotbed of danger. Bonn and the parties have sharply reacted because the Soviet maneuver is too transparent.

KIELER NACHRICHTEN notes: The Soviet Union obviously believes it can break up the Western front by threatening its sensitive point; Berlin. The interview given by Moscow's ambassador to the GDR is more than a maneuver aimed at distracting attention from the worldwide condemnation of its aggressive policy; it signals much rather a continuation of actions that are hostile to detente. The timing and the place of this Kremlin statement, made through the mouth of the ambassador, are important: Immediately following the Paris meeting between Schmidt and Giscard, which President Carter considered as evidence of solidarity, as did Germany, which must fear most for Berlin, that typically Soviet forward flight demonstrates the sensitivity of the Soviets toward worldwide reactions and how insecure they have become. Now the West must remain firm.

KOELNISCHR RUNDSCHAU stresses: It would call for too much optimism to consider the interview by Soviet Ambassador Abrasimov as a sign that Moscow wants to give in. The interview has certainly given a signal, but it is not a peace flag. What Abrasimov said belongs to the instruments of Soviet politics such as threats, baits, intimidations and noncommittal phrases. One could interpret it quite simply as follows: We Soviets are for every dialog if the West does not close the arms gap, and we shall determine what topic we will discuss.

By the way, we still have West Berlin as a lever to intimidate the Federal Republic of Germany. The man from Moscow wanted to drive a wedge between Europe and the United States with his interview. That attempt is probably the result of a misinterpretation of the Paris summit between Schmidt and Giscard.

BERLINER MORGENPOST notes: If the statements by TASS, APN and Abrasimov in the past 24 hours represent the Kremlin's answer to the German-French statement on the connection between Afghanistan and detente, the loss of a sense of reality on the Moskva River is terrifying. But if the Soviets, as one has the right to expect, plan to deal seriously with the Paris statement, their propagandistic scattering fire seems to be strangely out of place.

APEL, WOERNER DISCUSS EXPANDED NATO ROLE

Apel: 'No Extension'

DW080930 Baden Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1830 GMT 6 Feb 80 DW

[Statement by Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel in the program "Focal Point"; place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Unidentified announcer] Apel does not want to hear of NATO, and thus also the Bundeswehr, possibly taking over some sort of fire brigade function in the Persian Gulf, if oil or other raw material reserves are threatened.

[Apel] That is not a subject for debate at all. NATO's treaty area has been clearly defined. The defense mission of the Bundeswehr has been described definitely and finally by the Basic Law. We do not intend to extend NATO's area or set up a NATO fire brigade. I am convinced, by the way, that the governments of these countries would object to becoming a quasi-protectorate in this way, a military area of the North Atlantic community.

Politicians in the Federal Republic who argue for that are arguing foolishly; they are arguing, by the way, against our own interests because it is a matter of containing the expansion of Soviet influence, not of producing arguments that might be harmful to the Western states.

We must carry out our task here in central Europe to maintain the defense capability of the North Atlantic pact. The Bundeswehr here in Europe plays an important, if not central, role. We will, as before, live up to that task by improving our equipment and training, doing everything that is necessary. There are no plans to take on any Bundeswehr mission going beyond that unless the opinion-forming process, which has not yet come to an end, calls for new tasks for the West European allies in this or that place here in Europe and nowhere else. This would then have to be jointly considered, examined and agreed. Presently, however, there are no such plans that are anything but speculative.

In the past 10 years we have increased our defense expenditures by about 3 percent every year in real terms, that is after allowing for inflation. By doing this we are alone at the top of the Western alliance. Most NATO partners in the past decade have not similarly increased their defense capability. I am therefore very much opposed to people pointing and asking: Where is your real 3 percent for 1980?

I would ask you, by the way, to look at realities. Realities are as follows:

A--Most substantial military and economic aid for Turkey is in preparation. It will contribute to defense capability.

B--The federal finance minister will have to reimburse us at least for the increased fuel costs in 1980. If one adds all that up we will be very close to the real 3 percent goal. I would very much like to know, by the way, who wants to compete with us in our plan to spend more than 30 percent of our defense expenditures for arms and equipment. We are very well off in this respect.

Woerner: 'Broader Definition'

DW080931 Baden Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1830 GMT 6 Feb 80 DW

[Statement by CDU military expert Manfred Woerner in the program "Focal Point," place not given--recorded]

[Text] The interests and tasks of NATO certainly need to be redefined. This does not mean that the area of the treaty must be extended to guarantee protection for all Mideast states. We could not do that. It also does not mean that we ought to, or must, send the Bundeswehr there. It means we must realize that our security does not merely depend on military defense, but on a safeguarded raw materials supply. This again means that we must understand that the hazards for this security lie outside the actual treaty area of NATO; NATO cannot ignore that.

NATO is more than a military defense alliance. It is a community of fate for the Western world. It must define more broadly its security and the measures to safeguard that security, more broadly than has been the case so far. A common and far-reaching Western strategy must be coordinated.

The West must make greater efforts financially, politically, economically and militarily to hold the Soviet Union within limits. If the West will do that, nobody need be afraid of war. The Americans are obviously determined to do something here. Europe will have to face some tasks also, not so much in this region though. That will be done by the Americans and maybe a bit also by the British, but in exchange we will have to take over some other things in Europe.

We cannot avoid an increase in the defense budget. If the defense minister does not admit that, or even contests it, he will be deluding the people once again. Every one of us knows that the Americans will not carry the burdens alone.

BOURGES DENIES PARTICIPATION IN MECCA MOSQUE STORMING

NC081101 Paris AFP in English 1042 GMT 5 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Feb 8. (AFP)--French Defence Minister Yvon Bourges today denied that French military experts had taken part in the storming of the Great Mosque at Mecca last November by Saudi Arabian security forces.

Replying to questions by opposition M.P.'s following recent reports that France's special intervention force had helped the Saudi troops, Mr Bourges said that a French military mission for technical assistance under the command of a general had a permanent link to the Saudi forces.

Their aid, established several years ago under an agreement for training of personnel and maintenance of equipment, was supplied either by personnel assigned to Saudi Arabia or by temporary missions, Mr Bourges said. This aid, he stressed, excluded any intervention in war operations or maintenance of order.

The questions to Mr Bourges followed reports in the magazine LE POINT that members of the special intervention force of the National Gendarmerie, which is under army control, had aided the Saudis to recapture the Mecca mosque after it had been taken over by guerrillas.

GISCARD ON FRANCO-GERMAN STATEMENT, RULES OUT SANCTIONS

LD071357 Paris LE MONDE in French 7 Feb 80 p 3 LD

[Unattributed report: "Mr Giscard d'Estaing: Dialog With the USSR Will Be Continued"]

[Text] Commenting on the Franco-German statement issued on Tuesday, 5 February, Mr Giscard d'Estaing said in particular:

"This statement is entirely in keeping with the line we have taken since the present aggravation of the international situation began; in other words it indicates the unacceptable nature of certain interventions and actions, and it also indicates our desire to seek ways of preserving the achievements of recent years regarding peace and the continuation of detente...."

"Until now two major voices have been heard in the world, the United States and the Soviet Union, and other countries were only expected to voice their opinions in relation to those two....It is important to show that the European powers have special responsibilities...because they exist as powers, because they have a major and growing economic and political capacity...and because they have special concerns about the preservation of peace...."

"We belong to an alliance should there be an overseas confrontation....But it is precisely to prevent such an overseas confrontation that we must make efforts and take initiatives....The cause of the tension lies in the circumstances in which the Soviet Union is reacing to the UN resolutions on this point. We think it is important to maintain a dialog with the Soviet Union--this dialog enabling us to define the means and conditions for withdrawal...."

"Detente is indivisible. We have always been convinced that detente is a global affair.... On the other hand, it has to be noted that there are problems which are specific to Europe and that the balance of security forces in Europe in particular is a problem in itself..."

Limits Indicated With Precision

"It is important that each of the great protagonists in international affairs should know precisely what it must take into account in making future decision. It is very important that the Soviet Union shouldknow in advance how the main European and world powers would react to certain initiatives it might envisage taking....We have indicated these limits very precisely in our diplomatic contacts with the USSR. On the other hand, seeing that these limits have not been overstepped, it is legitimate to seek ways and conditions which might end the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan...The Soviets have explained the reasons they are giving for their intervention in Afghanistan both directly and by diplomatic contacts. In doing so they expressed their intention of withdrawing their forces....We must take up this argument and draw up ways and conditions for effecting this withdrawal. If it appears necessary for this withdrawal to be accompanied by consideration of the broader problems relating to the region's security and stability and in particular of the guarantees which should be given to insure that this region really has a secure and stable situation, talks could be held on this subject....We must, and will, pursue dialog."

"The Soviet intervention was considered at length by the Soviet authorities. They must assess the answer which must be given on the basis of international reactions and the indications we have given."

"France has no intention of changing its relations with the Atlantic organization.... France has always been a member of the Atlantic alliance....This is not open to discussion....The object of this alliance is that it should come into play when circumstances call for the alliance pledges to be implemented. I would like to recall in this context that if international tension should lead to a situation which brought the terms of the alliance into play, France....would of course keep its promises. On the other hand, France's foreign policy includes French international action that has always been characterized by the desire for independence and by the search for solutions suited to the circumstances of the moment....It is this independent policy which now leads France to seek ways of reducing international tension."

"Our objective is to reduce tension. This approach is different from the sanctions approach, which implies that no reduction of tension is expected.... Such an approach can even have the opposite effect since experience shows that when faced with sanctions, countries are forced to cling firmly to their stance and not to try to find a solution. That is why France's approach is one of trying to find ways and conditions for a withdrawal....So far talks have not produced any positive signs....On the other hand it is significant that they have taken place, enabling analyses of the situation to be exchanged."

"As soon as tension begins to increase between the superpowers there is a danger of confrontation....However, I believe that action can be taken to reduce the tension, and it is this possibility that we are now exploring."

Preventing a Revival of the Blocs

"Chancellor Schmidt intends to go ahead with talks already planned in principle with the Soviet Union. There is no timetable....but Germany is determined to go ahead."

Questioned on the possibility of convening a quadripartite summit (United States, France, FRG and Britain) like the one held in Guadeloupe in January 1979, the president replied:

"We are trying to avoid anything which leads to or encourages a revival of the blocs. I am convinced that if there is an extension of the division of the world into blocs, there will be a parallel increase in international tension and the means of expressing and implementing France's independent policy will vanish....I am surprised at some people's persistent but unsuccessful efforts to push us toward alinement with some other country's ideas, in other words the rebuilding of the bloc system, which both increases tension and destroys French foreign policy's margin for maneuver and influence. We will not support or join in anything which might lead to such a situation. It is legitimate to have consultations and to exchange information, and this could be considered at various levels. Any meeting, however, which would show a bloc stance in the current situation will not be attended by France."

According to Mr Giscard d'Estaing there is "continuity....but there are also differences" between the recent Franco-Indian declaration and the Franco-German declaration that stem from different "areas of concern" and, in particular, from the fact that India does not belong to the Atlantic alliance.

MINISTERS DISCUSS OPTIONS IN STRATEGIC ARMS PROGRAM

LD081100 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 8 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The cold war insures that national defense remains pertinent, whether or not the American nuclear umbrella is punctured or Russian missiles are beligerent or peaceful. The future of French stratetic forces was discussed yesterday during an interministerial meeting at the Elysee. The strike force will be modernized for the eighties and nineties. To succedd the Mirage-4 and surface-to-surface missiles of the Plateau d'Albion, there will be new cruise missiles and mobile missiles and all the armaments on a new missile-launching nuclear submarine, the Inflexible, which will leave the Cherbourg yards in 5 years' time. In short, France is strengthening its nuclear cover with new weapons. This is explained by defense specialist (Patric Mercillon).

[Begin recording]: The first weapon is familiar. It is the submarine Inflexible, commissioned in 1978 and due to enter service in 1985. The second solution is the cruise missile, similar to what is already being developed by the Americans. There is another possibility, called the surface-to-surface mobile ballistic missile, which means that it is never known where this missile is on national territory. Regarding tactical nuclear weapons, there is a choice between developing a super-Pluton and a medium-range air-to-ground missile, called the ASMP, which would be launched by plane. Finally, the French have long been studying with the greatest secrecy what are called neutron bombs. Thus, as you see, the technology is ready. It only remains to find the political will, and above all, the sinews of war; that is, the financing. (end recording]

CHABAN-DELMAS REVEALS DETAILS OF CONVERSATION WITH BREZHNEV

LD071137 Paris LE FIGARO in French 6 Feb 80 pp 1, 7 LD

[Marcel Jullian report on conversation with French National Assembly President Jacques Chaban-Delmas: "Chaban: What Brezhnev told me"--date and place of conversation not specified]

[Text] So, Jacques Chaban-Delmas arrived in Moscow for an 8-day visit: 2 days in the capital for political talks, 2 days in Baku, Bordeaux's twin city, 2 days in Leningrad--the Russia of Peter the Great--2 more days of concluding meetings and assessment in Moscow. It was indeed Jacques Chaban-Delmas, former companion of the battle of the Brown night [presumably a reference to his role in the Resistance against Nazi Germany] and holder of the invisible certificate of the battles of secrecy and defiance, who was received. But the welcoming honors were rendered to the National Assembly president.

[Chaban-Delmas begins] "I went there after carefully assessing the risks and needs. If I failed it would be a personal failure. If I succeeded in any way at all it would be to France's credit. Rejecting dialog is advocating cold war and hence opting for the apocalypse."

An unfortunate gaffe on his departure from Orly: "Carter has misfired with regard to the Olympic games" travelled faster on the teletype than the Ilyushin could fly and was there in Moscow before him. Chaban took care to explain his remark clearly: Respect for alliances, firm convictions, being loyal to your camp without being alined. In the very first unavoidable and essential clash on Afghanistan he said to his Soviet colleague:

"Viewed from Paris it looks very much like occupation."

That expression did not please anybody. It was immediately reported to the highest level. That same afternoon, when he met with Brezhnev, Chaban-Delmas was treated to the sermon on the mount. It is easy to picture the Soviet number one, weakened by illness, ponderous and delicate, weighed down by the vastness of Russia and, furthermore, by the mass of successors already in line to replace him. He went right back into the past..He went to the costumes museum and brought out Catherine's [Catherine the Great] riding habit, Ivan the Terrible's sword and Moscow Cathedral's cross. Afthanistan has always been Russia's Roman border to the south. This has always been true. "We had a friendly government leader there as always. We were wrong not to send him troops when he requested them. He was killed and replaced by another whose brother secretly negotiated with the Americans, who were encouraging rebellion from Pakistan. We had to send in tanks just before the coup d'etat which was to have made Kabul fall into the opposing camp."

"This is a blow below the belt by Carter!"

The old man of the Kremlin gazed into the eyes of the pilgrim from the Western world. Potentates can sometimes look like honest bakers. It all depends on the iris and the time. He said:

"I am looking you in the eye."

The thunder rolled and the Russian land trembled. "We will never give way on Afghanistan. We will withdraw our troops as soon as possible, as soon as the government is firmly installed. Our borders, our fortress had been undermined." All past grievances came out against SALT II, the SS-20 missiles, the Pershing-2 missiles, the Soviet brigade installed in Cuba since 1962 and which they [the U.S.] pretended to rediscover in 1979, the whole accumulation of bitterness, the collection of mutual lies.

"When we left Havana the entire world press, on orders from the United States, spoke of defeat. The truth, which was concealed, was that we had agreed on an exchange: the Cuban missiles in exchange for the missiles in Turkey and Korea...."

And finally, you might say wounded, Brezhnev concluded, referring to the grain embargo imposed by rich America:

"And yesterday he denied us a morsel of bread."

In passing, a quip by a crowned tsar who came from the people:

"The SALT II agreements gave us no satisfaction. They have been signed, to balance our own budget, not to insure a world nuclear balance."

Now it is the guest's turn to speak. He steers on an opposite course and rewinds in the opposite direction the thread of the conversation which has so far been a monologue. He looks the Russian straight in the eye:

"I am looking you in the eye."

What he has to say is simple and yet unbelievable. Two distrustful and frightened blocs, one leading or calling back the other, two dinosaurs who move only at their contact points, lean against each other and play at being motionless. The Frenchman launches out:

"I fully realize that although what I have to tell you is difficult to believe, you will believe me. What I want to say is that you will have no doubts, that I will not deceive you. What you call a blow below the belt is merely an error in assessment. I know this because I have just returned from Washington. I am stating this positively. This is absolutely true, and Carter also knows this."

How can you convince an antediluvian that the present moment exists? As far back as any deportee to Siberia can remember no one has ever seen a Beria die. Brezhnev listens. Perhaps a rapidly mastered current runs through some part of one of those coldblooded animals--those political giants:

"People who attribute to us designs with respect to Yugoslavia or Pakistan are lying. They are lying."

Torn between its legendary secular expansion drift and its new dread of the dual Sino-American peril, Russia pretends to believe that it is threatened and, therefore, betrayed. Russia offers Sakharov something worse than prison--which means, de rigueur, horror and glory--namely a gilded cage in Gorkiy. Russia behaves in the least objectionable way possible within the framework of its completely unacceptable legality. Jacques Chaban-Delmas cut his visit short. Farewell Baku, goodby St Petersburg....a dignified departure without any door banging but without acceptance either.

There remains in the West, on the other side of oceans, Columbus' America, also huge, as generous as it is clumsy, a beacon of civilizations without culture, ennobled by its immigrants, a symbol of domestic arts, of the CIA and also of the "Underground," with its campuses, its dollars and its squirrels which, like a prominent boxing champion who has received too many blows, at first friendly but later intolerable, suddenly puts up its guard and feels like hitting out.

Hope for peace now only depends on continued contact between two rhinoceroses caught in the same swamp. There is a bird--called the devil bird if I am not mistaken--a kind of opecker, which can, I believe, fly from one to the other. This is called man's destiny.

MARCHAIS ALLEGED TO HAVE ALTERED PS-CPSU COMMUNIQUE TEXT

LD081101 Paris LE MATIN in French 26-27 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Editorial: "The Three Passages Which Marchais Has Latered"--capitalized words appeared in Roman type]

[Text] We present here the differences between the text read by Georges Marchais on television and the official 1975 Socialist Party-CPSU communique. Words altered appear in Roman type. It will be noticed that most of the alterations made by Georges Marchais on television tend to emphasize the Socialists' positive assessment of Soviet policy.

First--text read by Georges Marchais: "Socialist Party representatives noted the HAPPY development of the USSR along the socialist path, an increase in the prosperity of the Soviet people and achievements by Soviet workers in the economic, social, cultural and scientific spheres."

The communique states: "French Socialist Party representatives noted progress achieved by the USSR along the socialist path, IN ACCORDANCE WITH CPSU PLANS AND CONCEPTS (the rest without change).

Second--text read by Marchais: "The French Socialist Party delegation NOTED THE GREAT constructive contribution made by the USSR toward international detente."

The communique states: "The Socialist Party delegation EXPRESSED ITS APPRECIATION of the Soviet Union's constructive contribution toward the development of international detente."

Third--text read by Marchais: "The two delegations take note that the reactionary and imperialist forces are continuing their efforts to revive the cold war spirit, ARE BUILDING UP THEIR ARMAMENTS AND ARE INTERFERING IN THE AFFAIRS OF OTHER PEOPLES AND COUNTRIES."

The communique states: "The two delegations take note that imperialists and reactionaries are pursuing their attempts to revive the 'cold war' spirit."

PCF DISSIDENT ANALYZES MOTIVES FOR BACKING CPSU

LD071639 [Editorial Report LD] Paris LE MATIN in French on 23 January, 1980, carries on page 6 a 1,300-word article by a PCF Central Committee official writing under the pseudonym Marc Ribas. The author strongly criticizes the PCF leadership's present line, in particular the recent rapprochment with Moscow, and analyzes the reasons for this change of course:

"After giving unconditional support to their military expedition in Afghanistan, Georges Marchais went to the Kremlin to receive the blessing of the leaders of the 'great fraternal party.'"

The article continues: "At the same time, by deliverately sparking off a vast anticommunist campaign, the party leadership is trying to rally the militants behind it on the pretext of 'party spirit'." The article concludes: "The party leadership...intends artificially to recreate the cold war climate which for more than 10 years enabled it to turn the combativeness of sincere Communist militants and millions of manual and intellectual workers into a simple and very clumsy defense of the USSR and the CPSU, painted as besieged fortresses."

CFDT'S MAIRE VOICES 'DEEP DISQUIET' OVER PCF, CGT

LD071511 Paris LE MONDE in French 30 Jan 80 p 6 LD

[Unattributed report: "Edmond Maire States: 'The CGT's Attitude Toward the Invasion Is a Fundamental Obstacle to Trade Union Actions'"]

[Text] "We are not going to become apolitical by separating trade union activity from action on freedom," Edmond Maire, French Democratic Confederation of Labor (CFDT) secretary general, said on 28 January in reply to a question on the political aspect of his statement on Afghanistan, the PCF, the CGT and Soviet communism. For Edmond Maire, "The CGT's attitude on Afghanistan is a fundamental obstacle to trade union action--I emphasize trade union. There can be no confidence in trade union action if there is no political outlook and if union members deviate in the defense of freedoms."

Questioned on the part of his speech where he listed questions that French citizens should be asking about PCF participation in a government of the left, Maire indicated that it was a question of "expressing French opinion in order to take account of it ourselves. The present PCF stand (on Afghanistan) brings a muffled threat to freedom" if its representatives here to come to power. "But it is not up to the CFDT to draw the appropriate conclusions on the political plane.

"Even if the PCF leaders' position changes--and we can contribute there--it will take years to overcome the deep disquiet which hangs and will continue to hang over their statements relating to their deeper orientations."

Having resolved to tell "its" truth on these issues, the CFDT is going to distribute millions of pamphlets entitled: "Act for Peace, Freedom and our Demands."

This intention to speak plainly does not only concern the political differences with the CGT. The CFDT leaders stressed the "enormous difficulties raised by the CGT to the united action announced in September 1979.

A Stern "General Resolution"

The CFDT National Council's "general resolution" could not be sterner: "It must be recognized that the planned interconfederation course of action has not been as broad as expected." And if, as the CFDT explains, "these obstacles and difficulties are largely due to the double game played by government and the bosses," it affirms at the same time that "the obstacles also stem from the increasingly frequent interunion confrontations in the field, especially from the CGT." The resolution goes still further: "The CGT's intolerance and often unilateral or even hegemonist behavior, particularly in industry, noisily transmitted and supported by the PCF(...) destroys united action, on occasions rendering it impossible."

Commenting on this resolution, E. Maire affirmed: "We feel that the CGT's criticisms of us show its wish to shatter united action with the CFDT," and he added this was "a political wish to transpose political differences to the trade union plane."

L'HUMANITE Rebuttal

LD071027 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 Jan 80 pp 1,3 LD

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "From General Haig to Edmond Maire"]

[Text] It is a long time since certain trade union leaders tried to prove that anti-communism was a major virtue. But National Education Federation Secretary Andre Henry, who accused the PCF of "disappointing the working peoples' hopes," has recently started an escalation. Similarly, Edmond Marie's statement on Afghanistan: "The public believes that the current PCF stance raises a muted threat to freedom if its representatives come to power."

Not content, therefore, to resume the right's traditional charges against us, E. Maire is prolonging the U.S. leadership's campaign against communist participation in European government which dates from the time of the joint program.

One recalls General Haig's threatening warnings as NATO commander in chief in January 1976: "I will not accept Marxists in government.... We must face up to this challenge."

It was Kissinger's turn in January 1978 to denounce the dangers of Eurocommunism and to speak out against the PCI's coming to power. At the same time, General Haig, the State Department and President Carter were doing it again. A few days ago Richard Gardner, U.S. ambassador in Rome, was anxious to state categorically: "The United States is opposed to PCI participation in government."

Edmond Maire, too, takes up General Haig's challenge in his own, more sanctimonious way, but he does so nevertheless: "If the PCF came to power, it would be a threat to freedom."

This act of faith sheds light on why the French Democratic Confederation of Labor (CFDT) secretary was long hostile to the joint program, which he only joined at the last moment, and why he has been on the contrary so quick to bury any union of the left chances for 1981. "It's had it," he declared elegantly. If his dream of pushing the PCF to one side comes about, then the left will indeed have "had it," and the big capitalists will have some fine times ahead.

All this appears as though Edmond Maire were using the pretext of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan to justify dividing the working forces and his own rapprochement with government policy.

What is more, he insists on warning us, he would not change his view of us even if we changed on Afghanistan: It would take years, he says, "to overcome the profound concern which weighs and will continue to weigh on (our) statements about (our) deeper orientations." In other words, that, too, has "had it," and for a long time. It would be better to tolerate the right in power than Giscard's "advanced liberalism."

In support of his dubious cause, E. Maire is quick to accuse me of resuming in L'HUMANITE in my turn "the theme of the revolutionaries' necessary preventive intervention, the preventive war as it were," even though I developed the opposing idea in my 14 January editorial. Notwithstanding our differences, perhaps I could ask him to demonstrate a little honesty in the debate. That would be a change for him.

Most striking in his attitude is the difference between his final judgment against us and the almost total indulgence toward the U.S. leaders abroad and his Socialist comrades at home.

It is curious, nonetheless, that he has unreservedly rejoined a party whose role in the Algerian war is well known. But perhaps E. Maire believes that his new friends have always defended freedoms, in his own words "both large and small," over there.

Curious, too, that his serenity toward the Soviets should be blended with so much levity toward, if not understanding of U.S. military interventions. Well? Seven million tons of bombs dropped on Vietnam, 40,000 "Marines" in Santo Domingo, Chile and Guatemala, all that is forgotten, written off? So well forgotten that Maire's political friends can cite NATO and General Haig to defend European security and human rights.

Undoubtedly, Edmond Maire is entitled to differ with us on Afghanistan. But it is our right to tell him that his attacks on us are going too far, and to hold the belief that his anticommunist escalation does not hide his retreat in the class struggle. In the name of anticommunism and centerism the CFDT leaders are gradually rejecting action in order to create a reformist front including all trade unions except the CGT. Perhaps that will earn them Mr Carter's encouragement, as it earned F. Mitterrand his compliments during the trip to Paris; but it is not in the interests of the French working people.

FREITAS DO AMARAL RETURNS FROM EEC CONSULTATIONS

LD072256 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 7 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] Upon his return from Brussels this afternoon, Foreign Minister Freitas do Amaral said that Portugal will become an EEC member in January 1983 and that the timetable for our country's accession to the Common Market will be fulfilled irrespective of other applicants' own timetables. The foreign minister also said that three meetings which should have already been held in 1978 and 1979 have taken place during his stay in the Belgian capital. Freitas do Amaral added that we are likely to join the EEC before Spain, although this cannot be guaranteed since problems might still arise before the process is completed. In the foreign minister's view, our country's entry in the EEC is the top priority of our foreign policy:

[Begin Freitas do Amaral recording] [Sentence in progress] complex and difficult as regards some specific issues. There will be conflicts of interest to be solved and a compromise will have to be reached in certain specific areas. We shall have to deal with some bureaucratic resistance, both in Lisbon and in Brussels; we shall have to ask for an additional effort on the part of the Portuguese administration and most of the representative economic sectors, as well as the main social forces. We shall have to acquaint public opinion with the entire process of membership, invigorate our diplomacy and, above all, defend with the greatest vigor the interests of the Portuguese economy and all Portuguese.

The government, however, accepts this challenge, aware of the fact that Portugal's European integration is an imperative of utmost national interest which will favor the most appropriate political, economic and cultural framework for the materialization of a new historic destiny for the Portuguese nation. PCP COMMUNIQUE ATTACKS 'IMPERIALIST ANTICOMMUNIST' CAMPAIGN

LD071431 Lisbon AVANTE in Portuguese 31 Jan 80 p 3 LD

[Apparent text of Portuguese Communist Party (PCP) Central Committee 25 January communique: "Imperialism's Anticommunist and Anti-Soviet Campaign and the Events in Afghanistan"]

[Text] 1--Over the last few weeks, under the pretext of the events in Afghanistan, imperialism and international reaction have intensified in an orchestrated manner the anticommunist campaign to increase international tension which had already been observed, especially since the May 1978 NATO summit in Washington.

Campaigns of anticommunist and anti-Soviet slander are not unprecedented. The bogey of the "communist peril" and the "Soviet threat" date back to the triumph of the October 1917 Revolution.

Anticommunism and, in particular, anti-Sovietism always have been and remain imperialism's principal weapon of ideological diversion. What is new and unprecedented during the last few years is the enormous proportions assumed by this campaign.

But imperialism is miscalculating its real chances. As was pointed out at the PCP's ninth congress, we are living in an era when the correlation of forces has ceased to be favorable to imperialism and become favorable to socialism.

The new "cold war" campaigns and measures will eventually turn against their organizers.

2--The shift effected in international relations over the last few years in the direction of detente and peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems constituted a major victory for the progressive and peace-loving forces and opened up new prospects for the victorious development of the peoples' struggle. Imperialism's most reactionary and aggressive circles, which rightly regard detente as an obstacle to their aggressive plans, are seeking to reestablish a "cold war" atmosphere in international relations.

By embarking upon a "positions of strength" policy and practicing blackmail with the threat of nuclear warfare, imperialism is seeking to weaken, split and paralyze the peoples' revolutionary struggle.

The PCP Central Committee emphasizes that detente and peaceful coexistence are both the result of, and a factor in, the revolutionary process, and that the defense of peace, contrary to what the propaganda of imperialism and reaction would have one believe, is indissolubly linked with the peoples' liberation from all forms of exploitation and oppression and the elimination of fascist dictatorships, colonialism, imperialism and racism.

Imperialism's alarmist exaggeration of the dangers of a new world war is characteristic of the present international situation, but the dangers stemming from the adventurist and irresponsible policy of certain imperialist circles are real. These increase with the tremendous accumulation of colossal means of mass destruction in imperialism's arsenals.

The forces of peace and progress are today far more powerful than the forces of reaction and war. Combined action by all the anti-imperialist forces is capable of thwarting imperialism's most warlike plans, defending detente and preventing the unleashing of a nuclear catastrophe. The PCP Central Committee will do everything within its power both nationally and internationally to help unite and mobilize in joint actions all social and political forces interested in defending peace.

3--The unbridled imperialist campaign underway is inseparable from the policy of an arms race and of exacerbating international tension decided on at the May 1978 NATO summit in Washington, a manifestation of which is the imposition by the United States on its NATO partners of the decision to deploy the new cruise and Pershing-2 missiles in Europe. The postponement once more, on the decision of the U.S. President himself, of the ratification of the SALT II agreements between the United States and the USSR and the de facto violation of what had already been agreed in Vienna represent a new and grave obstacle created by imperialism on the path of limiting and reducing nuclear weapons.

The PCP Central Committee believes that the struggle against the arms race and, in particular, against the deployment of new U.S. missiles in Europe, constitutes an essential task of the present time and calls on the working class, the workers and all democrats and peace-loving people to organize further actions to achieve these aims.

4--The arrogance and aggressiveness displayed by imperialism in its unbridled propaganda campaign constitute a sign not of strength but of weakness. They are a manifestation of the crisis in which capitalism is struggling and of its inability to emerge from the period of recession in which it has been plunged since 1973 and to find a solution to the problems of unemployment, inflation and so forth. They serve the interests of the U.S. military-industrial complex, reflect the intensification of the rivalries and contradictions within the imperialist camp itself and make clear the United States' attempts to impose its hegemony on the imperialist camp.

The campaign is aimed at resisting the struggle of the working class and the working masses in the capitalist countries, facilitating the monopolies' policy of exploitation and imposing further sacrifices on the people's masses, strengthening authoritarian and dictatorial trends and covering further attacks against democratic freedoms and workers' rights, and impeding agreement among and joint action by the democratic forces--specifically, communists and socialists--internationally and within each country.

In unmasking these aims of imperialism's campaign, the PCP Central Committee emphasizes the importance of unity on the part of the communist parties and of joint action by the working class and workers in the capitalist countries in the struggle against the monopolies' policy and for democracy, social progress, peace and socialism.

5--The Middle East has long constituted one of the most dangerous hotbeds of tension and war in the world, as a result of the imperialist policy of aggression, oppression and exploitation of resources (primarily oil) and of the adventurist, terrorist and expansionist policy of Israel's Zionist leaders, supported by the United States.

Despite all its difficulties and contradictions, the February 1979 revolution in Iran represented above all the Iranian people's liberation from the shah's cruel dictatorship, an assertion of the anti-imperialist sentiments of the peoples of the region and the destruction of aggressive forward bases of U.S. imperialism, directed against the USSR and the Arab peoples' liberation movement. The CENTO military pact collapsed. The reactionary dictatorships of Saudi Arabia and other Arab countries seem increasingly isolated and vulnerable. The Arab peoples' struggle for the liberation of the Arab territories occupied by Israel, for the recognition of the Palestinian people's national rights and against the Camp David agreements signed by As-Sadat and the Israeli Zionists is achieving major successes and increasing international support, as the Lisbon conference demonstrated. The revolutions aimed at socialism in Democratic Yemen and in Ethiopia are being consolidated.

Under the banner of anticommunism and of the "Soviet peril", imperialism is seeking by all means to stifle the national liberation struggle of the peoples of the Middle East and Southeast Asia, which is conflicting directly with imperialism's interests throughout a vast area of the world regarded by it as being of "vital interest".

The PCP Central Committee warns of the new dangers of the present time, stemming from imperialism's plans, which, under the pretext of the events in Afghanistan, are aimed at setting up new bases for aggression and forming new aggressive politico-military alliances.

The PCP Central Committee draws attention to the setting up by the United States--announced before the events in Afghanistan--of a "quick reaction force" of 110,000 troops, avowedly designed for intervening in the Middle East or anywhere else in the world; to the troop movements in the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf and the threats of an economic blockade and direct military intervention leveled against Iran; to the rapid strengthening of the U.S. bases on Diego Garcia and elsewhere in the Indian Ocean, and in Turkey and Pakistan, as well as in Oman, Somalia and other countries of the region.

Striving to conceal the aggressive and expansionist nature of its policy, imperialism is attributing to others the policy which it is itself practicing.

China's stance on the situation created in Afghanistan confirms the Beijing leaders' alinement with imperialism in the struggle against the socialist camp, the national liberation movement and the progressive and peace-loving forces throughout the world.

The PCP Central Committee denounces the close cooperation between Beijing and Washington, manifested once more in the present situation, and their combined efforts to strengthen the position of the dictatorship in Pakistan as a base for subversion and aggression against Afghanistan, which is transforming the reactionary and militarist Pakistani regime into a threat also to India and other peoples of the region.

At the same time, the PCP Central Committee draws attention to the gravity of the existing situation in Southeast Asia, where the expansionist policy of the Chinese leaders, in concert with imperialism, continues to constitute an immediate threat to the independence, sovereignty and territorial independence of Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea.

6--With the popular revolution of 27 April 1978, the people of Afghanistan achieved freedom and embarked upon the path of radical transformations in the economic, social and cultural fields which dealt a grave blow to the positions of oligarchic, feudal and proimperialist reaction and opened up the real prospect of surmounting the age-old backwardness in which they were plunged, eliminating poverty and illiteracy, resolving complex problems of a national nature and building a free, prosperous and progressive society in their country.

Imperialism and international reaction, deliberately disregarding the treaty of friendship, goodneighborliness and cooperation between the USSR and the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan and the statements by the Afghan and Soviet leaders, pledging that the Soviet troops will withdraw from Afghanistan as soon as the acts of interference, armed interventions and external threats cease, are speaking of Soviet aims of "hegemony" and "expansion" in the Indian Ocean, where, however, the United States has dozens of military bases. The United States is so cynical as to offer to defend Iran from a hypothetical Soviet aggression at the same time as leveling against that country the threat of a direct military intervention.

In analyzing the significance and aims of this large-scale anticommunist and anti-Soviet campaign to confuse and mislead public opinion unleashed by imperialism and international reaction under the pretext of the events in Afghanistan, the PCP Central Committee expresses its solidarity with the people of Afghanistan and the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan and its conviction that they will know how to defend their revolutionary gains against imperialism's conspiracies and aggressions, enjoying the solidary aid of the USSR and of the revolutionary and progressive forces throughout the world.

7--The Sa Carneiro government is not only actively taking part in imperialism's campaign but is also occupying a particularly subservient, extremist and adventurist position in it, violating the Constitution and running directly counter to the interests of the Portuguese people and of national independence.

The rightwing parties' government is seeking to defend and justify its alinement with the stands of imperialism's most reactionary and warlike circles and is attempting to take advantage of imperialism's "cold war" campaign to distract the Portuguese people's attention from the large-scale offensive which it is preparing against democracy through its policy of the destruction of the revolutionary gains of 25 April [1974], to create new obstacles to unity among the democratic forces and to sabotage the new democratic Portugal's relations with the USSR and the other socialist countries.

The PCP Central Committee denounces to the workers and the Portuguese people the reactionary and antipopular nature of the stands adopted by the government under the pretext of the events in Afghanistan and the shameful role of mouthpieces of imperialism adopted by Portuguese radio and television and other state-owned news media. The country's interests and national independence cannot be defended by making anti-Sovietism the cornerstone of foreign policy.

The PCP Central Committee emphasizes that the defense of sovereignty and national independence is inseparable from the diversification of foreign relations and a policy of peace and friendship with all peoples, and calls on Portuguese workers and democrats to oppose resolutely the reactionary parties' attempts to sabotage now, through the government, Portugal's relations with the USSR and the other socialist countries, as well as with the new African and Third World countries, to isolate Portugal again, to subject Portugal wholly to the dictates of NATO and the EEC and to make Portugal an instrument of imperialism's aggressive policy, as did the fascist regime of Salazar and Caetano.

8--The international situation continues to be characterized, on the one hand, by the strengthening of the socialist camp, the development of the struggle of the working class and of the people's masses in the capitalist countries and the progress of the national liberation movement, and, on the other hand, by the deepening of the crisis of capitalism in all its aspects.

The year 1979 was the culmination of a period during which the movement of peoples' national and social emancipation achieved great successes in many countries and regions of the world, including the liberating 25 April revolution in Portugal itself.

The PCP Central Committee expresses its firm conviction that, despite all the difficulties and contradictions and withstanding imperialism's tenacious resistance, world evolution will continue along the path of democracy, national independence, social progress: peace and socialism.

PCE CC ISSUES 'INTERNATIONAL POLICY' RESOLUTION

LD080939 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 5 Feb 80 p 4 LD

[Apparent text of PCE Central Committee resolution: "On International Policy"]

[Text] In view of the extremely grave international situation in which we find ourselves, the Central Committee:

1--Clearly and vigorously asserts that the PCE's revolutionary conception deems it an essential requirement during the present historical period to defend peace and struggle to prevent a third world war, which would mean the destruction of mankind.

For a revolutionary force there is no path today other than a policy of peace, detente and a struggle for arms control and reduction.

To this end the PCE will intensify its denunciation of and struggle against imperialism, which is attempting to maintain and regain its domination and influence over vast areas of the world, even resorting to violent methods.

One of the aims of the peoples' struggle and of internationalist solidarity is to force imperialism to respect the principle of noninterference, each country's independence and all peoples' right to determine their own destiny. Important steps forward have been achieved in this struggle since U.S. imperialism's defeat in Vietnam.

2--The Central Committee endorses the stance already defined by the Executive Committee's standing committee which condemns the USSR's military intervention in Afghanistan. We primarily adopt this stand, in the name of our revolutionary convictions and of our desire to struggle for socialism in Spain and to contribute to the cause of socialism worldwide.

The Central Committee also endorses the PCE's protest against the deportation of Academician Sakharov and the demand that freedom of residence and expression be restored to him.

In contrast to the imperialist practice of exporting counterrevolution--which is meeting with increasing resistance by the peoples--it is vital to assert the principle that revolution cannot be exported and that it must be the result of each people's struggle and wishes. This is a basic idea of the communist ideal and is today one of the cornerstones of the Eurocommunist strategy.

3--At the present time, when imperialism and most reactionary forces are seeking to exploit the Soviet action in Afghanistan to end detente and to drive the world into a spiral of tensions, economic reprisals and acts of force, with the unforeseeable consequences which this may have, the PCE believes that its fundamental task on the international level is to contribute to a broad grouping of communist, socialist, Christian and progressive forces prepared to struggle to prevent a return to the cold war, against all trends toward military confrontation, against the measures of severing economic, cultural and sporting relations which the United States and, in particular, the Carter administration, is striving to impose, and, at the same time, to struggle for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

The central aims of this broad grouping of forces should be the rescue and recovery of detente; the opening of immediate negotiations between the blocs which will make it possible to avert the deployment of the "Euromissiles" and to establish a military balance based not on increasing but on controlling and reducing arms; and the development of international cooperation, thus preparing the conditions for the success of the 1980 Madrid conference and also giving impetus to relations between Europe and the Third World and to North-South negotiations aimed at achieving a new international economic order.

These aims are in keeping with the interests of not only the progressive forces but the whole of mankind. These are also in keeping with the increasingly clear trend toward an independent role for Europe in international life.

4--On the level of Spain's foreign policy, the present situation requires that we intensify the struggle to insure that our country plays an individual, independent and specific role, aimed basically at contributing to peace, detente, disarmament and cooperation among peoples.

It requires that we oppose with redoubled vigor the plans to include Spain in NATO and the possible use of bases on Spanish territory for U.S. plans in the Middle East, the Persian Gulf and other areas.

It requires that we demand that Suarez report without further delay on his visits to Washington and that our foreign policy be conducted democratically, informing the country and parliament.

5--We protest the brutal attack against the Spanish Embassy in Guatemala, perpetrated by the police forces of that country in violation of the principles of international law, which caused the deaths of many Guatemalan and Spanish citizens.

6--The Central Committee has decided to conduct a debate and an explanation of our international policy throughout the party to strengthen its homogeneity in this field and at the same time to prepare and promote an increasing mobilization of the broad masses in Spain against all impulses toward military confrontation, and for detente and disarmament.

LA VANGUARDIA REPORTS OIL PRODUCTION DATA

LD061601 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 31 Jan 80 p 35 LD

[EUROPA PRESS report: "National Output of Crude Increased by Almost 19 Percent in 1979"]

[Text] Madrid, 30 January--National output of crude increased by almost 19 percent in 1979, totaling 1,164,939 tons, as compared with an output of 979,845 tons in 1978, according to sources in the sector.

Only three oilfields--Ayoluengo, Castellon and Dorada--produced without interruption throughout 1979, since Amposta was inactive for 5 months, during which further drilling to increase output was carried out.

However, national output of crude remains of minimal significance with respect to our annual consumption. Thus, between 1964, when the Ayoluengo oilfield was discovered, and 1 January 1980, it has totaled 10,615,388 tons, which scarcely covers 22 percent of the crude handled by Spanish refineries last year.

SOGAARD RECIEVES LETTER FROM BROWN URGING MORE SPENDING

LD080919 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 31 Jan 80 in Danish Part I p 4 LD

["Auni." report: "Spend More on Defense"]

[Text] U.S. Defense Secretary Harold Brown has intervened in the debate on the forthcoming defense report.

This is partly through a personal letter to Defense Minister Poul Sogaard and partly through a speech in the House of Representatives, Washington.

Defense Minister Poul Sogaard told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that the letter from the United States, which he received yesterday morning, was couched in personal, fraternal terms, addressed to "Dear Poul" and signed "Harold". The defense minister was unwilling to elaborate on the contents of the letter but he said that it contained an American assessment of the situation and cited the U.S. wish for a 3-percent increase in the Danish defense budget.

Copies of the letter were forwarded yesterday to the government defense committee. The defense minister does not believe that it will be the subject of discussion at a Cabinet meeting.

In the House of Representatives Harold Brown said that Denmark and West Germany should increase their defense budgets by 3 percent. "I think it is time that Denmark and West Germany reviewed the situation against the background of events in recent months," the U.S. defense secretary said, according to REUTER.

Harold Brown's call for an increase in the defense budget is welcomed at Defense Headquarters at Vedbaek. "It agrees completely with the Defense Command's view," acting defense chief Lt.Gen G.K. Kristensen said. The general considers it natural for the United States to adopt a position on the Danish defense budget, since Denmark would depend on outside reinforcements in a crisis.

PREMIER EMPHASIZES 'CLOSEST TRANSATLANTIC COOPERATION'

LD071111 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 23 Jan 80 p 12 LD

[Unattributed report: "Nordli: Natural To Pay More for One's Security"]

[Text] It could prove desirable and necessary for the European countries to assume greater tasks and more responsibility for their own security in the years to come, Prime Minister Odvar Nordli said in a speech in Roskilde yesterday. [paragraph continues]

He pointed out that following the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan, it is important that West Europe and North America stand in solidarity.

Nordli asserted that the West particularly must behave in such a manner that it becomes impossible for the one [Western nation] to be played off against the other. The prime minister stressed the importance of the closest possible transatlantic cooperation in security policy.

In his speech at Roskilde High School, Nordli asserted that it is understandable that some people occasionally advocate an independent European defense system, which would provide West Europe with the option of playing a more independent role both in defense and politics. He said that even politcians who realize that such a defense system is currently unrealistic point out that this option must be kept open. The justification rests in the fact that the European edifice will not be complete without a defense dimension.

Nordli pointed out, however, that the development in the correlation of forces between East and West offers no basis for an independent West European defense. This is true despite the fact that the West European countries today play a far more important role within the joint defenses than they did in NATO's first 20 years.

"Today there is no real security for the Western democracies without close cooperation between West Europe and North America. The close transatlantic cooperation will still be of crucial significance in maintaining the political and defence balance between East and West," Nordli said.

The prime minister said that after 7 years in the EC, Denmark has lived up to the expectations which Norway had of Denmark's role as the link between the EC and the rest of Scandinavia.

"We need Denmark as a Nordic country and we need Denmark as our most important link with the EC," Prime Minister Odvar Nordli said.

AFTENPOSTEN REPORTS FRYDENLUND STATEMENT ON AFGHAN INVASION

LD081005 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Feb 80 p 7 LD

[Unattributed report: "Frydenlund Too Weak"]

[Excerpts] Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund was too cautious and hesitant in his foreign policy report to the Storting yesterday in the reaction to the Soviet incursion in Afghanistan and the banishment of Andrey Sakharov. This was asserted by the nonsocialist leaders in their comments on the report. Conservative parliamentary leader Kare Willoch said that the foreign minister ought to have indicated more strongly the consequences for our own security policy following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

In his report Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund stressed mainly the situation in Afghanistan, and he emphasized that what has happened there enhances the importance of continuing detente. The foreign minister warned against breaking all contacts with the Soviet Union. "It will not result in security and safety if the Afghan situation is used to unleash an arms race in Europe," he said.

"In such situations, as after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, there is always a danger that channels may become restricted and that mutual distrust may prevent rational assessments. Thus, the danger of overreaction, misunderstandings and accidents also increases," the foreign minister said.

The main task today must be to prevent the world from being propelled into a totally destructive conflict, the foreign minister declared, pointing out that the situation in the Middle East is unpredictable and may thus be another source of tension. Frydenlund also said that regarding the energy crisis there seems to be a lack of both ability and desire to find an international solution.

HOLST STRESSES NEED FOR DETENTE IN LIGHT OF AFGHANISTAN

LD081007 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Feb 80 p 5 LD

[Unattributed report: "Important To Continue Detente Efforts"]

[Excerpt] "The Soviet incursion into Afghanistan is a clear violation of the basic rules for states' coexistence in international politics. A great power's use of armed forces against a smaller neighbor offers frightening perspectives for other small states. International politics cannot be based on the premise that great powers by virtue of being great have special rights regarding their neighbors."

This is what Foreign Under Secretary Johan Jorgen Holst asserted in a lecture at a seminar under the auspices of the Norwegian Atlantic Committee yesterday.

Holst pointed out that this makes the Afghan crisis an international crisis which concerns all countries. If the incursion is accepted, it could pave the way for great power rights for which the smaller countries will have to pay.

Holst stressed that perhaps the main aim of the rest of the world's reactions to the Russian's incursion is to limit Soviet ambitions and prevent further initiatives. At the same time, it is important to continue the work on enhancing detente between East and West.

"Many people might think that it is paradoxical to stress the need for detente in the wake of the incursion into Afghanistan. But in international politics reality is often surrounded by paradoxes. Precisely because detente is endangered is it necessary to concentrate attention on the need to consolidate it," Holst said.

Together with the other members of NATO, Norway has discussed national measures as a reaction to the incursion in Afghanistan.

"Norway has stressed and been supported by its allies for its view that measures against the Soviet Union must not affect relations between Norway and the Soviet Union in the extreme north. Nothing is gained by creating tension in this sensitive area," Holst said.

NORWAY, ICELAND DISPUTE JAN MAYEN COD FISHING

LD071107 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 26 Jan 80 p 11 LD

[Morten Fyhn report: "Iceland: Even the Cod Off Jan Mayen Is Ours"]

[Excerpts] In an unexpectedly sharply worded note to Norway, Iceland has demanded that Norwegian fishermen stop fishing cod outside Icelandic fishing limits, that is, off Jan Mayen. Iceland justifies this by saying that the cod stocks are Icelandic and not a common stock. Fisheries Under Secretary Ivan Kristoffersen told AFTENPOSTEN that Norway cannot agree to the Icelandic demand.

The under secretary is disappointed with the Icelandic view and points out that Iceland has no grounds for denying other countries the right to fish outside Iceland's 200-mile zone. Jorn Krog, secretary general of the Norwegian Fishermen's Association, believes that the Icelandic note makes it of more interest than ever for Norway to establish a zone off Jan Mayen.

AFTENPOSTEN understands that Norway regards the Icelandic note as illogical, since the only way in which uncontrolled fishing of cod outside the Icelandic zone can be prevented is by establishing a Norwegian zone off Jan Mayen. Only in this way can third countries' fishermen be prevented from fishing the cod, it is asserted.

The Icelandic note seems now to have to make it even more difficult to obtain Iceland's approval for a Jan Mayen zone.

PAPER SPECULATES ON SWEDISH ROLE IN U.S. DIPLOMATS' ESCAPE

LD070943 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 3 Feb 80 p 32 LD

TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Iran: Ambassador To Return Monday"]

[Text] "Sweden's charge d'affaires in Tehran Ake Johannsson has full freedom to act regarding what is suitable for the embassy's security in Ambassador Kaj Sundberg's absence."

This is what the TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA [TT] was told by sources at the Stockholm Foreign Ministry against the backdrop of reports saying that U.S. diplomats were hidden at the Swedish Embassy in Tehran.

Kaj Sundberg returns to Iran on Monday according to plan following a week-long visit to Stockholm, where he took part in a meeting of Swedish ambassadors.

According to the Foreign Ministry, there is no indication that his return may be postponed.

The mission in Tehran is expected to resume its work on Sunday, as usual after the week-end. The embassy is normally closed on Friday, which is a Muslim holiday, and on Saturday.

It has learned that contacts have taken place between representatives of the Foreign Ministry and the U.S. Embassy in Stockholm.

The Swedish Embassy in Washington has received many questions from the American press but, like the Swedish Foreign Ministry, it does not comment on the events.

In the United States the great interest is not in whether diplomats were in the Swedish Embassy in Tehran but in the six diplomats' return from Iran and in the role which Canada played in helping them to leave Iran.

TURKISH ENVOY COMMENTS ON JOINT DEFENSE AGREEMENT WITH U.S.

TA052015 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 5 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The Turkish ambassador to Lefkosa, [Nicosia] Inal Batu, said that it is impossible to consider the recently initialed Turkish-U.S. defense cooperation agreement as related to the developments in Afghanistan and Iran or to consider it similar to the measures the United States is taking in the face of the developments in Afghanistan and Iran. Batu, who was the guest of honor at the Friends Club luncheon today, said that the talks on the defense cooperation agreement have been going on since 18 January 1979. Referring to the contents of the agreement, Batu said that the defense support aid would no longer be measured by a certain figure and that a mechanism had been set up whereby Turkey's needs would be met in the most [word indistinct] way and on time.

The ambassador pointed out that a separate agreement supplied the legal foundation necessary for the development of the Turkish-U.S. joint defense industry. In connection with the installations, Batu said that the relevant articles in the 1976 agreement had been further developed. He stressed that the joint defense installations were under the [word indistinct] of the Turkish Armed Forces and under the command of Turkish commanders.

DENKTAS MEETS WITH GALINDO-POHL; CYPRUS ISSUE DISCUSSED

TA071308 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 7 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Today President Denktas received the UN special representative in Cyprus, Mr Galindo-Pohl. The meeting, which lasted about 1 and 1/2 hours, was also attended by the minister of defense and foreign affairs, Mr Atakol; the deputy special representative, Mr Gorge; and Mr Necati Ertegun, the constitutional adviser to the president. In a statement at the end of the meeting, President Denktas said that contacts for the resumption of the Cyprus intercommunal talks were continuing. He stressed that the main obstacle to such a resumption was the international departure by the Greek Cypriots from the negotiating table and the obtainment of a resolution from the UN General Assembly supporting their views. He added that the Turkish Cypriot side had clearly stated that it would not resume the intercommunal talks within the framework of the latest UN General Assembly resolution. President Denktas said that, in spite of this, the UN secretary general was continuing his efforts to find a formula to solve this difficulty. He stated that he had an exchange of views with Mr Pohl today on the resumption of the talks and that the meeting had been positive and constructive. He said that the common views shared by the two sides for a resumption of the talks were discussed.

President Denktas expressed the hope that the Greek Cypriot side would understand that it could not Hellenize Cyprus and do away with the partnership rights of the Turkish Cypriot community, but it had to adopt a conciliatory attitude. He added, however, no evidence of such a Greek Cypriot attitude is yet apparent. Referring to the Greek Cypriot threats used in order to prevent foreign tourists from visiting the Federated States, President Denktas said that this was an inhuman act and an indication of Greek Cypriot bad faith. He stated that the government of the Federated State would take up the matter with the international organizations concerned. On the recent Greek Cypriot proposals for a rapprochement with the Turkish Cypriot community, Mr Denktas said that the Greek Cypriots were wrong in thinking that they would be able to eliminate the rights and authority of the Turkish Cypriot community by such proposals. The Greek Cypriots also wanted to get Varosha back but this was a question which would be dealt with within the entire framework of the negotiations for a Cyprus settlement. President Denktas said in conclusion that the Turkish Cypriot side was not evading the intercommunal talks but would continue its efforts for the establishment of a bizonal and bicommunal federal republic safeguarding the rights, status and territory of the Federated State.

AVEROF SATISFIED WITH U.S. MILITARY AID TO GREECE

AT071450 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 7 Feb 80 pp 1, 3 AT

[Text] The balance of forces in the Aegean will be maintained with the proposed U.S. and German military aid to Greece and Turkey. This view was expressed yesterday by National Defense Minister Averof, who commented on the defense aid announced by Germany and the United States. The minister's statement is as follows:

"The decision of the two friendly countries to provide balanced defense aid to Greece and Turkey satisfies justice, morality and political expediency. This fact proves that the two countries do desire that the current military balance in the Aegean not be disturbed. It also proves that the handling of the issue by Prime Minister K. Karamanlis and his efforts were successful and fruitful."

According to a draft bill by the State Department for the U.S. legislative bodies--as I KATHIMERINI reported yesterday--military assistance has been proposed worth $252 million to Turkey and $184 million to Greece. It has also been proposed to give economic aid to Turkey in the form of credits worth $200 million.

Furthermore, commenting on the apportioning of these sums, the government spokesman said that the balance of forces between Turkey and Greece will be maintained at the ratio of 7 to 10 as the Greek Government had always supported. Also, the government spokesman added that the State Department report includes the pleasant realization that, as opposed to the Turkish economy, the Greek economy is sound, despite the temporary difficulties it is facing. Also, he added, the same reports mention that Greece is a democratic country in which human rights are respected.

Finally, in reply to a question, the government spokesman said that the government has no report about a Rogers plan regulating our country's special relationship with NATO. About this issue he recalled a previous statement by Prime Minister Karamanlis that it is a problem which concerns Turkey and NATO, and that our country is not prepared to discuss it with Turkey. It should not be precluded that, within this framework, the NATO leadership is discussing the issue with Turkey.

In a statement issued yesterday, EDA [United Democratic Left] mentions that the U.S. aid is creating new reasons for tension in the area. Also it links the aid to the new pressure by Rogers for return to the NATO military wing.

In reply to Averof's statement, Papandreou said the following: The fact that the United States and NATO are deceiving the Greek people in what concerns the alleged balance of forces in the Aegean should not surprise us. This is their history. But the fact that the responsible Greek national defense minister, in collusion with the Americans, can deceive the Greek people is unacceptable. Of course the responsibility weighs heavily on him and on the country's prime minister.

National Defense Minister E. Averof made the following statement after Papandreou's statement was presented for his consideration. "Papandreou is deceiving the Greek people with the things he says. It now has been openly proved that Papandreou is annoyed by any defense aid emanating from the West. It would be useful if Papandreou were to say where we should seek the valuable aid for the strengthening of our country's defense that we have received in recent years from Germany and the United States, which amounts to about $200 million and DM70 million. In times of a foreign exchange crisis, this aid is truly valuable."

MITSOTAKIS SAYS USSR TO IMPLEMENT OIL AGREEMENT

AT071410 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 6 Feb 80 p 1 AT

[Text] Yesterday, Minister of Coordination Mitsotakis stated to the press that all the things that have been agreed with the Soviet Union in the economic sector are proceeding normally. In reply to a question in connection with rumors about an 800,000-ton reduction in the oil Greece will receive from the USSR, he said that the Soviet side had never stated anything of the kind. He added that his trip to Moscow will take place as usual.

In addition, a competent source yesterday made it clear that the Soviet side has given official assurances that the USSR will cover the entire 2 million tons of oil it has agreed upon. At the same time, the other forms of cooperation between the two countries such as the supply of natural gas and the installation of an alumina plant are in the stage of final study.

AVEROF ANALYZES INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENTS, PROSPECTS

AT041600 Athens I VRADHINI in Greek 4 Feb 80 pp 1, 3 AT

[Article by Evangelos Averof-tositsas, minister of national defense: "How Dangerous Are Our Times--The Framework Within Which Our Nation Progresses and Will Continue To Progress"]

[Text] A more general concern dominates the thinking of citizens in most countries of the world. A worldwide economic crisis threatens the stability and progress of international economy sometimes to a greater and at other times lesser degree. The ever-increasing frustration over the energy crisis recently became more severe. It appears that it cannot be overcome without profound upheavals. It obviously threatens the way of life of advanced countries; with radical changes over the coming years and that of underdeveloped countries with stagnation.

With the exception of the economic crisis of 1929-1931, which had a totally different character and which was less threatening, we were never faced with such dangerous and threatening economic developments during the 20th century and this in times of peace. As if all this were not enough, and in addition to the use of the most inhuman form of violence within certain countries over the past few years, the international horizon has also been seriously overburdened with storm clouds.

Since the Berlin and Cuban crises (1961-1962), according to sober foreign observers, the black clouds have never been as heavy on this horizon as they are today. Some talk, even though timidly, about the danger of a new world war. A speedy but calm examination of the situation is, I believe, useful so that we may be able to see the framework within which our own nation is progressing and must progress.

The Prospect of a Clash

Naturally a world war cannot be excluded. This is because as President Kennedy declared in a television address to the entire American nation during the most critical phase of the Cuban crisis, unbelievable damage was wrought because of an erroneous estimation by one side about the reaction of the other side. This is also because the reasons for the separation of one side from the other are of an extremely basic significance. It is impossible to forecast how the significance of these reasons could be interpreted. It is impossible to forecast what calculations it could result in, to what mistakes it could lead, to what local wars it may lead and, as a sequel, how these could develop into broader wars. Despite all this the world war which cannot be excluded must not, I believe, be considered unavoidable.

This is because of two reasons: One--because the people of the world do not want such a war. Wherever people influence important decisions all possible efforts will be undertaken to avoid differences which could lead to a broader war. Two--such a war would certainly lead to the use of nuclear weapons. At first there would be use of "tactical" weapons, the so-called "war theater" weapons and then there would be use of "strategic" weapons, in other words, of weapons which can destroy greater vital centers belonging to the opponent.

Such weapons, however, have an unbelievable destructive capacity. In an effort to give some degree of comparison it is noted that the bomb used on Hiroshima in 1945 was at least 75 times weaker than any one of the three warheads carried, which can be fired in three different directions by the "SS-20" missile. Every prospective opponent well knows that even if he were the first to launch a nuclear attack using all his available potential, the other side would still be able to retaliate with at least one severe blow of approximately equivalent strength.

Under such conditions there is no room for the operation of the spirit of adventure and greed which subconsciously motivates the competitive spirit of certain people and which leads them to war adventures. A nuclear war is no adventure. It is general destruction. Such a war cannot incite greed. It rather eliminates it. Only absolutely mad criminals could incorporate such a war in their plans. Only people lacking the most elemental logic could fatefully commit those mistakes which would sweep them into a nuclear war.

In 1962 Nikita Khrushchev commenced and insistently proceeded with the Cuban operation which, if successful, would have allowed him to emerge invincible on a worldwide scale. When, however, he saw that nuclear war was at the threshold he hastened to retreat without taking into consideration the consequences such a retreat would have on his policy and on himself personally.

Three Conclusions

All this, however, does not mean that there can be no local wars. Many such wars did take place and they continue to take place. Some estimates place the "post wars" at more than 100. We pass from the wars of Israel and Algeria, to the terrible war of Vietnam, to those of Ethiopia, Biafra and others, and end up with the Kampuchean war, which still rages, or to others which we do not even describe as wars but which in fact are just as much wars as the others are in all their aspects.

This state of affairs together with various other developments lead to three basic conclusions:

One--The policy of detente, of mutual consultations, must be continued with determination, with the hope that in the end it will produce more results. At the same time, however, we must also bear in mind that such a policy, international law and order, the large international organizations, the civilization of the 20th century, which we praise so much, are in no position, despite their considerable usefulness, to offer protection against war. The latest international agreement, the one of Helsinki, which created so much furor, is nothing but a collection of wishes of the highest level. It is nothing more. One can refer to it in the very same way one refers to certain psalms from religious texts, in respect of human rights, the case of Cyprus for example, or in the case of the independence of other countries.

Two--If a country is to have maximum security it must inevitably have, apart from a wise and conciliatory policy, apart from guaranteed aid from other countries, a considerable potential to defend itself. This potential must at least be strong enough to convince anyone who may have designs upon this country that it would be extremely costly in blood. Even the strongest cannot face such an eventuality with equanimity.

Three--A general conclusion of a political nature: The political map of many areas of the world has radically changed during the past 20 or even 10 years. Africa, so rich in a variety of raw materials and which is of great interest to us for various reasons, is not the same in any way. In the past, countries of the free world dominated it with different ties in each given instance. Today some parts of Africa are dominated by countries of the Eastern coalition. Other parts are neutral with rather hostile sentiments toward the West. Yet other parts are friendly toward the West. The northern shores of Africa, those along the Mediterranean, have exactly the same characteristics as the entire black continent. At the same time the process of radical political and social changes in at least certain parts of Africa does not seem to have ended.

Other areas, outside Africa, also of interest to everyone, including Greece, have also changed considerably. It appears that we have not fully understood the significance of these changes.

We have Iran (Persia) for example. Regardless of whether or not its regime was bad, regardless of whether it was more or less dictatorial than other regimes, it was, until recently, a country which caused us trouble with its initiatives in increasing oil prices. At the same time, however, it supplied us with oil to the full limit of its production potential. It was a country with extremely strong and modern armed forces with its own foreign policy, often unpleasant, but which generally followed a pro-Western policy and would most certainly have alined itself with the free world at a moment of threat or at a moment of serious crisis. Today this position has completely changed. A totally different course was started. Nobody knows where it will lead.

It is self-evident that developments in Afghanistan, also with unforeseeable future effects, add a far greater importance to the changes brought about in Iran. These are two countries which geographically dominate a broad area in which two-thirds of the oil deposits of the entire world are to be found.

I do not believe we have fully appreciated or understood the depth and breadth of the effect that the recent change could have upon the fate of Europe. The broadest possible public opinion does follow them, but obviously it has not evaluated them on the basis of the correct worldwide measurements. [paragraph continues]

In this hasty picture I have not spoken of a different type of change, of the changes in Western mentality, of a disturbance of the balance of power and of other probable changes of positions in areas much nearer to us. What I have mentioned, however, is sufficient to demonstrate in the most voluble language a fact which is irrefutable and undeniable: We are no longer living in the world of 1960 or even of 1970. We are living in a world which is incomparably more dangerous. In the past its horizons were not, but now are, often both murky and threatening. Nobody knows where and if local storms will break out, what their intensity will be and in what area they will strike.

What We Will Do

In the face of these international horizons our country primarily must concern itself with its own horizon. It can only slightly influence the improbable, the very great, the worldwide storms. If, God forbid, such storms do break out, our country will follow the fate of Europe.

The way, however, in which it deals with the local storms depends entirely upon its own national horizon. If this national horizon is murky, not only will the handling of such local storms be unfortunate but also we will be creating such local storms ourselves. This is because, owing to the geographic area we occupy, to the certain peculiar problems we have, whether we like it or not, we are not permitted very many doubts as to what could happen: At times when our spiritual, political, economic and dynamic unity is weakened we will be tempted to engage in local operations. This will be even more certain if at such times we get involved in--as is frequently the case in international history--a demagogic or even careless foreign policy.

Woe unto us in such an eventuality. If this happens, the rule which often applies in local confrontations, "blessed be those who are strong," will apply against us. This is why, if we are to survive in the middle of this heavy international atmosphere, we require, more than ever before, a clear national horizon and a strong homefront. This must be a front within which internal conflict will be as muted as possible and within which our armed forces will be as battleworthy and prepared as possible, within which the administration of the country remains as sober and stable as ever. DEFENSE MINISTRY DENIES MINING OF TERRITORIAL WATERS

AT071610 Athens APOYEVMATINI in Greek 7 Feb 80 p 16 AT [Text] In response to Turkish newspapers which cite a statement by the national defense minister in reply to a parliamentary interpellation by Deputy Bandouvas that the territorial waters of some islands have been mined, the National Defense Ministry stated that no one ever claimed that mines have been laid in the territorial waters of Greek islands, something that, after all would be completely contrary to truth, as all sailors know very well. Some greater attention when reading Greek statements would not hurt, unless of course they are deliberately not read correctly.

"Greece has revealed that it has mined the Aegean Islands," the Turkish newspaper TERCUMAN publicized in a five column frontpage report on the reply National Defense Minister E. Averof gave to Deputy Bandouvas on the sweeping of an Aegean island minefield. The newspapers GUNAYDIN, HURRIYET, CUMHURIYET and MILLIYET deal with this issue in frontpage articles. The last, in an article entitled "The Greeks Sweep Some Mines in the Aegean," reports that "Greece had laid mines in the Aegean Islands, citing defense reasons and the possibility of a Turkish landing."

U.S. TOLD IT CANNOT USE INCIRLIK BASE AGAINST IRAN

TA071636 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 Feb 80 TA

[Text] National Defense Minister Ahmet Ihsan Birincioglu said that the United States has been clearly informed that it cannot use Incirlik Airbase to intervene in Iran. Replying to criticism leveled against his ministry's budget in the Senate, Birincioglu also gave information on the defense cooperation agreement initialed between Turkey and the United States.

Birincioglu said the following on the issue: With the basic agreement the United States has been authorized to participate in joint defense measures in certain Turkish installations. The defense support agreement stipulates how defense equipment for the Turkish Armed Forces will be supplied. The defense industrial cooperation agreement deals with how the United States will transfer technology and will increase the manufacturing capacity of Turkish war industry. Birincioglu said that according to the installations agreement, the installations will function as Turkish ones and will be administered and checked by Turkish commanders.

Referring to the bill noncommissioned officers submitted to the parliament, Birincioglu said that candidates for reserve officers will be given the option between becoming an NCO or a private. He added that there was no surplus in the number of privates in the armed forces and that therefore shortening the period of the military service was out of the question. Birincioglu concluded by saying that ending martial law as soon as possible and having the armed forces resume their fundamental duty was very important in the face of the international developments in the region.

UK CORRESPONDENT REPORTS IRAQI WARNING TO GOVERNMENT

LD061141 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 5 Feb 80 p 6 LD

[Ankara correspondent: "Iraq Warns Turkey "Not to Interfere'"]

[Text] Iraq warned Turkey yesterday not to interfere in its internal affairs. The Turkish press has been very critical of Iraq because of the execution of three Iraqi citizens who were ethnic Turks. Issued by its embassy in Ankara, the Iraqi statement blamed indirectly Turkey's ruling Justice Party government for the press campaign.

A Turkish Foreign Ministry spokesman refused to comment on the statement apart from saying: "We are studying it." Iraq supplies Turkey with one-third of its crude oil needs.

VOTCP CITES AFGHAN STATEMENT ON INCREASED FIGHTING

TA080702 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 8 Feb 80 TA

[Text] A statement by the Afghan Democratic Republic's Foreign Ministry says Afghan counterrevolutionaries equipped with U.S. and Chinese weapons and trained in Pakistan have intensified their armed aggressions and provocations in villages and towns in the Afghan-Pakistan border region. It has been announced that specially in Qandahar Province, the armed counterrevolutionary gangs are carrying out mass slaughtering among the civil population, burning schools and blowing up bridges.

Supported by the population, troops of the Afghan people's armed forces have begun repulsing the attacks of the armed gangs. The counterrevolutionary armed gangs have been defeated by troops of the armed forces in the Badakhshan Province. In the Paktia region, the fighting between troops of the armed forces and the counterrevolutionaries is still continuing.

It has been announced that all of the armed counterrevolutionaries have been trained by U.S., Chinese and Pakistani military experts in centers established in the Peshawar, Chitral, Parachinar and Miram Shah regions of Pakistan. The Afghan Foreign Ministry statement says that the intensification of the aggression of the counterrevolutionary groups trained in Pakistan after the visit to Pakistan by U.S. President Carter's national security affairs assistant, Brzezinski, is no mere coincidence and that this was a continuation of a multifaceted aggression being waged by imperialist circles against Afghanistan.

CABINET MEETS TO DISCUSS ANARCHY, ECONOMIC ISSUES

TA071430 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 7 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The Council of Ministers met under Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel at 1100 to discuss anarchy and economic issues. In a statement before the meeting, Demirel said that various new draft bills to be submitted to the parliament will be discussed and that the results of meetings he ehld with the governors of 16 provinces and the reports submitted by all provinces at the beginning of the week will be assessed at today's Council of Ministers meeting. Demirel noted that he will meet with the martial law commanders in Ankara on Sunday 17 February, and that the National Security Council will convene on Tuesday, 19 February. He added that the 2-month extension of the martial law being enforced in 19 provinces will be discussed at the Grand National Assembly meeting to be held of Wednesday, 20 February.

Meanwhile, a journalist asked Demirel whether or not he was pleased with the news about foreign aid. Demirel said that developments regarding foreign aid were positive and that he was pleased with them. Noting that Turkey was implementing a program of stability, Demirel said that the sources necessary for such a program existed. He said: We are not in search of sources, however, we do need various sources for the future of this stability program. We are busy consolidating these sources. In other words, we have not begun to implement this program without any sources. We do have the sources.

A journalist recalled the statement made by the secretary general of the FRG Christian Democratic Union to the effect that his party would support the FRG Government in the aid to be extended to Turkey and asked Demirel his view on this issue. Demirel said that the FRG Government and the opposition party were well aware of Turkey's importance and of the necessity to extend aid to Turkey. Demirel said: I thank them.

TURK-IS REJECTS DISK CALL FOR COOPERATION

TA061630 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 6 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, Feb 6 (AA)--The Executive Committee of the Turkish Confederation of Labor "Turk-Is" has rejected the call from the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] for cooperation in active resistance to the recent economic measures.

Announcing the decision taken at the Executive Committee's meeting Monday evening, Turk-Is Secretary General Sadik Side said Turk-Is would take "its own action" in protest if it finds there is any "regression" in national interest or labor rights.

Affiliated unions had been warned that the standing rules would be applied against any member union which attempted to join action sponsored by DISK.

The secretary general said Turk-Is did not agree with all the comments rejecting the recent measures as a whole. With regard to the danger of adopting a "South American model," there was no question of Turkey discarding democracy, he commented. He found the opposition's criticism "a bit hasty."

The Turk-Is Executive Committee outlined the demands it would submit later to the government and formed a committee to draft them.

Turk-Is officials said their requests from the government, which they would discuss at a meeting with Under Secretary of the Prime Ministry Turgut Ozal upon his return from his current trip abroad, would include raising the minimum wage, and increasing of the coefficient of civil service salaries.

UPRISING IN MERSIN PRISON REPORTED

TA071443 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1423 GMT 7 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Mersin, 7 Feb (AA)--Inmates of Mersin Prison, who had staged an uprising with certain grievances earlier this week, revolted again, taking the warden and three guards hostage.

The prisoners said they were protesting the failure of the administration to grant their requests and its attempt to transfer some of their friends to other penitentiaries.

The prisoners said they intend to keep the hostages until the transfers were stopped, while police and gendarmerie took positions outside the premises.

The uprising at the city prison in Van, eastern Turkey, ended shortly after noon today. Around 400 inmates who had shut themselves in opened the gates to the commander of gendarmerie. The group of inmates, described as left-wing, also released the 4 right-wing prisoners they had taken hostage. Security forces seized two pistols and 10 daggers in a search of the premises.

He added that the United States and the Soviet Union should be more moderate in their relations in order to prevent such developments.

SOVIET DIPLOMAT EXPELLED IN 'RETALIATORY' MOVE

LD072252 Montreal Domestic Service in English 2200 GMT 7 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Canada is expelling another Soviet official. The Department of External Affairs says the move is in retaliation for the expulsion of a Canadian military attache, Col Harold Gold, from Moscow. The department says the government is demanding the reduction of the commercial section of the Soviet Embassy by one person. The Department of External Affairs says that means that D.F. Trofimov will be forced to leave the section in 2 weeks. Last month the government ordered three Soviet diplomats out of the country for spying. Moscow retaliated with the expulsion of Colonel Gold.

The RCMP [Royal Canadian Mounted Police] meantime has stepped up its surveillance of Soviet diplomats in this country. The force has asked the police in Ontario and Quebec to report on the movements of all vehicles bearing the red diplomatic car license plates registered to the Soviet Embassy. Over 200 plates are registered to the 64 employees of the embassy. Their travel is limited to the Ottawa area. They must receive special permission to travel outside the capital. Foreigners must do the same in Moscow.

FOREIGN MINISTER GENSCHER STRESSES SOLIDARITY WITH U.S.

DW110921 Bonn Press Handout of the Federal Foreign Ministry in German 10 Feb 80
No. 1011 B/80 DW

[Press handout by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher: "Safeguard Freedom and Peace Together With America"]

[Text] The goal of the Federal Government to insure, together with the European partners, the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, to guarantee freedom and security for Europe in future also, to maintain the prerequisites for the continuation of our realistic detente policy and to overcome the current crisis can be achieved only in firm partnership with the United States. European-American solidarity does not mean that the Europeans must help the Americans in a matter that is American and not European; Afghanistan concerns the Europeans and the Americans equally.

This solidarity must be expressed in joint action based on a common strategy. This common strategy must exploit through division of labor the possibilities of individual partners of the alliance to achieve the common goal. Division of labor understood this way will not create the impression that the Europeans will take over the pleasant tasks while the American will handle the unpleasant ones.

Consultations between Europeans and Americans are indispensable; the form in which they take place is of secondary importance. The greater the accord among Europeans, the greater the weight carried by Europe in working out the common strategy. The weight will be also greater as the European desire for solidarity becomes clearer.

Particularly defense is a common task. It also means preparedness to take over additional burdens. No European can dodge that responsibility. Political responsibility also means pointing out to the citizens the effects of additional expenditures for common security. Freedom and security have their price. European-American solidarity must be demonstrated with regard to the Olympic problem as well. I repeat: "The Soviet Union has the task to create the prerequisites for holding the Olympic games. We expect the United States to show solidarity in Berlin; we will not reject it with regard to the Olympic problem."

Nothing will change in this attitude. The president of the German Sports Federation, Willi Weyer, has set an example, demonstrating how the president of the greater sports organization carried out his political responsibility in a free society. He maintains that the meaning of the Olympic games is incompatible with the situation in Afghanistan. It must be hoped that this insight will prevail among the responsible persons of the International Olympic Committee.

The United States is determined to live up to its leadership role in the alliance and its worldwide political responsibility. This determination is supported by the American nation. It would be a grave mistake if the Europeans were to underrate that or even consider it an election campaign slogan. Voices have been heard in Europe in the past which said they missed America's will to lead and take over world political responsibility. America must not be criticized because of that now. It is much more a matter of pointing out the stance of the European alliance partners in a dialog among alliance partners. That dialog is natural among partners with equal rights.

Our determination to preserve the prerequisites for our realistic detente policy can be implemented only on the basis of a balance. That balance can exist only with America. Nobody in Europe should forget that. The alliance with the United States is an indispensable prerequisite of our realistic detente policy, which is based on a balance and not an obstacle.

We are now experiencing a propaganda offensive that tries to tell the Europeans that it is the fault of the Americans that there is tension in the world, and that the Europeans should not get involved in this development. The answer can be only that the Soviet Union must withdraw its troops from Afghanistan to pave the way for progress in detente and safeguarding peace.

Our place is by the side of the United States, not between the two superpowers. That basic decision has been made. It is simultaneously a decision for freedom, human rights and self-determination. Those who want to safeguard peace and overcome the crisis must first make it clear that every attempt to separate Europe from America is hopeless. It is among the basic principles of our foreign policy that only in this way will we remain predictable for East and West.

The chances for the arms control suggestions decided in December 1979, the chances to avoid a relapse into cold war, will be greater and not smaller through solidarity with the United States.

In their relations with the states of the Third World, the Western democracies must make it even clearer that they want partnership with equal rights and not predominance. Never before has the significance of being really nonalined been felt more clearly in the Third World than in the wake of the Afghanistan developments. Only by safeguarding the state of being nonalined can peace and stability in the Third World be insured. Therefore, the West cannot transfer on its own the East-West contrast to the Third World. That also belongs to the common strategy.

FRENCH REFUSAL TO ATTEND CONFERENCE DRAWS COMMENT

Foreign Ministry Spokesman

LD081317 Hamburg DPA in German 1119 GMT 8 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The plan of a conference with the participation of foreign ministers of the most important Western allies on what further action to take in the crisis following the Soviet invasion has foundered on the opposition of the French Government. This was learned in Bonn today.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Juergen Sudhoff merely said at a press conference in Bonn that there is "no basis for assuming" there will be a Western foreign ministers conference. He thereby denied unofficial reports of the previous day that the foreign ministers of the United States, France, Britain, Italy and the Federal Republic intend to meet. The spokesman confirmed, however, that U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance will visit Bonn 20 and 21 February for bilateral talks at the invitation of Federal Foreign Minister Genscher.

In connection with the French Government's motives for its negative attitude, attention was drawn in Bonn to remarks made by President Giscard d'Estaing following his summit talks with Chancellor Schmidt in Paris. Talking to French correspondents, Giscard said he opposed a further hardening of the Eastern and Western blocs in the present crisis situation.

In connection with the discounted reports of a foreign ministers conference in Bonn, government spokesman Boelling stressed that Bonn does not wish to "talk anyone into a dramatic form" of meeting. The Federal Government is interested in an intensive continuation of the consultations among the Western allies during the coming weeks. The important thing is the substance of the exchange of views and the formulation of objectives among the allies. In this process the German-French summit was an important landmark, and the forthcoming meeting between Genscher and Vance an important element.

The Foreign Ministry spokesman pointed out that the foreign ministers of the nine EEC countries will meet as planned in Rome on 19 February to discuss the current international situation.

Economics Minister Lambsdorff

LD092344 Hamburg DPA in German 2222 GMT 9 Feb 80 LD

[Text] New York--Federal Economics Minister Count Otto Lambsdorff in New York on Saturday expressed regret over France's objection to the conference of foreign ministers of the most important Western allies suggested by the Americans to discuss the political situation in the wake of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Lambsdorff said in a talk with German correspondents that Paris' attitude was not a "very gratifying development" for the Federal Government.

Lambsdorff, who is to spend 2 weeks in the United States holding talks with leading American politicians, bankers and businessmen, attributes Paris' attitude to the French Government's concern over the theme of the planned conference. He also feels, however, that France's internal political situation might have played a role in Paris' decision. Lambsdorff also stressed the very cooperative and accomodating attitude of the FFench at the recent Franco-German consultations.

On the question of the boycott of the Moscow Olympics proposed by President Carter in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Lambsdorff said he cannot imagine a team from the Federal Republic marching into a stadium if no U.S. athletes are going to march in.

CSU Chairman Strauss

LD092131 Hamburg DPA in German 1800 GMT 9 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bavarian Minister-President and CSU Chairman Strauss has described the French refusal to participate in the foreign ministers meeting in Bonn on 20 February as a slap in the face for Chancellor Schmidt. In an interview for WELT AM SONNTAG, Strauss expresses the opinion that Bonn tried to turn a (?routine) working dinner into a big crisis conference of foreign ministers. Wrongly assessing his role as that of mediator between France and the United States and between the United States and the Soviet Union, Schmidt was trying to engage in showmanship.

APEL REITERATES GOVERNMENT POSITION ON AFGHANISTAN

DW110918 Stuttgart Sueddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1150 GMT 9 Feb 80 DW

[Correspondent Reissenberger interview with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel, apparently recorded in Bonn]

[Text] [Question] The German-French summit meeting in Paris that you attended earlier this week was concluded with a joint statement which says in effect: Just one more Afghanistan and detente between East and West will be over for good. Then France and Germany together with their alliance partners would take the measures necessary to guarantee their security and to defend international stability. At the same time you concluded with the French defense minister an agreement on the joint construction of a new combat tank. My question is this: Does all this herald closer military cooperation between Paris and Bonn in the future, complementing the integrated defense in NATO?

[Answer] I would like to divide my answer into two separate parts: To begin with, the passage of the statement jointly adopted and released, which you just quoted, means the following. We are asking the Soviet Union, expressly asking the Soviet Union, to leave Afghanista

Afghanistan is a nonalined country, and Afghanistan is entitled to retain this status. The presence of Soviet troops is illegal. The United Nations organization has condemned the Soviet Union for this. But what we are particularly telling the Soviet Union is that in the event of further efforts toward expansion, mechanisms will be triggered which indeed may well be dangerous to world peace but also to detente. I think this warning is important, and I believe that it has been heard.

As far as the combat tank is concerned, extensive preparatory work has been done to that end. We have come to terms, and the signing of the agreement constitutes another deepening of German-French cooperation. It is also important in this context to draw attention to the fact that the tank will be in use only in the early years of the next decade, that is, in the nineties. It is a program oriented toward the future, for we do not need a new tank in the next several years. We are well equipped.

[Question] You said the warning has been heard. Can you elaborate on this a bit?

[Answer] I assume that people in Moscow can read political declarations of intent and that they are perfectly aware that detente is an important living condition for the Soviet Union and for us but also that detente--the relaxation of tensions--simultaneously means being moderate, keeping one's armed forces within one's own sphere of influence, knowing how far one can go, knowing that others will respond. This communique, by the way, time and again--three times in fact--expresses solidarity with the Atlantic alliance and thus also with the United States. This, too, is an important signal.

[Question] Let me ask you in this context: Do you deem it conceivable, or at least desirable, that France might return to the integrated NATO organization due to the impact of the new development?

[Answer] I am strictly against debating academic questions. Besides, it is not up to me to answer such a question. It is a question to be posed for French policy and to the French state leadership. We can be sure on one point, however: France does do its share for securing Europe, for Europe's defense capability. France will continue cooperating with us so closely in the future that the good, solid friendship will be insured in the defense sector as well.

[Question] What can the German contribution be within the framework of the measures taken by the NATO alliance to convince the Soviet Union that its withdrawal from Afghanistan and the return to a realistic detente policy is also in the interest of Moscow? You or somebody else has mentioned the aid to Turkey, the support to Pakistan, an improvement in the reserve stockpiles in fuels and ammunition of the Bundeswehr. There are some other points, for instance more German frigates in the North Atlantic, more German air transport capacity for the alliance. What can be put into practice?

[Answer] I think that first of all we ought to proceed from an undisputed state of affairs, namely, the fact that here in central Europe, where we live, it has been thanks to NATO and thanks to the Bundeswehr that peace is secure. All the politicians of our country underscore this state of affairs, albeit with divergent emphasis. NATO has some worries pertaining, above all, to the southern flank. This is why it is important and appropriate for us to have taken charge of the management of the aid to Turkey. This will surely become an expensive venture. The finance minister himself has been summoned to enable an action by the alliance, an action of the allies. Now, it is not reasonable to include the U.S. ground forces in these plans because of the need for an intensified presence of the United States in other parts of the world, meaning the maritime sphere in particular. What we need is the solidarity of the alliance here in Europe, the presence of all allied ground forces. Thus, it is conceivable that new considerations will have to be taken into account in the maritime sector. But these things must not be rushed. In this respect the alliance is called upon to think in solidarity but also with the utmost precision. Then the decision must be made.

In this context I would like to point out, by the way, that the Federal Navy will receive six new frigates at regular intervals in the next few years. The first has been launched already, the second is due to be launched in the near future. Consequently, the shipyards have received orders to their full capacity up to the early eighties. Even if we decided today that we wanted some additional frigates, these could be had only 4 to 6 years from now at the earliest.

[Question] Criticism has been voiced lately about the consultations between the United States and the European allies. What do you think needs improvement?

[Answer] As far as my ministry and I are concerned, I have no complaints at all. Our contacts are as close as they need to be. Telephone calls complement the contacts by mail and the personal contacts through trips by delegations. What seems to me to be important is that the alliance and its friends--and these also include the Japanese--develop a strategy which will measure up to the Soviet challenge on a long-term basis as well. There is no sense in proposing lists of measures on a short-term basis and putting part of them into practice. What we have been shown by Afghanistan in the way of a challenge requires a long-term response whose preparation will be the main task of the next weeks and months.

[Question] And this can be done within the framework of NATO even though--you just mentioned Japan--Japan is not a member of NATO?

[Answer] I think that this is not a task restricted to NATO; what this involves is a whole package of measures: military and economic development aid, mutual coordination in security and foreign policies. After all, the oil supply for nearly all the countries of the world, for the developing countries, for Western Europe, for North America, for Japan is in jeopardy, and this alone is what makes the invasion of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union so particularly dangerous to us. This goes to show that NATO would be biting off more than it could chew were it trying to find an answer all on its own. It is an answer that many must find. Besides, it is necessary to keep in mind at all times in this context that the countries of the region involved are not at all prepared to become protectorates of either the Soviet Union or of NATO. Hence, we must accept an independent policy on the part of that region; in fact we must even promote it.

[Question] How do you assess the current possibility of achieving negotiations and talks with the Soviet Union on the medium-range missiles targeted on Europe, considering that Moscow keeps insisting--as declared again just recently by the Soviet ambassador to East Berlin, Abrasimov--that NATO rescind its Brussels decision of December on the introduction of the Pershing-2 and cruise missiles or officially declare a halt?

[Answer] I do not want to discuss negotiation chances here. But let me say this: First, for more than 2 years now, the Soviet Union has been setting up week by week a new medium-range missile. The Soviet Union, hence, is continuing its armament dynamics unabatedly in this sector. The U.S. weapons required by NATO will be available in 1983 at the earliest. This alone goes to show that propaganda will not work. NATO will be unable to retract its decisions. Negotiations must begin, that is, negotiations without any preconditions. After all, we do not pose any preconditions for the Soviet Union, either. This means, in other words: Commonsense alone must, can be victorious, and this commonsense means beginning negotiations and halting the arms race. It is naive and unpolitical to believe that we would open negotiations by renouncing parity which must be our goal. And this, I think, probably can be corrected once we reach calmer political waters, and it must be the objective of our policy.

FRANCE WILL NOT PARTICIPATE IN U.S.-PROPOSED AFGHANISTAN SUMMIT

NC081239 Paris AFP in English 1230 GMT 8 Feb 80 NC

[Excerpt] Paris, Feb. 8, (AFP)--France does not intend to participate in a five-nation summit on the Afghanistan crisis proposed by U.S. Secretary of State Cyprus Vance last night, it was learned here today. A French Government spokesman said Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet would not attend a Feb. 21 meeting in Bonn planned for Mr. Vance and foreign ministers of Britain, West Germany, Italy and France. Informed sources said the French Government was in favor of consultation meetings but not those that take place in an atmosphere of confrontation. Sources said France would continue meeting with its different Western partners.

Further Details

LD081928 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 8 Feb 80 LD

[Text] A little diplomatic mystery: The Americans wanted to hold a kind of council of war with their Western allies to discuss Afghanistan on 20 February in Bonn. The Elysee immediately let it be known that France would not take part in this conference. The Germans, on their part, claim to be totally in the dark. Will they go or won't they? There seems to be some mystery. Here is Ralph Pinto:

[Pinto] The date is set for 20 February. A visit to Bonn is scheduled for U.S. Secretary of State Cyprus Vance, and it seems that the Americans--possibly helped by their German friends--may have hoped for a broadening of the meeting into a five-power conference, including the United States, the FRG, France, Great Britain and Italy. At one time it was even considered holding this conference at a level higher than that of foreign minister, at which the Afghan affair and events in Iran would have been thoroughly examined.

But France said no. No, because as President Giscard d'Estaing explained after the French-German summit, it is necessary to endeavor to avoid everything that leads to or involves the rebirth of blocs. This is a rejection of the two blocs--the division of the world into two. And since Paris has said no, Bonn now no longer wants to give the impression of having accepted the American idea, or even of having supported it.

The French strategy is that solidarity exists and that parallel to it one must remain in contact with all parties. It is therefore in this spirit that the president of the republic explained the results of the French-German summit in two letters addressed to Leonid Brezhnev and Jimmy Carter. It was also in this spirit Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet received the Soviet ambassador at the Quai d'Orsay this morning.

'Poor Coordination' of Visit

LD091948 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 9 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] [Announcer] U.S. Secretary of State Cyprus Vance has not fixed his appointments after 20 February. On that day, he will be in Bonn to meet with the West German minister of foreign affairs, a meeting which has sparked off a certain misunderstanding. Here is our reporter Ralph Pinto:

[Begin recording] [Ralph Pinto] Let us not forget that 20 February is the final date fixed by the Americans for the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, or Washington will officially declare a boycott of the Moscow Olympic games.

Tonight one may ask how and why this French-American affair--this poor coordination, this lack of understanding--has come about. Denis Poncet reports from Washington:

[Denis Poncet] Torpedoing, scuttling, boycotting--all these accusations are leveled at France by an American press that is very bitter today after the French refusal to attend a meeting of foreign ministers in Bonn on 20 February. In fact, it appears indeed that it is the Americans who are largely responsible for the French attitude. Presented at the start as an informal meeting, a Schmidt-Vance dinner to which the foreign ministers would be invited, this Bonn rendezvous was transformed by the Americans into a proper summit of the Western front directed against the USSR which was entirely unacceptable to the French. Paris, on several occasions, and once again yesterday through Prime Minister Raymond Barre in New York, has clearly stated its position--independence regarding the two blocs, but fidelity to the alliances.

Therefore, it is not so much a question of fundamentals, because the two countries understand each other even when they do not agree, but rather a question of form which is leading to this cooling between Paris and Washington. This will be the main subject of conversations which Vance will have with the French authorities when he stops over in Paris, no doubt on 21 February, or so one gathers from the State Department. Barre Comment

[Text] As you know, the French Government has decided not to participate in the meeting in Bonn on the Afghan crisis, considering that the meeting would merely increase international tension. The Americans, who had asked for this meeting through Cyrus Vance, are not happy and speak of France's hesitation. Is there a certain amount of tension between Europe, France and the United States? This is what Bernard Valette asked Premier Raymond Barre, who is currently on a visit in New York.

[Begin Barre recording] I do not think so. I do believe that there is obviously at the moment in the United States an awakening of public opinion, and that the events which took place first in Iran and then in Afghanistan gave rise to a certain number of issues which are of direct interest to the United States. To believe, from this, as is said, that a rift is opening between the Europeans and the United States--I do not think so. What is indispensable is that each party should make an effort to understand the position of the other. Where there is a desire for understanding and a desire to explain, I doubt that there could be long-lasting tensions. [end recording]

BOURGES ON MILITARY AID TO SAUDI ARABIA

LD081240 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 8 Feb 80 LD

[Text] For the first time, Defense Minister Yvon Bourges has given some details on reports published by LE POINT to the effect that specialized French gendarmes took part in the operations to free the Grand Mosque in Mecca which was invaded by rebels in November. The minister of defense, in replying to written questions from several Communist and Socialist deputies said: A French technical military assistance mission is permanently assisting the Saudi forces. This technical assistance excludes any intervention in operations of war or maintenance of law and order. Mr Bourges was speaking about the military in general, and he did not refer explicitly to military personnel of the national gendarmerie intervention group.

PCI ROLE IN GOVERNMENT MAIN ISSUE AS DC CONGRESS NEARS

AU080945 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 8 Feb 80 AU

[Excerpt] Rome, February 8 (ANSA)--The Christian Democrat Congress one week from now and the Cabinet line-up that will replace the incumbent government of Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga, are the two main issues of political debate in Italy today.

All the factions within the Christian Democrat Party (DC) are active in view of the congress, while the other parties are beginning to define their positions towards the three-party government which along with Cossiga's own DC includes the Social Democrats (PSDI), and Liberals (PLI), with the parliamentary support of the Socialists (PSI) and Republicans (PRI).

Within the DC, the "Dorotea" faction, the party's second largest after the faction centered around party Secretary Benigno Zaccagnini, reiterated the need for the largest possible grouping within the party and which gives priority to a government platform rather than to its make-up.

On Thursday, the faction which gathers around Senate speaker and DC veteran Amintore Fanfani met and came out in favor of a policy of reform and democratic solidarity which, while respecting the role and clout of the Communist Party (PCI), does not presume to involve it in government and power agreements.

Meanwhile, Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer reiterated his party's "minimum conditions" for government participation: "Equal dignity of the coalition parties, recognition of their respective political and parliamentary weight, and a clear platform, specific and with guarantees with respect to commitments for its application".

Speaking about the ties between Italian Communists and the Soviet Union, Berlinguer said that autonomy and "absolute independence of the PCI in its judgments of the reality of socialist countries and its activities in the international field, is widely and nearly universally recognized abroad by observers and not only those on the left".

Berlinguer claimed that in Italy there is the intent "to create a hurdle, a prejudice, to prevent the PCI from taking part as a full-fledged member in the country's government, which is today a national necessity".

Press Comment

AU091602 Rome ANSA in English 1545 GMT 9 Feb 80 AU

[Text] Rome, February 9 (ANSA)--Italian dailies focused today on the imminent Christian Democrat Party [DC] National Congress and the widely predicted collapse of the incumbent government of Prime Minister Cossiga that will follow. All the papers stressed the link between the ruling party's congress and the survival of the Cossiga team (the premier's own Christian Democrats, the Social Democrats and Liberals, with the parliamentary abstention of Socialists [PSI] and Republicans).

The newest factor on the scene is the division within the Socialist Party. Milan's CORRIERE DELLA SERA said in its headline that PSI secretary Bettino Craxi is "opposed to a crisis before the congress", while the leftist faction of his party "is in favor of an immediate collapse of the government". The paper added that another hurdle to an immediate crisis is the position of the Social Democrats whose secretary Pietro Longo "has challenged to the Christian Democrats to form a government with the communists".

Milan's conservative IL GIORNALE NUOVO said that "the pro-crisis new trend emerging in the PSI are complicating the maneuvers of the DC factions in view of the congress".

Turin's LA STAMPA said that, faced with the problem of solving the "Communist issue", the DC would probably prefer not to express itself in binding terms and may try not to. However, contrary to past occasions, it has before it several very specific points. The most important of these, the paper said, is that the dilemma of the Communist either-in-the-government-or-in-the-opposition stance "has no possible intermediary solutions".

Another is "the new attitude of the Socialists, who are also demanding a government of national unity (a government with the communists, ed.) and are pressuring the DC for a clear reply. A third and conclusive point is the Republican proposal for an "unprejudiced" negotiation on a government platform among all the constitutional parties" (including the Communists, ed.).

The Rome daily LA REPUBBLICA said that the Republican Party "will not open the crisis but hopes that the Cossiga government will fall". If in fact, "the Socialists put the government in crisis, the Republicans would be quite happy. Their opinion of the incumbent Cabinet (despite their parliamentary backing) is very critical if not completely critical".

COMMUNIST YOUTH FEDERATION CONFERENCE BEGINS

LD080004 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 7 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The organizational conference of the Communist Youth Federation began at Rimini today. Here is a report:

[Begin recording] The Communist Youth Federation is demanding more autonomy from the party, and it intends to accentuate the initiatives of struggle and its presence among the coming generation.. This was said by Massimo d'Alema, the outgoing secretary, when he opened the proceedings of the national organizational conference of the Communist Youth Federation at Rimini. He also stressed that coherence and firmness are needed from young people against terrorism; he criticized the Cossiga government, labeling it weak, incapable and dangerous; and he condemned the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, while rejecting the idea that the Soviet Union had endangered peace.

Three hundred delegates are present at Rimini, representing 100,000 members. Four years ago there were 140,000 members, and the reasons for this decrease are among the subjects being discussed here at Rimini. The conference will end with election of the new leadership of the Communist Youth Federation and a speech on Sunday by Berlinguer, national secretary of the Communist Party. This is Carlo Valentino for Radio-2, Rimini. [end recording]

[Text] Today, 11 national trade union associations decided to hold a national strike this coming Thursday. The move is aimed at pressing the government to publish a few dozen collective labor agreements which have been suspended by the Ministry of Labor. In the meantime, the ministry has summoned the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers [CGTP] and the General Workers Federation for a meeting this monday. A CGTP spokesman told our reporter that if at the meeting no concrete guarantee is given that the labor agreements will be published, nationwide stoppages will be held on Thursday afternoon, and mass gatherings will take place outside Ministry of Labor offices throughout the country.

[Begin unidentified spokesman recording] This meeting has been given the greatest consideration by the trade union associations, and for their part they will do their utmost to settle the dispute. Without prejudice to this stand, however, the trade union associations have decided to adopt the following measures:

1. To give a strike notice in all sectors affected. The strike, to be held on 14 February in each sector will have a maximum duration of 5 hours, specifically between 1200 and 1900.

PRC DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER CONTINUES OFFICIAL VISIT

OW090128 Hong Kong AFP in English 0100 GMT 9 Feb 80 OW

[Text] Madrid, Feb. 9 (AFP)--Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister Zhang Wenjin was to continue his four-day official visit here today by conferring with Spanish Foreign Minister Marcelino Oreja Aguirre.

While Spanish official sources said the main aim of Mr. Zhang's visit was to build up even further the growing trade between China and Spain, a review of the international situation and the consequences of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan were also on the agenda.

Mr. Zhang wound up his first 24 hours in Spain Friday night when he met the minister for trade and tourism, Juan Antonio Garcia Diez.

His day started with a meeting with the secretary of state for foreign affairs, Carlos Robles Piquer, with whom he had a further appointment on Monday. The two were reported to have discussed the Afghan situation and next autumn's follow-up to the Helsinki and Belgrade [word indistinct] of the European Conference on Security and Cooperation (ECSC). The discussions also ranged over the current hot spots in Central America and China's views on Taiwan.

The Chinese visitor later called on both houses of the Spanish parliament, where he was greeted by Ignacio Caminas, chairman of the lower house foreign affairs committee, and Senate Vice-President Jose Guerra Zanzunegui.

At his meeting with the trade and tourism minister, Mr. Zhang reviewed trade between the two countries, which grew by 20 percent in 1979--a continuation of the progress which started with the 1978 China visit by King Juan Carlos. Mr. Garcia Diez is due to travel to China next month.

Mr. Zhang's contacts here will include not only government officials but also representatives of private business. Sino-Hispanic trade currently centers on Spain's exports of steel and fertilizer and imports of Chinese silk, chemicals and park.

Sources here said Mr. Zhang might meet Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez, although no such meeting was on the formal schedule. Sunday was to be devoted to tourism, with Mr. Zhang visiting the historic city of Toledo, an hour's drive southwest of the capital. A reception at the Chinese Embassy was scheduled for Monday night, and Mr. Zhang was to leave for Portugal on Tuesday.

Spain broke diplomatic relations with Guatemala on 1 February. This act followed the occupation of the Spanish Embassy in that country by a group of Guatemalan peasants who later burned the embassy in which 39 persons died.

LD090408 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 8 Feb 80 LD

[Interview with Mr Oyarzabal, director general of the diplomatic information office, conducted by Madrid radio reporter Gerardo Saez on 8 February in Madrid--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Next Sunday Prime Minister Suarez will travel to Iraq and Jordan. What will the prime minister do there?

[Answer] I would underline two aspects of this trip: bilateral and regional relations. On the one hand, with regard to bilateral relations with Iraq, we have had excellent relations for many years, and I would almost venture to say that within the context of the Arab countries these relations are special. Iraq is one of Spain's largest sources of oil and has always shown its friendship with an oil policy which I would call very generous. Perhaps corresponding to these crude oil sales to Spain, Iraq has bought and continues to buy large amounts of Spanish products. We have seen the friendship with which this country honors us demonstrated in a way which goes beyond normal commercial relations. The field of possibilities is enormous and therefore I believe that we have total justification for this trip. As far as the regional aspect is concerned, let us not forget that Iraq is a pivotal country in the Middle East and therefore in the problem of Palestine, the very serious problem of Israel and of the confrontation of the Arab countries against the state of Israel. It is also a country which has one foot in Asia Minor, that is, in Iran [as heard], and is very near Afghanistan.

Regarding Jordan, I do not have to tell you about the traditional bonds of friendship between our countries. In the political sphere Jordan is in the frontline of the Palestinian problem.

I believe that if we, who have been putting forward a policy of rapprochement between the parties involved in the Middle East problem and at the same time explaining our point of view--a point of view which carries specific weight since we have considered ourselves very close to these countries for many years--we have enormous interest in getting to know [word indistinct] all the circumstances, the opinion of King Husayn and of the Jordanian Government on the Middle East problem. [sentence as heard]

CARRILLO COMMENTS ON TERRORISM, DIFFERENCES WITHIN PCE

LD081517 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 6 Feb 80 p 14 LD

[Sebastian Garcia report: "Santiago Carrillo Warns of Gravity of Rightwing Terrorism"]

[Excerpts] PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo yesterday warned of the gravity which rightwing terrorism is assuming, since "it is taking forms like in Argentina, Uruguay, Chile or Guatemala. And we seem to be witnessing the resurgence of parallel police forces like those which operated in the past."

Carrillo's warning proceeded from the reflection that as the political scene shifts rightward, "a very heavy atmosphere is being created in the country," with the conjunction of extreme rightwing and extreme leftwing terrorism.

Although he pointed out the need for better state intelligence services to combat leftwing terrorists and significant participation by the political forces in the task, he said that rightwing terrorism would not disappear as a result of banning groups or demanding some minister's resignation "but as a result of breaking up these terrorist gangs, which are easier to find than Basque Homeland and Liberty, because they have their sanctuary here."

Carrillo also said that a rift has occurred among the political forces which administered the changeover [from Francosim to democracy] for which the Union of the Democratic Center's rightwing course is responsible. "Quite apart from party interests," he stated, "this rift is dangerous for our still fragile democracy, and an effort aimed at establishing an atmosphere which will make dialog possible and stop terrorism is therefore necessary."

From the Communist viewpoint, this situation requires above all a rapprochement between the PCE and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, education and, most particularly, trade union fields. It is not matter of burying the polemics between the Workers Commissions and the General Workers Unions, "because differences exist, but we must insure that they proceed unaggressively."

On another topic, Carrillo acknowledged that groups with support of Soviet origin are attempting to foment differences in the PCE and to change its course, although the problem is not very grave. The Communist leader commented that the PCE is still in the process of being built, on the basis of an organization which is perhaps too compartmentalized internally as a result of having been underground [under Franco's regime]. This is why there are people "who believe that the Workers Commissions are more representative of the vanguard than the PCE, because they are the workers' trade union, while others maintain an elitist stance, unconnected with the mass movement's practical future." Nevertheless, Carrillo asserted that Eurocommunism "is more necessary and useful today than ever as a party trend of resolving problems through negotiations, and has a great future ahead of it."

I then returned to New York, where I had a second meeting with Dr Waldheim. On my return trip I met with British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington in London. On my way to New York from Cyprus I stopped in Greece, where I met Foreign Minister Rallis.

My trip, of course, was connected with the national issue and, in particular, with the secretary general's effort for the resumption of the dialog. The framework for this dialog has already been set down, but at this moment a serious effort is being exerted to resume the dialog that was interrupted on 22 June 1979. This is why I have visited, in addition to UN headquarters, those countries that can assist in the resumption of this dialog.

I must say that our past experience with the Cyprus problem has been rather disappointing and bitter. We have tried several times--we have had seven rounds of talks--without any success so far. There has not even been progress. We used to begin talks and stop after a few days without achieving anything. The only thing we have arrived at so far in the dialog field are the 12 February Makarios-Denktas agreement and the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement of 19 May 1979. Consequently, there must be a serious effort if we are to be able to start some dialog. Because we are aware of past difficulties, because we are aware to the impediments we shall come across, because we know where we stumble when we set off, preparatory work is taking place. This is precisely how my efforts should be viewed. I am not holding negotiations or preliminary negotiations. I am trying to prepare the ground based on my knowledge as a result of past experience of the difficulties we will encounter.

Everywhere I went I met with friendship, cordiality, and understanding as well as serious concern about Cyprus and its problem and about our geographical region. We have discussed the problem in detail. We have dealt with it in all of its aspects and have arrived at some conclusions. I expect that in the next few days the UN secretary general will actively move on our area so that a substantive dialog may be resumed. In this effort he will be assisted by all those who have the means to do so. This is what we expect.

In conclusion I would like to say this: My own effort as foreign minister has not been undertaken solely on behalf of the Greek Cypriots, but on behalf of all Cypriots. We are not trying to persuade anyone, either Dr Waldheim or any government, that a biased Cyprus solution must be found. If we arrive at an unfair solution will not allow this country to survive either for the Greeks or the Turks. Therefore, we are trying to find a fair solution, a well-balanced solution, so that the two communities may be able to live happily in the future in this country. For this reason I would beg, I would ask Mr Denktas to view the whole question positively and to respond to the secretary general's efforts. We will look at and respond to these efforts in an absolutely positive way.

Additional Report

NC091645 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 9 Feb 80 NC

[Report on Cyprus Foreign Minister Rolandhis' remarks to newsmen at Larnaca Airport on 9 February upon his return to Cyprus]

[Excerpt] Answering a question, Mr Rolandhis said that if the dialog is resumed he expects that this will happen before the current month is out or in early March. He also said that both Mr Waldheim and the representatives of the governments whom he has met have been exerting, and will continue to exert, very serious efforts for the resumption of a substantive dialog that would likely lead to success.

In connection with the colonization of Famagusta, Mr Rolandhis said that during his visits he raised this question and, as has been said in the past, we have had some assurances that there is no approval for the colonization of the city. He also said that this question will be discussed during the negotiations if they are resumed. He added: The Famagusta question is also a priority question. He said that if the talks are held, they will be based on the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement. The UN resolutions, he stressed, cannot be abolished by anyone.

AKEL REPORTEDLY PREPARES FOR ANTIGOVERNMENT CAMPAIGN

NC090954 Nicosia I MAKHI in Greek 9 Feb 80 p 1 NC

[Text] According to our verified and indisputable information, AKEL has decided to declare a "war of attrition" against the government if President Kiprianou does not satisfy some of the Communists' demands: Their main demand is that Mr Sofianos must keep the Ministry of Education portfolio in the event of a cabinet reshuffle.

According to the same information, AKEL has already prepared a "dossier of mistakes" by the government containing various government decisions and other actions by President Kiprianou which, according to the AKEL allegations, are directed against the party or incompatible with the spirit of cooperation among the so-called patriotic democratic forces.

The preparations for the "war of attrition" against the government are being made on Moscow's instructions to AKEL, because the Kremlin leaders fear active intervention by the West in settling the Cyprus issue, an act that would deal a fatal blow to Soviet influence and interests in Cyprus.

This Moscow concern has increased following Foreign Minister Rolandhis' latest contacts in Washington and London. It is also expected that this concern will climax during the forthcoming visits by President Kiprianou to West European capitals.

According to the same information, definite cancellation of President Kiprianou's official visit to Moscow--which has been repeatedly postponed--should not be ruled out. The visit was to take place early last summer, but at the last minute the Soviet Government decided to put it off, apparently at Ankara's request.

IRISH PRESIDENT LEAVES ATHENS AFTER UNOFFICIAL VISIT

AT081640 Athens Armed Forces Television Service in Greek 1600 GMT 8 Feb 80 AT

Speaking to an Armed Forces Television network correspondent prior to his departure, Foreign Minister Lenihan said that during their short visit in Athens both President Hillery and he, personally, had the opportunity to exchange views with President of the Republic Tsatsos, Prime Minister Karamanlis and other members of the government on Greece's imminent accession to the EEC next January.

We discussed methods of cooperation in areas of interest to the two countries within the framework of existing possibilities, Lenihan said. Greece and Ireland have many common problems and goals, and their joint handling of them is in the more general interests of the two nations.

Replying to a question, Lenihan said the Karamanlis proposal for permanently holding the Olympic games in Greece is correct and just. It is correct because in this way the games will not deviate from their mission and will cease to be the object of political exploitation. It is just because Greece is the country which gave birth to the Olympic ideal and, consequently, it is the only country which can claim to hold them permanetly. If this is finally approved, it will mean the return of the Olympic games to their natural environment.

LORD KILLANIN REPLIES TO KARAMANLIS LETTER ON OLYMPICS

AT072025 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 7 Feb 80 AT

[Text] In a letter to Prime Minister Karamanlis, the chairman of the IOC, Lord Killanin, has replied to the issue of permanently holding the Olympic games in Greece. Lord Killanin stresses that the appropriate time to discuss the matter is in 1981, when the Olympic conference will be held and the views of all concerned parties will have become known.

After thanking the prime minister for his letter, the IOC chairman informs him that it has been included in the agenda of the 82d meeting of the IOC, which begins today in Lake Placid in the United States, where the winter Olympics will be held. He also mentions that the 1984 Olympics have been planned for Los Angeles.

Lord Killanin's letter to Karamanlis ends as follows: Allow me to reiterate that I fully appreciate and share your uneasiness in connection with the future of the very significant Olympic movement and that now I am absolutely open to every relevant proposal. I cannot tell you how grateful I am, personally, to you for your continuing support and concern in these exceptionally difficult times.

As has been learned, the prime minister has proposed that if it is not possible to make a decision now on this question, a mixed committee should be formed to study all aspects of the issue so that it may be possible to make a decision in 1981 when the Olympic conference is held.

KKE'S FLORAKIS SCORES GOVERNMENT POSITION ON OLYMPICS

AT081420 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 5 Feb 80 p 1 AT [Text] The idea of holding the Olympic games permanently in our country would only have meaning in a Greece without military bases, withdrawn from military coalitions, in a spirit which would truly express the spirit of brotherhood among nations. This was stressed yesterday by Kharilaos Florakis, secretary general of the Central Committee of the KKE [Ext], in answer to reporters' questions related to the prime minister's well-known proposal to hold the Olympic games permanently in Greece.

In answer to this clear position of the KKE, the government reacted in a spasmodic way without replying to the essence of the matter. The government spokesman in his statements resorted to crude anticommunist allegations. This confirms Florakis' underlining of the fact that "the government attempts to exploit the entire issue for party reasons."

The government spokesman stressed: "It is not strange that Florakis is against the permanent holding of the Olympic games in Greece because both he as well as his party never had nor do they have the interests of Greece as the criterion for their policy. They are only interested in the interests of communism."

This government statement, expressly directed against the leftwing, unavoidably gives the prime minister's proposal the character of confrontation with the country's progressive forces. This in itself jeopardizes the proposal to defend the institution "against its involvement in political and ideological differences," in addition to raising questions about the realism and sincerity of such a proposal.

Commenting upon the government spokesman's statement, KKE circles made the following statement last night: "The government spokesman pretends that he has not understood, and at the same time distorts the statement of the secretary general of the Central Committee, Kharilaos Florakis. We reiterate: The KKE supports a Greece out of military coalitions, without nuclear weapons, neutral and peace-loving, which will be able to truly respond to the Olympic ideal. Consequently it is not the KKE which is against the permanent holding of the Olympic games in our country. It is those who want our country attached to the chariot of Atlantism. For them the idea of the permanent holding of the Olympic games in Greece is, to say the least, utopian."

Florakis Statement

Answering reporters' questions on the issue of Greece as a permanent site for the Olympic games, Comrade Kharilaos Florakis made the following statement: "From the outset, yesterday's statement by 'athletic circles'--that allegedly the leftwing is avoiding taking a position on the issue--reveals that the government is attempting to exploit the proposal for the permanent holding of the Olympic games in our country for its own party reasons.

"Now let us deal with the specific issue of the proposal: Generally the idea is not a bad one as a vision, and from one viewpoint it concerns the Greek people because it is related to the Olympic games of ancient Greece and with the peace-loving character of our nation. This idea would have been good and realistic if it did not clash with Greece's reality today. As is well known, peaceful competition and the brotherhood of nations are the high ideals of the Olympic games. This context could not be expressed through permanently holding the games in the same place because, as you know, our world is what it is today. [paragraph continues]

It is for this reason, naturally over and above others such as acquaintance with other nations, encouragement and development of the athletic spirit, that alternation of host countries was adopted as the only solution for the expression and implementation of the Olympic spirit.

"Now the prime minister of the government officially makes the proposal to permanently hold the Olympic games in Greece. This idea clashes with the current Greek reality. How can there be an expression of the peaceful brotherhood among nations by a Greece with American military bases or by a Greece which belongs to the aggressive NATO coalition?

"Even the prime minister must be in a position to see this contrast, and it is for this reason that he tried to circumvent it by proposing that the area where the games would be held should be declared neutral territory. The reference, however, is not to any 'state of Olympia' but to the state of Greece. It is for this reason that the idea of permanently holding the Olympic games in Greece would only have meaning in a Greece which would be the example of peaceful competition and cooperation among nations, without military bases, removed from military coalitions, a Greece which would truly express the spirit of brotherhood among nations."

KKE (INTERIOR) STATEMENT WARNS OF U.S., NATO DESIGNS

AT081524 Athens I AVYI in Greek 8 Feb 80 p 1 AT

[Statement released on 7 February by the press office of the KKE (Interior) urging democratic forces to block U.S. plans]

[Text] The press office of the KKE (Interior) yesterday released the following statement: "Latest developments--statements by McCloskey and Averof, moves by Rogers and Luns, statements by Turkish officials--demonstrate that the process of our country's return to NATO's military wing is being advanced under U.S.-NATO pressures and under conditions detrimental to our country. They are also promoting the signing of the U.S.-Greek agreement on bases--instead of abolishing these bases--which will result in decreasing our country's independence, increasing restrictions in implementing an independent foreign policy, moving closer to Washington's imperialist policy and decreasing prospects for support of the cause of Cyprus.

"It is, therefore, nationally unacceptable that the government should maintain silence over this unfavorable development in our national problems and that it should express its satisfaction over the alleged 'balancing' of Washington's military aid--with a ratio of 7 to 10 in favor of Turkey over Greece without even taking 'economic' aid into consideration--which gives Ankara the balance, permits it to maintain its 'faits accomplis' conquests in Cyprus and allows it to promote its expansionist views on the Aegean.

"In the face of the serious dangers created by the New Democracy government, the government has an obligation to inform the Chamber of Deputies and the people on developments which are taking place at the expense of national interests. It must inform the Chamber and the people on its own position toward the Rogers proposals, on the trisection of the Aegean and on the problem of the new bases agreement, an issue which in older statements the government had connected with the agreement for our return to NATO's military wing under special relations and without concessions--at the expense of our national and sovereign rights over the Aegean. Today, more than ever before, it is the duty of all democratic and national forces to raise decisive obstacles along the course on which the American's are attempting to lead our country."

FOREIGN MINISTER RETURNS FROM BRUSSELS EEC MEETING

TA081627 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen said that Turkey was in no position to give guarantees to any nation or organization. Erkmen said: We are trying to secure economic stability in Turkey.

Erkmen, who participated in the Turkish-EEC Association Council meeting in Brussels, the capital of Belgium, has returned to Ankara. In a statement at Esenboga Airport, Erkmen said that Turkey's wish to join the EEC was received favorably by the Community's member countries. Erkmen said:

[Begin Erkmen recording] At the meeting I explained our views and what our objective is in renewing our relations with the EEC and our decision to join the EEC as soon as possible. This decision was favorably received by the Community members and the administration. A joint communique was issued. In a news conference the next day I announced Turkey's decision to try and join the Community this year and that we will continue our efforts in this direction. I was in Paris yesterday, where I met with the OECD secretary general. Van Lennep had earlier visited Turkey and we conferred with him then. We exchanged views on the economic measures to be taken during his visit to Turkey. At this meeting I asked him his assessment of the economic measures the government has taken. He said that they had assessed them positively. He said that all efforts were being exerted to speed up aid to Turkey in order to insure the program's success. [end recording]

Noting that he had left Brussels for Paris where he had met with the secretary general of the OECD, Erkmen said that the organization was carrying out intense work regarding aid to Turkey. Erkmen concluded by saying that with these recent developments the Turkish economy might become stable in the spring.

NSP REJECTS EEC TIES, SUPPORTS AFGHAN REBELS

TA091742 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 9 Feb 80 TA

[Text] A statement issued by the National Salvation Party [NSP] Administrative Council in Ankara today criticizes the government's stand on the military intervention in Afghanistan and on Turkey's application for full membership in the EEC.

The statement says that the government's stand on the invasion of Afghanistan was regrettable. The statement asks the government to refuse to recognize the administration that is currently ruling Afghanistan, to implement the resolutions made at the Islamic conference [in Islamabad] and to extend various aid to the Afghan resistence forces and refugees.

The statement says that the government's application for full membership in the EEC is a grave step. The NSP, the statement says, as in the past, will always oppose such sly steps made behind appearances of a simple improvement in trade relations between Turkey and the EEC or the sending of Turkish workers abroad.

The statement notes that the NSP will do everything possible in the parliament and throughout the country to alleviate the burden of the high cost of living on the low-income groups.

OUR RADIO CRITICIZES U.S., DEMIREL ON AFGHANISTAN

TA081155 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0900 GMT 8 Feb 80 TA

[Unattributed commentary: "The Enemies of the Afghan People Are Bound To Be Defeated"]

[Text] Dear listeners, as will be recalled, the U.S. President's assistant for national security affairs, Brzezinski, has--as the major representative of the interests of state monopolist capitalism and the war industry monopolies--held talks with the ferocious enemies of the Afghan people during his visit to Islamabad, Pakistan's capital. Brzezinski worked to create a new militarist pact in the region stretching from Pakistan to the Horn of Africa--a region he described as an unstable and (?volatile) region for imperialism. Brzezinski's visit to Riyadh, Saudi Arabia's capital, was connected with efforts being made by U.S. imperialism and its satellites to create a military pact against the peoples of the Middle East and Near East and particularly against the Afghan people. However, the Riyadh rulers said they would not submit to the militarist demands of the United States, which supplies great amounts of weapons to the Israeli Zionists and their collaborators, the As-Sadat clique. In his statement on 5 February, Iran's religious leader Khomeyni exposed the policy of U.S. imperialism and the Israeli Zionists--who completely support U.S. imperialism--aimed at increasing tension in the region.

Developments prove that the U.S. and NATO imperialists resort to all means in a bid to take over and plunder the oil reserves and natural resources in the Middle East and Near East and to place the regional peoples under their hegemony. The policy of hostility implemented by U.S. imperialism and its partners against the Afghan people and revolution is obvious in the campaign undertaken to slander the Soviet Union's internationalist aid and to fan anti-Sovietism. The hegemonist Beijing administration, which (?aspires) to become a superpower, is cooperating fully with the U.S. and NATO warmongers and the Afghan counterrevolutionaries. As a recent statement by the Afghan Democratic Republic's defense minister, Lt Col Mohammad Rafi', notes, PRC Foreign Minister Huang Hua visited a camp in Pakistan's Khyber Pass in [words indistinct] where the counterrevolutionaries are trained. In brief, Washington and Beijing are vying with each other in supplying advisers for sabotage and murder to Afghanistan's big landlords, counterrevolutionaries and Muslim brotherhood organizations--a nest of murderers. Israel, Arab reactionaries and Pakistan are among those supplying arms to the Afghan landlords--the enemies of the Afghan people--and to the counterrevolutionary hired murderers.

Under U.S. pressure, our country's pro-American pro-NATO Demirel government sided with the Afghan counterrevolutionary murderers at the Islamabad conference. Foreign Minister Erkmen's (?denunciation) of the aid extended to the Islamic Afghan people by our big neighbor the Soviet Union and his slander of Soviet internationalist aid are the best proof of this stand. The democratic and socialist forces and our people support the Afghan people. This widespread solidarity is active support for the national independence of the Afghan people and its revolutionary gains. The worldwide strengthening of the movement of solidarity with the Afghan people is the strongest proof of the defeat of the counterrevolutionaries and their masters.

He said Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel briefed him on a recent Turkish economic stabilization program. Mr Geissler, leading a party delegation, arrived here for a 4-day visit on Wednesday as guest of the Justice Party.

GOVERNMENT CONDITIONALLY OPPOSES GREECE'S RETURN TO NATO

TA081439 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1425 GMT 8 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, Feb 8 (AA)--Turkey would not agree to a return of Greece of NATO's military wing under pre-1974 conditions, Foreign Ministry officials note.

Consulted about the ongoing negotiations in Brussels on the subject, the officials confirmed Turkey entirely agrees about the desirability of having Greece return to the military wing of the alliance in principle, but added that a turn to pre-1974 conditions was "out of the question." This, they noted, has been Turkey's policy all along.

Ministry officials described as "entirely speculative" press reports alleging Turkey's responsibilities in the Aegean would be "restricted" if Greece returns to NATO's military wing.

The ministry had no information to confirm the so-called "Aegean plan" mentioned in press reports, and attributed to NATO.

Foreign Ministry sources pointed out that mining of the sea by Greece around the Aegean Islands was a means of militarizing the islands, which Turkey will continue to oppose.

ERKMEN EXPLAINS FOREIGN POLICY IN SENATE BUDGET DEBATE

TA101844 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1725 GMT 10 Feb 80 TA

[Excerpts] Ankara, 10 Feb (AA)--Replying to criticism made during the debate of his ministry's budget in the Senate today, Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen said: Our government, which follows a strict policy of independence and sovereignty and which preserves our national interests with great care, devotion and uncompromising responsibility, conducts a realistic foreign policy without being affected by emotions. There is no place for submission in our foreign policy. By "submission" I mean not only a refusal to submit to the views and requests of foreign powers in the conduct of our foreign policy but also a refusal to make our foreign relations an instrument of dogmatic beliefs.

Attack on Our Envoys, a Murderous Act

Referring to attacks on Turkish envoys abroad, Erkmen said that nothing could justify the killing of innocent people. Erkmen continued: I express my sympathies to the victims of these attacks against our country and nation. This subject must be handled meticulously. We have taken certain measures to prevent these incidents and we will continue to do so.

Turkey and NATO

Recalling that the latest developments have proved the fragility of world security and stability, Erkmen said [words illegible] that our world will continue to be confronted with events that may threaten (?peace) and security. Erkmen added: As a result, NATO will continue to fulfill its deterrent military and political functions in a bid to bolster and guarantee the national security and sovereignty of its member countries. Without this, the threat and danger of aggression and war will always loom as an urgent problem. Under these circumstances, preserving the balance of power between East and West continues to be important. A swift (?action) to meet Turkey's defense needs [words illegible] our contribution to NATO. I would like to express my satisfaction over the determined stand of our allies on the issue of meeting Turkey's urgent defense needs. This stand was seen in the contacts and talks we had recently. As a matter of fact, the work of the NATO ad hoc committee has reached an advanced stage.

Defense and Cooperation Agreement

Noting that some doubts were expressed and some wrong assessments were made about the use of the joint defense installations in accordance with the defense and cooperation agreement initialed with the United States, Erkmen said: The installations in our country are for defense purposes. The use of these installations for purposes other than opposing an armed aggression within the aims of NATO and the commitments of the NATO pact [words indistinct] is out of the question. These installations belong to the Turkish Armed Forces and are under its command. The United States utilizes the joint defense installations with the permission of the Turkish Government. Foreign sovereignty over these installations is out of the question. Allegations that these installations are [military] bases are unfounded.

Relations With the EEC

Later, the foreign minister briefed the Senate on the Turkey-EEC Association Committee meeting in Brussels on 5 February. Erkmen said that a dialog was established in these meetings, based on the constructive atmosphere that was created during his contacts in Brussels in December 1979. This development should be considered a constructive phase, Erkmen said, which is promising for the solution of our differences with the EEC.

Turkey's Foreign Trade

Referring to relations, Erkmen said that [words illegible] (?improvements) were realized in Turkey's relations with international economic and financial organizations and the OECD countries.

PRIME MINISTER ASSESSES PROBLEMS FACING GOVERNMENT

TA101616 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1547 GMT 10 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 10 Feb (AA)--Prime Minister and Justice Party [JP] leader Suleyman Demirel told the JP Representatives Council, which convened today, that the present government was an emergency government. "This is not a caretaker government," he said, adding: "In November 1979, the JP had a mission. It had to lead the country once more out of the crisis she had been driven into. We volunteered to assume the post in difficult times."

Following are the highlights of the prime minister's speech: "We are not obsessed with the chair (the power). The problems we are facing do not allow discussions lacking seriousness on what we have been able to realize or what we had promised, we have taken the right road and everything will be right in due time.

"Turkey's main problem is anarchy. Paralleling it, there are the economic problems. Another problem, which cannot be separated from the first two problems cited, is the problem concerning defense. There is also a problem concerning the state authority, a problem with complications closely affiliated with the other problems I have mentioned. The state's democratic authority has been undermined. No state can allow focal points of treason to undermine its foundations. Either let the nation wait and see the results of the measures we have adopted, or let us resort to the nation whenever you want.

"The Nationalist Action Party has been loyal to its decision to support our government. The National Salvation Party, on the other hand, has not voted for us to see us succeed. On the opposite, they voted for us (during the vote of confidence) in an attempt to show that we are no good. If we are indeed no good, then they should stay calm and take it easy."

IZMIR WORKERS PROTEST PLANT CLOSING; VIOLENCE ERUPTS

Workers Protest

TA081716 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1655 GMT 8 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Izmir, Feb 8 (AA)--Workers of the cotton yarn factory of TARIS, the producers sales cooperatives union, at Cigli, Izmir, were given half an hour to evacuate the plant, where they have shut themselves in to protest the management's decision to halt production for a week. Some 2,000 police and gendarmerie have surrounded the factory against the possibility that the workers might continue to resist.

Security forces had to ride in panzers over street barricades set up and fires started by warehouse workers in order to get to the factory grounds. Fistfights and fights with clubs occurred in places between resisting workers and police on the way to the plant. Seven persons including two policemen, were slightly injured, and [words indistinct] the clashes. Fire was opened on police from inside the factory, officials said.

Sympathy Strike Spreads

Cargo transport workers, technicians not affiliated with unions, and employees of neighboring municipalities near Izmir joined the 24-hour sympathy strike held by DISK [Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions] affiliated unions today to protest the incidents at TARIS plants.

Groups held unauthorized demonstrations and spread posters and banners in various quarters of Izmir. Pistol fire was heard, but police refrained from making any statement for the moment.

Turk-Is Not Involved

Unions affiliated with the Turkish Confederation of Labor were "not involved" in the protests, it was reported.

Friday Sitin

TA091526 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1445 GMT 9 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Izmir, 9 Feb (AA)--Workers of TARIS , the producers sales cooperatives union, who had evacuated a cottonseed oil plant in Izmir under instructions from security forces Thursday evening, returned to set in at the plant Friday. They shut themselves in and refused police orders to evacuate, officials said. When police (?forced the) gates with panzers, the workers started a fire and used firearms and explosives, officials charged.

The governor of Izmir "thanked" those TARIS workers who had "complied with" instructions by the security forces. He explained the decision of TARIS management to suspend production for a week was "not a lockout," and that management told him only 500-600 of the 7,700 workers employed by TARIS may be dismissed "on the grounds of having conducted unlawful strikes, resistance or damage."

The secretary general of the Izmir Tradesmen and Artisans Association claimed their members had been forced to close shop at gunpoint Friday. He said their members always preferred negotiating and rejected bullying.

MEDITERRANEAN NONALINED MEETING EXPELS EGYPT

AU081725 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 7 Feb 80 p 1 AU

[Text] Valletta, 6 February, TANJUG--Egypt was expelled last night from the meeting of the Mediterranean nonalined countries that is being held in Valletta. The demand to expel it was made at the beginning of the afternoon session by the Arab countries, which explained that even after the sixth conference of the nonalined countries, Egypt has continued to implement the Camp David agreement and the separate peace treaty with Israel, both of which measures had been condemned at the Havana meeting. In this way, it was said, Egypt has been developing relations with Israel which is carrying out aggression against the Arabs, occupying parts of the Arab territories, including Palestine, and negating the indisputable national rights of the Palestinian people.

The Egyptian representative presented the opposite viewpoint citing the sixth summit's decision to the effect that a report on Egypt's activities be submitted to the ministerial conference of the nonalined countries in New Delhi in 1981. Therefore, Egypt disputed the competence of the Valletta gathering to decide on the request of the Arab countries.

A large number of delegations took part in the discussion. Abela, Maltese secretary for foreign affairs and chairman of the gathering, concluded that Egypt could not stay at the gathering. The three-member Egyptian delegation then left the meeting.

IRAQ'S HAMMADI VIEWS EUROPEAN-ARAB DIALOG, AREA ISSUES

AU091535 Rome ANSA in English 0855 GMT 9 Feb 80 AU

[Text] Brussels, February 9--Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi spoke out in favor of revitalizing the dialogue between Europe and the Arab world in a press conference held here last evening at the end of his three-day official visit to Belgium and talks with Belgian Foreign Minister Henri Simonet and the European Economic Community Executive Commission president, Roy Jenkins.

The Iraqi diplomatic chief told newsmen that the purpose of his consultations in Brussels was to define "concrete ways for relaunching the European-Arab dialogue". Hammadi did not elaborate on the ways and means proposed for reviving the dialogue but declared that Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat must be exluded.

The Iraqi foreign minister went on to declare that their impasse reached in the North-South dialogue should be cleared away through joint steps taken by the industrialized West and the oil producers.

Replying to a question on the Iraqi position on the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, Hammadi reaffirmed his nation's condemnation of the Soviet intervention and termed the act "a flagrant interference in the internal affairs of that country". He added that the December invasion "did not surprise us much, coming from a superpower seeking to extend the circle of those nations included in its ideological bloc". The foreign minister quickly added that Iraq must stay on guard to "unmask any maneuver of the United States, which could attempt to profit from the situation to extend its influence in the region".

Speaking about neighboring Iran, the Iraqi minister accused Tehran's new leaders of following "the deposed shah's expansionist policies" and attempting to "export their revolution by methods identical to those of the regime which they overthrew".

BRUSSELS DENIES KNOWLEDGE OF IMMINENT ATTACK ON ZAIRE

AB111930 Paris AFP in French 1817 GMT 11 Feb 80 AB

[Text] Brussels, 11 February (AFP)--The spokesman of the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs said in Brussels on Monday that he was not aware of the imminence of an attack of Zaire originating in Congo.

According to the latest edition of the American weekly NEWSWEEK, which was quoting Zairian sources, the Zairian authorities alledgedly alerted the French, Belgian and American intelligence services last week of the imminence of an attack of Zaire.

I shall make no comment on the truth of this information, but no one in the Ministry of of Foreign Affairs knows about it, the spokesman added.

According to an opposition movement to the Mobutu regime, which is in exile in Brussels, the Convention of Social Democrats (CODESO), there is no truth in this information. According to the spokesman of the movement, Mr Mobutu is once more brandishing the specter of fear to justify the military aid he intends to seek from the West.

GOVERNMENT TO SEEK EC STAND ON HUMAN RIGHTS IN USSR

LD111137 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 6 Feb 80 p 4 LD

[Sytze van der Zee dispatch: "Sakharov Not To Be Viewed Separately From Afghanistan"]

[Excerpt] Brussels, 6 February--The human rights situation in the Soviet Union must not be viewed separately from the Russian invasion of Afghanistan. That statement was made by the Dutch Foreign Minister Van der Klaauw in Brussels yesterday during discussions on European political cooperation. This was an indirect criticism of the fact that the final declaration issued after the Franco-FRG summit talks made no mention of human rights.

Although he described this declaration as "an important political document," he said that it is not up to the Nine to adopt a bilateral document without further discussion. Van der Klaauw also said he felt that the FRG also wants to include the human rights question in the statement which the EC foreign ministers will draft during the forthcoming political meeting in Rome 19 February.

In this connection, Minister Van der Klaauw established that both the invasion of Afghanistan and the human rights question must be included in this statement. The Dutch Government deems it necessary for a considerable improvement to be attained with regard to both these points. The Dutch minister explained that the human rights question must also play a role per se in the interest of defining a policy within the EC. He also expressed the hope that agreement will be reached in Rome on a boycott of the Olympic games.

SCHMIDT EXPRESSES CONCERN OVER TENSIONS IN LETTER TO BREZHNEV

LD111548 Hamburg DPA in German 1451 GMT 11 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--In a letter last week to Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt expressed his concern over the spread of tensions between East and West following the Soviet march into Afghanistan. Informed circles in Bonn went on to report today that in the message to Brezhnev, Schmidt also stressed his view that the responsible politicians in East and West, in the present difficult phase, had to be prepared to talk about reducing tensions and preventing a further escalation of the situation.

In the letter to Brezhnev, which Bonn's Ambassador Hans-Georg Wieck handed over to Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko in Moscow last Wednesday, the chancellor spoke, according to Bonn sources, only in general terms about his planned visit this year to the Soviet Union and made clear his own continued readiness for talks. Referring to the need for dialog between the political leaders in East and West, the chancellor expressed his concern over the hiatus in the talks between Brezhnev and U.S. President Jimmy Carter.

Speaking to the press in Bonn, Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling provided no further information about the contents of the chancellor's letter, referring only to a "communication" from Schmidt with thoughts on the current world political situation. It follows from what Boelling said that the letter is several pages long.

Press Comment

DW120820 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 12 Feb 80 DW

[Press review on the message conveyed to Soviet head of state Brezhnev by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt]

[Excerpt] NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG writes: With his letter to Leonid Brezhnev, Helmut Schmidt has gone to the limit of what is tolerable. In the past several weeks there have been so many unanswered public appeals by the chancellor for a continuation of the dialog that his actions are becoming close to an affront. For this reason the letter to the Kremlin boss appears as the provisionally final, yet all the more consistent, attempt to clarify the seriousness of the situation and revive the dialog with the Eastern superpower. Following the offer of talks, which now has been made in writing, the chancellor may feel secure against any charge that he has failed to utilize every opportunity for contacts, which are particularly necessary in times of crisis. Now it is solely up to Moscow to put an end to the long silence.

Essen's NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG states: Surely the chancellor has no intention of offering himself as mediator to the great powers of this world. This cannot be his task. But he has explained all our anxieties since Afghanistan to the number one man in the Kremlin; this initiative should not be underrated nor talked into insignificance in our own country.

SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE notes: Chancellor Schmidt probably is the only Western head of government who has expressed to the Soviet head of state, Brezhnev, personally and directly in a written message, his apprehensions about the unpredictable consequences of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Federal Foreign Minister Genscher yesterday underscored this by saying that it is necessary, particularly at this time, to exploit any channel of dialog with the East. In short, Bonn does not want the line to Moscow severed despite the crisis.

The editorial of the Mainz ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG says in part: Surely we are not wrong in assuming that Chancellor Schmidt's letter to Soviet General Secretary Brezhnev and the statement with which Federal Foreign Minister Genscher over the weekend underscored the solidarity of the alliance are just two sides of the same phonograph record. What is important to the chancellor is to resume the dialog with the Soviet leadership. Genscher is counteracting Moscow's attempts at dividing detente and driving a wedge between the United States and its European allies with his firm determination not to allow a split. This clarification of Bonn's foreign policy was urgently required. The opposition, too, can only welcome the priority of Western solidarity, which is now becoming more apparent in Bonn's foreign policy.

IRAQI FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES, ATTACKS ISRAEL, U.S.

LD091157 Hamburg DPA in German 1059 GMT 9 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] Bonn--Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi arrived in Bonn on Saturday for an official visit. On Monday and Tuesday Hammadi will meet with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher to discuss the Middle East conflict and the current crisis in the Middle East. He will also meet with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Research Minister Volker Hauff.

Genscher Replies to Attacks

LD111644 Hamburg DPA in German 1553 GMT 11 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher replied in Bonn today to the strong attacks by Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi against Israel and the United States. With a demonstrative expression of loyalty toward our "Arab, Israel and American friends," and contrary to diplomatic usage, Genscher spoke a second time at the luncheon today after the Iraqi foreign minister had sharply condemned the "deliberate, expansionist aggression by the Zionist state against the Arab nation with full U.S. support."

During his toast Genscher stressed the Federal Government's hope that all states involved in the Middle East conflict, as well as the Palestinian people, will be able to realize their desire for a peaceful settlement. In connection with the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, he emphasized the importance ascribed to the independence of the nonalined countries. Genscher also discussed with the foreign minister closer cooperation between the EC and the Gulf states and Iraq.

YUGOSLAV DELEGATION LED BY GRLICKOV ARRIVES FOR TALKS

LD120014 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1751 GMT 11 Feb 80 LD

The LCY delegation arrived here yesterday on an invitation from the SPD presidency.

Meeting With Schmidt, Genscher

LD121050 Belgrade TANJUG in English 0943 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn, February 12 (TANJUG)--Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany Helmut Schmidt yesterday evening asked head of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) delegation Aleksandar Grlickov to convey sincere and warm greetings and wishes for a speedy recovery to President Tito. The LCY delegation is visiting the Federal Republic at the invitation of the Social Democratic Party of Germany, of which Helmut Schmidt is deputy chairman.

Chancellor Schmidt also stressed President Tito's great role and importance in international relations, linking it to the current world situation, primarily in regard to the necessity of reviving detente as the only alternative in contemporary international relations. Aleksandar Grlickov made this statement to TANJUG's Bonn correspondent, adding that the Federal Republic of Germany is for detente. The Federal Republic will do all it can to bring about negotiations between the big powers on detente, said Grlickov after his talks with Chancellor Schmidt.

The head of the LCY delegation also met with the Federal Republic's foreign minister and chairman of the Free Democratic Party Hans-Dietrich Genscher with whom he discussed the prospects for the holding of the Madrid meeting of the European cooperation and security conference. During the talks, both sides stressed that it is necessary to invest efforts for the holding of the conference.

Before leaving the Federal Republic, after a short but very active visit, Grlickov will have several shorter meetings in Bonn.

Carstens Dinner Speech

LD111742 Hamburg DPA in German 1611 GMT 11 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--The Federal Republic is ready to contribute toward the expansion and consolidation of the economies of the African states through increased economic cooperation. This was stated tonight by Federal President Karl Carstens at a dinner in Bruehl which he gave in honor of Kenyan President Daniel Arap Moi. No political conditions are tied to this economic assistance. It has the purpose of helping the African states "to safeguard their independence and ward off influences which might bring them into new political, economic or ideological dependence."

Carstens paid tribute to the "friendly relatons" and the "partnership cooperation" between the Federal Republic and Kenya in the spheres of the economy, development policies and culture. Moi's visit represents the "festive culmination" of a development which has brought the peoples and governments of the two countries steadily closer since Kenya's independence in 1963. With its policy of reconsiliation, and by the fact that various races coexist peacefully and with equal rights in one state, Kenya has "st standards for the whole of Africa." No other country provides as many tourists to Kenya as the Federal Republic. "We Germans find Kenya sympathetic," Carstens said.

BARRE INTERVIEWED ON THE ECONOMY, OLYMPICS

LD111422 Paris Domestic Service in French 0710 GMT 11 Feb 80 LD

[Bernard Vallette "exclusive" interview with Premier Raymond Barre "in the United States"--date and place not further specified; recorded]

[Text] [Question] Premier, in Federal Germany as well as here in the United States your name has always been associated with monetary strictness. People do not hesitate to attribute the franc's solidity to you. Your policy of price freezing has also been particularly noted. It is this reputation of yours, among other things, I would say, that caused you to be invited to New York by the two largest American foreign policy associations to talk on the French economic program and the international economy, taking into consideration the energy problems. We are now in a real international crisis or, at least, at the beginning of an international crisis. In France and in other countries one can see a slowdown of the automobile industry and in general a slowdown of household consumption. I would first of all ask are we not plainly entering a recession?

[Answer] I do not think that we are entering a recession. My own hypothesis has been the slowdown in economic activity is likely to happen toward the middle of 1980. Taking into account the achievements of the year 1979 (and) the trends which are now appearing in the major economies, in France, Federal Germany and even in the United States--where it appears that recession will be avoided this year--I do not think that the year 1980 will be characterized by a recession. I am not saying that one is not going to experience a slight slowdown of economic activity compared with 1979, but I really do not think that there will be a recession.

[Question] Another question: Will the big industrial countries, France in particular, be able to keep the price index under control while the price of oil has just risen again by eight percent?

[Answer] We must consider what is meant by keeping the price index under control. A good way of keeping the price index under control is by keeping inflation under control. This means applying the policies of credit, of budget, and payments, which is necessary to prevent inflationary forces coming into play in the economy. But there can be cases where the price index rises because the price of energy increases which is reflected in the prices of national energy derivatives and consequently in the national price index. The rise of the index does not mean inflation in this case. What is not very well understood generally is that this is not an economic subtlety but a reality, yet one which difficult to perceive. People see a high index and say: This is inflation. But, as I have explained on various occasions, the context in which this index rise occurs must be considered. It is going to be very difficult to bring prices under control, but I do not think that this difficulty is caused solely by the increase in oil prices. We must accept this oil price increase, and we must pass it on. Our efforts must bear on all the other factors which influence price increases, that is, on credit policy, on salaries, and on productivity. It is by making efforts in these spheres that we will succeed in preventing inflation.

[Question] Given all these factors, can single-digit inflation still be predicted?

[Answer] Last year we were unable to achieve single-digit inflation. I said that as early as July 1978. This year we are going to make an effort to bring inflation below 10 percent.

I do not say that this can be achieved easily, but at any rate our efforts must be directed toward this end.

[Question] Is there not, particularly in the United States, a sort of lobby pushing for an oil price increase with the goal of having the means to develop and make profitable new energy sources?

[Answer] I do not think that lobbies in this sphere ought to be blamed. The phenomena are simpler. Oil prices rise because producers decide to raise their prices. They raise their prices because they see that oil consumption is not only remaining constant but is even increasing; they see that the currency in which oil deals are transacted is depreciating and so they try to catch up with the decline in the real value of oil by an increase in prices. These are the factors which are at the root of the oil price rises, and we have to work on these.

[Question] Yes, but the oil-producing countries have hitherto always met demands. Do you think this might change and that they might reduce their production in particular in order to avoid a fall in prices and to maintain prices?

[Answer] I cannot tell you what the oil-producing countries' strategy is going to be. It is up to them to take decisions which they consider appropriate, and I hope that they will display a sense of responsibility. Saudi Arabia and Iraq are countries that have given proof of their sense of responsibility during 1979. On the other hand, it is not only the oil-producing countries on which oil prices depend. They depend on our behavior as well, that is our ability to economize on energy, to develop new energy sources and to stabilize currencies so that the oil-producing countries may be paid in a currency which does not depreciate.

[Question] It is a fact of life that more than half our oil, in fact, comes from two countries, Saudi Arabia and Iraq, two countries located in rather a hotbed even if they are stable at the moment. So is this not somewhat dangerous for France?

[Answer] For a long time France has been following a policy of diversifying its oil supply sources. Although it buys most of its oil from Saudi Arabia and Iraq, which have always acted properly toward France, I must tell you that we import oil from other countries not in the hotbed of the Middle East, but it has to be recognized indeed that the main guarantee of our energy supplies is the development of our nuclear energy program.

[Question] Do you think that every effort is being made to conserve energy in France and in other countries?

[Answer] Some major efforts are being made, and I believe that the energy-saving policy followed in France is exemplary compared with that followed in other countries. I had the opportunity--you heard me--to give my views at my lectures in New York, and I must tell you that many American businessmen and personalities who came to my lectures showed a keen interest in the energy-saving policy we are applying. But, you know, the only way of saving energy is to pay for energy at its real price, that means to accept the high energy prices. Many Americans have told me that the trouble in the United States is that energy prices are not at a realistic level.

[Question] Well, the oil-producing countries will have, I believe, something like $100 billion extra in profits this year. It may be asked how they are going to invest this money, and if this enormous amount is not likely to set off another monetary crisis.

[Answer] This is, in fact, a great problem not only for 1980 but also for the coming years. As you have said, the OPEC countries will have an extra $100 billion. Consequently it is extremely important to examine the conditions under which these monetary assets, these monetary resources will be used. This currently causes concern in the international financial community, because formerly, or hitherto, it was the private banks that have done what is called the recycling of the petrodollars, that have borrowed dollars from OPEC countries in order to invest them elsewhere. But when it is a case of handling sums of this amount, even though the capability and expertise of the private banks can, of course, be trusted, there is a limit beyond which these banks themselves do not want to go. I had the opportunity of talking about this problem with some figures in the financial world in New York, and I believe that the international community will have to look in the coming months for the means allow the recycling of petrodollars under conditions which prevent, as you noted yourself, a flood of dollars throughout the world which might affect the behavior of U.S. currency and upset the foreign exchange market.

[Question] Now the United States is the country which at the moment is considerably influencing the gold market. Do you think that $600 or $700 per ounce constitutes a balance point?

[Answer] I will never make a prediction on the price of gold. The price of this product depends not only on economic and technical considerations but also on the psychology of those who buy or sell gold. It is certain that in periods of international political instability, in periods of international monetary uncertainty, in periods of high inflation--when you consider that the inflation rate in the United States last year was 13.3 percent--it is normal that those who want to guarantee their monetary reserves are looking for a safe bet, and gold appears as the safest one. Consequently what we have to do to avoid these movements of gold is to insure that monetary stability can be restored in every one of our countries and in international monetary relations.

[Question] During all the conversations you have just had, Premier, did you see that the Americans' ideas about gold are beginning to change; could gold again play a role in the future in the international monetary system?

[Answer] You know, the Americans have always regarded gold as an outdated fetish and in recent years have multiplied the procedures, most varied ones, to demonetize gold. I told them--you heard me at the Foreign Policy Association--that the views according to which gold could be excluded from international monetary relations are purely illusory. We have just had proof of this. I am not one of those who say we must return to the gold standard. Everybody is talking about the gold standard, and those who talk about it often do not know how it would work. But I personally believe that gold will be able to play a role in international monetary relations as a reserve. It is necessary that it can be exchanged between central banks, it is necessary that it can be exchanged at a price that is the market price, and it is necessary that the central banks and the international monetary institutions do not maintain that the most intelligent attitude possible is to sell gold on the market.

[Question] Quite, and it is known that the French Government is going to take some monetary initiatives at the European level. Could this consist of turning the famous European ECU [European Currency Unit] into some sort of reserve currency based on gold?

[Answer] You know that the ECU is based on gold and national currencies. But in this sphere let us not hurry over the stages with seven-league boots. Before the ECU can become a currency, a real currency, many years will have to pass. And I hope that the ECU will not be an international reserve currency because we have already had enough difficulties in the past with reserve currencies, the dollar and pound sterling, not to want to add to the problems we must face.

[Question] Let us talk about trade. Our economy is based on exports. Now, if the international slowdown is confirmed, will this not reduce our sales and increase unemployment?

[Answer] The problem of international trade is not simply a problem of the rate of activity. It is a problem of being able to face up to competition. International demand can slow down, but if France is selling quality products at competitive prices there is no reason for us not to be able to maintain our share of the market and even to increase our share of the market. In 1977, 1978 and 1979 France increased its market share nearly everywhere. Consequently our effort must be governed by two ideas: productivity and competition.

[Question] There has been in the United States a very clear decrease in purchasing power. So how do you think that in France, a less rich country, you can at least maintain this purchasing power?

[Answer] I have always said, and I do not need to tell you again since you have heard me say it often, the choice is not between an increase in purchasing power and the maintenance of purchasing power but between maintenance of purchasing power and a reduction in purchasing power.

[Question] So you do not rule it out?

[Answer] I said and I have always said that I believe that we can maintain purchasing power in France. Besides, this has been done since 1976. When I hear people say here and there on the basis of strangely interpreted statistics that during 1979 there was a fall in purchasing power, I must tell you that I am not at all convinced.

But why have we been able to maintain purchasing power in France? It is because a considerable effort was made by all French people, by managers, employees and farmers, to become more competitive, in other words, to increase productivity. The maintenance of purchasing power is linked with the productivity of the French economy and in particular with the effort French firms will make in the sphere of management, in the internal management of their businesses and in the sphere of adapting the domestic to the international markets. If we make this effort I hope that we will be able to maintain our purchasing power in France.

[Question] Very quickly, Premier, I have a last question which is not economic but which is of interest, burning interest. The Americans have become the champions of a boycott of the Olympic games, as you know. Hitherto you have not said much on this subject. Is this because you believe that this problem is somewhat ridiculous compared with others?

[Answer] Mr Vallette, I find that there is too much talk at present on these problems of the international crisis. As far as I am concerned, I have stated the French Government's position, this position was defined by the Council of Ministers and was the subject of a communique by the Council of Ministers. The French Government is of the opinion that it is the business of the IOC to take the appropriate decisions concerning the Olympic games. In addition, the French Government has said that it does not believe that to embroil the Olympic games with the present international tension is a good thing. This opinion was expressed by the government; I am prime minister, you would be surprised if I were to hold a different opinion. By the way, this was my reply to the Foreign Policy Association yesterday when the question was put to me.

MARCHAIS ON SAKHAROV EXILE, AFGHANISTAN, EUROCOMMUNISM

LD111131 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 23 Jan 80 pp 4-6 LD

[Unattributed report: "Millions Without Rights"--capitalized passages are printed in italics]

[Excerpts] Georges Marchais chaired Radio-Television Luxemburg's "Unexpected Journal" on Saturday. He was questioned by Alexandre Baloud and Robert Boulay, Roger Priouret and Bernard Lefort.

Alexandre Baloud asked Georges Marchais if he would have adopted the same attitude as Jacques Chaban-Delmas if the action taken against Sakharov had occurred during his trip to Moscow.

Georges Marchais' answer was: If that had happened I would have done three things. First, I would have told our Soviet comrades: "There will be no joint statement." Second, I would have said: "I shall fly home tomorrow morning," like Chaban-Delmas. Third, before leaving I would have made a statement in Moscow. That is my reply.

We condemn the action against Sakharov.

Having said that, our position on Sakharov is well know: We condemn the action against him.

This is no surprise. I repeated it the other week in private conversation with Leonid Brezhnev who led the CPSU delegation that we met in Moscow: We, the PCF, differ fundamentally with the CPSU on the question of socialist democracy. I emphasized, and L'HUMANITE published last Wednesday, in my entire statement, that for us "certain socialist countries presented problems linked to a persistent misunderstanding of the universal democratic demands of socialism." I added that this misunderstanding has sometimes led to "limitations on democracy which we have found incomprehensible." I quoted the Prague trials, which I termed "a caricature of socialism."

I recall that at our 23d Congress, and I quote our unanimous resolution, "We totally condemned 'Stalinism,' whose conceptions and practices are utterly foreign to our ideal and policy."

Consequently, for us things are clear: Sakharov is a rightwinger. We know his position. It should be fought, but through argument and ideas, through political and ideological struggle and not by administrative action.

That is our position. There is no ambiguity. We condemn the action against Sakharov. Having said that, I should like to make a few remarks.

Reality of the USSR Today

The first concerns the outrageous comments made these days about the USSR.

I say this clearly: To give people the idea that the present situation in the USSR is the same as under Stalin is a mockery.

It is one thing to condemn the administrative action against Sakharov--I repeat: This is what we are doing. It is quite different to equate his forced deportation with his family to a city of a million people on the one hand with the terrible fate of the victims of Stalin's massive repressions on the other. Let us, please, say no more on this subject.

Imperialism Is Not Qualified To Evoke Human Rights

My second remark is this: Those who cannot find words harsh enough to condemn socialism always call on the same concept: "human rights." Their mouths are full of "human rights." They revel in it. Well, I want to talk about human rights:

I stress that the aim of this campaign is to hide the REAL threat to human rights. That its aim is to mask this essential fact: There are, in our world, MILLIONS OF PEOPLE WITHOUT RIGHTS. I say that many who pose as champions of human rights are not qualified to speak on them. They have bloody hands. This is true of the past and the present.

Questioned on the possible postponement of the Madrid human rights conference, Georges Marchais replies:

If the Madrid conference is not held because Sakharov was exiled 400 km from Moscow, we have a thousand other reasons to cancel it. You only want to recall faults in socialist countries. You deliberately shut your eyes to what is happening in the world which I have only skimmed over.

The great difference between socialism and imperialism is shown by French colonialism, for example, which was responsible for killing a million Algerian men and women but has not criticized its own actions. The Soviet Government and the CPSU, however, at the 1956 20th Congress, publicly criticized the period called "the Stalin personality cult"--a misnomer in my view, because the problem goes deeper than that. This is normal. For these practices, these massacres on behalf of capitalism are part of its nature, although opposed to the nature of socialism.

Next, Bernard Lefort claimed that there are as many camps in the USSR now as under Stalin. Georges Marchais pointed out to him that "even those they call dissidents unanimously recognize that the situation in the USSR is nothing like it was under Stalin. You have just made a serious mistake."

Afghanistan and Its Repercussions

Next the problems of Afghanistan were broached. To Alexandre Baloud, who stressed that the great majority of UN members condemned the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, Georges Marchais pointed out that 18 countries opposed this resolution, 18 abstained and about a dozen were absent. "There you have about 50 states representing a billion people who, in a word, did not condemn this intervention. Having said that, it is true that a majority voted for the resolution. This is each nation's right."

What Has Happened in Afghanistan

Next Roger Priouret asserted that U.S. aid to Pakistan ceased in April 1979 and that the essential element of Afghan discontent stemmed not from the feudal landlords but from small landowners affected by the agrarian reform.

Georges Marchais answered: The United States and Pakistan have been members of the Baghdad Pact (later CENTO) for more than 20 years. They are thus closely linked. It is true that with Pakistan having the capability to produce the atomic bomb, Carter--under pressure from several states--judged it right in 1979 to take a step back from the Pakistan regime. That is all.

There are several reasons for the Amin regime's shrinking popular base.

First is the repression against the communists. President Babrak Karmal was a victim of this from the first week. This repression covered all forms of opposition, especially religion which is very important in this Muslim country.

Certainly the exaggerated rush to implement the much needed agrarian reform upset certain popular strata who were to have benefitted from it, because it was not accompanied by the necessary means which mostly remained in the feudal landowners' hands. It was the same with changing the status of women, trying to take them from the Middle Ages to the 21st century in a few months.

Reasons for the Socialist Party's Attitude

Next Robert Boulay noted that the PCF position on this issue differs from that of the PCI And PCE.

This is true, George Marchais stressed. It is not abnormal, and it is not the first time we have had such a situation. It confirms the great diversity in the conduct of the communist parties and the fact that each party formulates its own policy in total independence. There is no longer a Comintern even though there remains a restrictive Socialist International to which the French Socialist Party [PS] belongs.

You say that TO HEAR IT the PS would seem closer to the PCI and even the PCE than the PCF is. I have noticed this, too. Again this week, PS leaders in various articles and statements continually express satisfaction with PCI and PCE policy.

Thus I asked myself: Why do they have this attitude? It goes with saying: The PS, by claiming some sort of kinship with PCI and PCE policy, seeks to camouflage and justify its own rightwing deviation.

Consider this. In Italy a left majority is impossible now. The PCI, it is well known, seeks what it calls a "historical compromise" with the Christian Democrats.

In Spain--as a PCE leader recalled in a Paris daily yesterday morning--the PCE is looking for agreement with the Socialists and centrists.

I shall refrain from passing judgment on this policy, formulated by our fraternal parties in total independence. I am sure that in determining their attitudes they are guided by the desire to serve their people and their country well.

We, the PCF, however, believe that this course is not at all valid for France. First, because a left majority is possible in our country. We would have had one in 1978 if the PS had not abandoned the joint program and the Union of the Left. Second, because to contemplate an alliance with Giscard and Chirac would certainly mean accepting, as their policies have shown, austerity for the working people, French alinement with Washington and Bonn, authoritarianism in every sphere and I need not mention what else.

We, the PCF, thus refuse categorically to contemplate such alliances in France.

On the other hand, has this not been the direction of the PS and Francois Mitterrand since 1978? This is clear. On most questions there is a convergance of views between the PS and rightwing policy.

COSSIGA DELINEATES VIEWS ON EC, MIDDLE EAST, PCI

LD111429 London AL-HAWADITH in Arabic 8 Feb 80 p 41 LD

[Interview given to Tamam al-Barazi of AL-HAWADITH by Italian Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga during his recent visit to London--date not given]

[Excerpt] AL-HAWADITH: What was the nature of the discussions that took place between you and the British officials?

Cossiga: During the meeting the discussions centered on Britain's request to reduce its contribution to the EEC budget. I agreed with Mrs Thatcher on the need to convene a European summit conference at the end of this month or in March to adopt a final decision on this matter. We also discussed the practical means that will put an end to Soviet aggression. If the West does not make such practical stands, the Soviet Union will not retreat from its expansionist plans. Therefore, the discussions centered on finding a "mechanism" to confront the Soviet attitude.

AL-HAWADITH: At the joint press conference, Mrs Thatcher said that Europe has not taken any practical measures against the Soviet Union and that Europe's reaction has been confined to mere words. What is your opinion of this statement?

Cossiga: The European Council of Ministers will discuss stringent proposals in this connection. These proposals include the halting of wheat and butter supplies to the Soviet Union. Meanwhile, Europe has expressed its solidarity with the United States. I would like to emphasize here that Europe supports the policy of detente, provided that it leads to peace and not to aggression.

AL-HAWADITH: But some European states, like Germany for example, do not support the imposition of economic sanctions on the Soviet Union.

Cossiga: All the European states have unanimously condemned the Soviet aggression. As for the adoption of a decision to impose a European boycott, this must be done unanimously.

AL-HAWADITH: Let us now move to the Middle East. The U.S. administration has often announced that its oil interests in the Gulf area are extremely vital. Some observers are taking about the possibility of the United States occupying Arab oil sources. What will Italy's attitude be if such a thing takes place?

Cossiga: I believe that the U.S. decision to defend the sovereignty of the Arab oil countries and their freedom to dispose with what they have is impcrtant as far as the Western world is concerned, particularly Europe. We in Italy support the sovereignty and independence of the Arab states against any aggression. This is the duty of all the states which respect the peoples' right to freedom.

AL-HAWADITH: At your press conference, you said that "As-Sadat's initiative has been an important step in activating the Middle East situation but it is not adequate for a final solution." Do you believe that the time has now come to recognize the PLO and the Palestinian people's rights, especially after some European states have hosted the PLO leader?

Cossiga: The Italian attitude regarding this matter conforms with the European attitude. The European summit conference, which convened in Dublin recently, issued a statement containing our view on the Middle East crisis and the Palestinian issue. We believe that "the PLO is a political force representing the Palestinian people. This is a fact which cannot be ignored in the process of searching for permanent peace in that area. Italy also believes in the Palestinian people's right to a homeland of their own."

AL-HAWADITH: But will the European states recognize the PLO?

Cossiga: Italy's relations with the PLO are good. As for official recognition, this question has not yet arisen.

AL-HAWADITH: Do you expect this matter to be decided soon?

Cossiga: This matter will be settled publicly. As I have told you, we have good relations with the PLO, particularly with Faruq Qaddumi.

AL-HAWADITH: Let us move from the Middle East to Italy. What about the possibility of the Communists assuming power in Italy?

Cossiga: Please set the microphone aside before I start talking.

AL-HAWADITH: Why?

Cossiga: There is an agreement between us and the Communist Party not to discuss Italian domestic matters outside the country.

AL-HAWADITH: Are you afraid of the Communist Party to this extent?

Cossiga: The matter has nothing to do with fear. It is an agreement of honor between us. Should you come to Rome, we would have sufficient time to discuss this thorny subject in a frank manner.

LUMEA REPORTS MINUCCI INTERVIEW ON PCI VISIT

AU071324 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1140 GMT 7 Feb 80 AU

["RCP-PCI Same Views on Current International Relations"--AGERPRES headline]

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 7/2/1980--Adalberto Minucci, member of the Directorate and Secretariate of the Italian Communist Party [PCI], has recently visited Romania. In a statement to weekly LUMEA the guest said: "The relations between the PCI and the RCP are most cordial. A traditional friendship exists between the two parties, manifest among other things, by frequent traditional exchanges of delegations, in order to tackle common problems of the activity of the two parties, of the development of the political, cultural and other relations. These are good relations as irrespective of different national conditions in which the two parties are working. We have more than once the same views on current international problems, on detente, peace as well as on the international communist and working class movement.

Due to these very reasons, it was natural, in the current tense and difficult international situation, that an interview of reciprocal information take place between the two parties. I was very impressed by the interview I had with Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, when we had a large exchange of views on the whole international situation. Naturally, we approached the new-European relations, mainly having in view the NATO decision regarding the location of new rockets in Western Europe. We agreed that everything must be done for these relations not to sharpen, and what's more, we analysed in this respect, the necessity of diplomatic initiatives, of political and mass actions. There are too many weapons in the world and if the arms race is not stopped, the risk of an atomic conflict could become real. That is why, we agreed to do our best to avoid it. We, the Italian Communists, set ourselves to keep alive the movement against armings not only in our country and to induce other forces to join us. Regarding the Madrid meeting, we intend to contribute, together with all European democratic forces to the elaboration of a joint stand on all problems to be analysed.

FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIAL EVALUATES SPANISH-IRAQI TALKS

LD112354 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 11 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] Martin Garcia Vega, our special correspondent in Baghdad, interviewed Antonio de Oyarzabal, the director of the Office of Diplomatic Information, at the Spanish Foreign Ministry, and asked him what was discussed in the talks between the Iraqi president and the Spanish prime minister. This was his reply:

[Begin recording] The talks lasted 2 hours. They were long talks and I would call them sincere. One always says sincere but I think that in this case they really were. They were very cordial, and they gave us an opportunity to review in depth problems of common interest, both concerning bilateral relations between the two countries, which in the political field are developing normally, and concerning those probems which, although they affect the two countries, are not strictly bilateral but are of great importance to them. In this specific field, of the problems which we could call of a multilateral nature, they discussed our views on the Middle East.

We had an opportunity to reiterate to the Iraqi authorities our interest in the Palestine question, an interest which is nothing new and which recently occasioned us to hear about the problem of the Palestine people from Yasir 'Arafat himself. And we took this explanation to various European foreign ministries, where we were heard with great interest. We have, I think, contributed to the fact that to some extent this problem is beginning to be considered in a new light, in all its seriousness and in all its essential points by many countries which did not have a clear awareness of it before.

The Iraqi side thanked us for this work of ours, both in international forums such as the United Nations as well as on other occasions such as during the various tours of the prime minister and the foreign minister. And obviously they described their position on this subject to us, which they of course see from a closer position than we, both physically and politically. The Iraqis also placed emphasis on the Arab unity proposals made by President Saddam Husayn just a few days ago.

On the specific question of foreign interference, they reaffirmed the wish of the Iraqi authorities to isolate the Arab world from instances of such interference. For a specific example, take the Persian Gulf, where there is grave concern at the moment. Emphasis was placed on seeing the Persian Gulf free of any navy, army, and any foreign interference. The invasion of Afghanistan was also condemned, specifically because it is an interference in internal affairs. In each case the aim was to give a really balanced view free of any influence from either side in respect of the countries of the Arab world. North Africa was also discussed. In addition, the problem of the Sahara was examined.

ANEXARTITOS SCORES ROLANDHIS STATEMENT ON U.S., BRITAIN VISIT

NC110950 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 11 Feb 80 p 3 NC

[From the "Independent" column: "Imperialism and Us"]

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis has returned from his visit to the United States, Britain and Greece. Although his statement was not brief, the fact is that he has not made any substantive revelations. He told us simply that Waldheim will act energetically in the next few days and that the Americans will not submit proposals. However, he did not tell us whether he has observed any changes in the stands of the United States or Britain towards the Cyprus problem. Clearly he could not make such an observation, because no change has taken place except the more cynical strengthening and encouragement of Turkey by the West.

It is evident that the Americans and generally the Western nations that will take part in the plan for aid to Turkey will not combine their aid with the Cyprus problem and they will not link it with Turkey's conformity to the UN resolutions. Thus they will cooperate in keeping the Cyprus problem in suspense and preventing a Cyprus solution. Indirectly, they will stress their complicity with Attila's continuous crime of atrocities and brutality.

We had no briefing whatsoever from the foreign minister. From our standpoint it is easy to suppose what experiences he brings with him. Let him talk about "friendship, cordiality and understanding." The people read behind these words the true hidden words: "hypocrisy, deceit and indifference." Thus the people are fully conscious of the fact that they should not expect "charity" from imperialism, that confrontation with imperialism is not based on good sentiments, but on well-prepared plans which should not be easily altered. These plans are abandoned only when the interested people declare--at all levels and by means of all demonstrations, mass mobilization and everyday contacts--the same message that constitutes a mode of life, irrevocable decision and granite-like determination: that the people consider any concession to the imperialist plans inconceivable, that they do not write off the motherland or betray rights and that imperialism should cherish no hopes that it will bend the Cypriot people's perseverance.

Is the government equally conscious of this truth?

CAGATAY COMMENTS ON BRITISH RELATIONS WITH GREEK CYPRIOTS

TA081326 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 8 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The prime minister, Mr Cagatay, has said that he did not expect Britain to sign a unilateral agreement with the Greek Cypriot administration on the sovereign bases in Cyprus. He was answering questions from correspondents this morning on a proposed visit to Britain by the foreign minister of the Greek Cypriot administration, Mr Rolandhis. He pointed out that Britain maintained that she respected the 1960 Constitution of Cyprus and because of this he did not expect Britain to enter into any negotiations with the Greek Cypriot administration which was contrary to the 1960 Constitution. In reply to another question, Mr Cagatay said that the Federated State Government had no information that rent had been paid to the Greek Cypriot administration for the bases since 1963. He added that if such rent has been paid the Turkish Cypriot community wanted its share. Asked about the electric power station project to be financed by the World Bank, the prime minister said that the project had been presented to the Federated State Government and it was being examined in detail. The views of the government would be finalized when the detailed study of the project was finished.

HURRIYET CLAIMS ARMENIAN TERRORISTS BEING TRAINED IN CYPRUS

NC111028 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 10 Feb 80 pp 1, 11 NC

[By Ziya Akcapar]

[Text] Nicosia--Turkish Ambassador to Nicosia Inal Batu has stated that the serious suspicions which had been harbored for some time about an Armenian criminal network based and supported in the Greek Cypriot sector of Cyprus, have grown considerably and definite proof has been obtained. The Turkish ambassador added: "The state will certainly take the necessary measures."

Ambassador Inal Batu has stressed the need for efforts to counter the Cyprus-based source of militant acts of sabotage and murders against Turkish diplomats and missions. The ambassador further stated that for this purpose a comprehensive intelligence network is being formed in the Greek Cypriot sector. He added that a unit has also been set up at the embassies to quickly evaluate the information received and to convey it to the capital.

Meanwhile, according to information received by the Ankara bureau of HURRIYET, an earlier report in HURRIYET to the effect that the Armenian terrorist bands are being trained in the Greek Cypriot sector has been confirmed by Foreign Ministry circles. A high-ranking official is reported to have said: "Everything is being conducted through the collaboration of Greek Cypriots and Armenians. The Greek Cypriots are not willing to assume responsibility, but the camp on the Korno Road is bound to get them into trouble."

The same official has reportedly said that in case the Greek Cypriot rulers continue to remain indifferent, the Korno camp may even be bombed. Government efforts to counteract the Armenian revenge commandos are being coordinated by the Foreign Ministry, the National Intelligence Organization (MIT) and the office of the chief of the General Staff. However, the fact that neither Turkey nor the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus has any diplomatic relations with the Greek Cypriot side renders these efforts rather difficult. Meanwhile, Turkey has drawn the Greek Cypriot sector's attention to the question of the Armenian commandos on several occasions through the mediation of foreign countries, but the Greek Cypriots sharply declined to accept representations made through third countries.

The Turkish Foreign Ministry has again advised Turkish personnel abroad to be more careful of any assassination attempts. Issuing new directives to our organizations abroad, the Foreign Ministry has told diplomats what to do when entering and leaving the embassies and their homes, while getting into their cars or stopping at traffic lights. In the meantime, the attempt to assassinate Dogan Turkmen [Turkish ambassador in Bern] has led to new tension among the officials of the Foreign Ministry.

Interior Minister's Refutation

NC112113 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 11 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Interior Minister Veniamin has categorically denied a report carried by the Turkish mainland paper HURRIYET that he allegedly stated that the Armenian training center at Kornos closed down in December. Veniamin stresses that neither Kornos nor any other place in the free areas has ever been a training site for either Armenians or other ethnic communities, and that therefore he has never made such a statement. Veniamin added that no Greek Cypriot had ever had the slightest connection with any assassination or attempt to assassinate a Turkish official, as the HURRIYET report maintains.

I KATHIMERINI VIEWS RETURN TO NATO-MILITARY ISSUE

AT101650 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 10 Feb 80 pp 1, 3 AT

[Text] According to clear indications the country's foreign problems have now entered a critical phase, with prospects of specific solutions, centered on our country's return to NATO's military wing. This is the conclusion of diplomatic observers who considered: A) the Western coalition's determination to restore unity within the Atlantic alliance through Greece's return, which is the result of international conditions clearly referred to in McCloskey's statements and B) the effort to find some formula acceptable to the Greek side that would not touch upon Greek sovereign rights. A solution to this problem, regardless of whether it is a "self-contained uncertainty" naturally influences developments on other pending foreign policy issues. The following are indications of the new phase of developments into which foreign issues have entered:

1--Action by appropriate foreign diplomatic and military circles in an effort to find and propose a NATO settlement as well as a settlement of bipartite Greek-Turkish issues. The very frequent, recent contacts between the alliance's Secretary General Luns and General Rogers with Deputy National Defense Minister Davos--who until recently was responsible for and bore the main burden of negotiations or exploratory consultations, particularly at a very difficult phase, with the Atlantic alliance--are, perhaps, related to this interest of allied circles.

2--The desire of Western states, and particularly the United States, for a peaceful solution, without protracted delays, of the Greek-Turkish differences--always within the framework of restoring unity within the Western defense coalition. The proposal-formula by U.S. Secretary of State Vance, which was officially given the form of the plan prepared by the London Institute for Strategic Studies, can be described as an expression of this desire. This proposal recommends examination of the Continental Shelf issue by a committee of the three "wise men" under the model used in the British-French dispute over the Channel Islands.

Under these conditions it appears that Greek-Turkish affairs will be subjected to some broader reexamination during the forthcoming Ankara meeting (17-18 February) of the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish foreign ministries. This is the conclusion from certain as yet unconfirmed reports of a secret meeting already held in Vienna by the two secretaries general which is considered preparatory for the Ankara meeting. It is, therefore, quite likely that some development on the issue is possible.

3--The strong U.S. desire to advance and resolve the uncertainty of the Greek-U.S. defense agreement as it was expressed by U.S. Ambassador McCloskey's two visits to Foreign Minister Rallis. It was specifically requested that negotiations for the signing of the agreement should, if possible, be concluded even though the Greek side counterproposed, in view of international developments and particularly of developments in our immediate area, that any initialed agreement, in any way improved with regard to Greek interests, does require a certain revision.

Tomorrow's Brussels meeting between Generals Gratsios and Rogers is the official start of the new phase in Greek-NATO negotiations since the essence of the matter has already been established by briefing the Greek side. At the same time the search for arrangements for our return to NATO's military wing appears to have been transferred to the political level after the well-known developments which affected the international atmosphere and shook detente. According to diplomatic observers this does not mean that Greece is prepared to accept arrangements which would limit its sovereign rights. This, in any eventuality, was firmly demonstrated by the Greek Government's position to date.

It is in this light that the new Rogers proposals are being examined (despite official denial of this.) These proposals are aimed at establishing an exchange of information between Greece and Turkey on the basis of such geographic data which in essence abolish the delineation of flight areas (FIR) for which Athens is responsible, even though these proposals do not specifically refer to these areas.

At the same time Turkish intransigence toward every initiative (no matter how well intentioned) for the restoration of unity within the Western defense coalition automatically creates an adverse climate which makes any positive developments more difficult. What other explanation could be given to the tactics of the Turkish side which sets conditions even if only for its agreements to simply discuss any proposal and specifically the decrease of the internationally accepted Greek FIR from 10 to 6 miles? Turkey had long ago made these intentions clear, thus causing Greek reaction, when it undermined the Davos-Haig agreement and made it known through General Evren that the Turkish position is: no delineation limits in the Aegean either old or new ones.

Government Is Unjustly Accused

The NATO issue became the subject for a new government-opposition dialog yesterday when PASOK's chairman "warned the government it would be shouldering vast responsibilities if it concedes even a handful of national territory."

As a result of the Papandreou statement and as a result of comments made from time to time the government issued the following statement: "NATO has not requested Greece to return to its military wing. Greece attempted to create the special relations because it considered that this was and remains dictated by current conditions, but the country's interests. The proposals submitted by Greece toward this end were adopted by NATO and they took on the form of the well-known Davos-Haig agreement. Turkey used the "veto" against this agreement and after this General Haig considered it essential to propose certain amendments to this agreement. These amendments were considered unsuitable by the Greek Government which rejected them. "Now General Rogers has undertaken a new initiative on the issue which is under development. By these facts it is difficult for one to understand why there are daily accusations that NATO is pressuring Greece as well as that the government is accepting nationally harmful agreements."

Papandreou Statement

PASOK Chairman Papandreou said that "there is an increase of reports from foreign capitals on a speedy promotion of a 'solution' to the Greek-Turkish 'dispute' in order to strengthen the southeast wing of NATO which has taken on special importance for the United States and NATO after recent developments in the Middle East area, the Persian Gulf and Southeast Asia. It is obvious that the Greek Government continues its negotiations with the new NATO chief, General Rogers. We remind the government that while Turkey is claiming our national territory in the Aegean--sea, underwater and air territory--Greece claims absolutely nothing. It is, as a result, unthinkable that we should continue negotiations the substance of which is to cede Greek national territory to Turkey or to third countries. We warn the government that it will be shouldering vast responsibilities toward the nation and the Greek people if under the excuse of any 'technical' arrangements it cedes even one handful of Greek sea, underwater or airspace to Turkey or to NATO."

Pezmazoglu

KODISO Chairman Pezmazoglu in his statement asked that the government define in detail its position on the question of Aegean operational control, in view of tomorrow's Gratsios-Rogers meeting.

ECEVIT RETURNS FROM SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL, MAKES STATEMENT

TA111748 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 11 Feb 80 TA

[Text] RPP leader Bulent Ecevit returned to Turkey today after attending the meeting of the Socialist International leaders in Vienna, the capital of Austria. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport, Ecevit said that the leaders who had attended the meeting were following the recent economic measures taken in Turkey and the government's economic policy with concern. He said that he was pleased to see that the socialist democratic and the democratic leftist leaders who had attended the meeting viewed international problems with the same set of values. He added that this concurrence of views could make important contributions to world peace.

Ecevit pointed out that Turkey's friends closely followed the developments in Turkey and in the region. He added that the Socialist International could prepare the ground for any aid to be extended to countries. He said: Unfortunately, some countries begin to see Turkey's importance only when unfavorable developments occur in neighboring countries. However, Turkey is more important than that. As a country that keeps democracy going in the face of various difficulties, Turkey is a source of stability in the region. Regardless of whether or not there are exceptions in our region, Turkey's value in this respect must be appreciated.

The RPP leader stressed that the comparison he made between the government's economic policy and South American models was also made by some of the leaders he met in Vienna. Ecevit added: This means that when Westerners or social democrats look at it, they can clearly see what the present Turkish Government wants to do or what intentions lie behind its actions. We say that our friends were increasingly concerned about Turkey. This concern is caused by the possible results of Turkey's new economic policy and the possible effects of the developments in the region on Turkey.

Ecevit said that it was impossible for the South American model to work within democracy. He pointed out that even if a certain prosperity was seen in the beginning, grave problems would later emerge. He maintained that the democratic system could not solve such problems. Consequently, one of two things will happen, Ecevit said. Either this model will not work in Turkey, or if it does, it will threaten our democratic system.

Replying to a question, Ecevit said that he did not believe that his party would take a positive position on the budget. Answering another question, Ecevit said that one party alone could not decide whether the government would continue to stay in power or whether early elections would be held.

JUSTICE PARTY REPRESENTATIVES COUNCIL MEETS IN ANKARA

Demirel Address

TA101408 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1300 GMT 10 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Addressing the Justice Party Representatives Council meeting held in Ankara today, Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said, I am calling on everyone--either let us reap the results of the economic measures we have taken to improve things, or let us go to the polls at any time.

Recalling that he had formed the government trusting promises made in public, Demirel said: Do not worry about the criticisms being leveled. Neither the Nationalist Action Party nor the National Salvation Party, which have promised their support for our government, will leave us in the middle of the road before 100 days are over and the results of the recent economic measures are seen.

Naturally, they have the right to criticise us. However, these criticisms should not evoke in you the fear that the government is being shaken. Demirel said that arguments over the [minority] government and efforts to find new models will damage the atmosphere of security and peace that the government is trying to establish both in the country and abroad.

Further Demirel Statement

TA112057 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 11 Feb 80 TA

[Excerpt] Justice Party leader and Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has called on the entire nation to support the state security forces. He said: We must overcome those who want to turn Turkey into a Cuba, an Afghanistan, a Korea or Indochina. Otherwise we are despicable. Demirel was speaking at the Justice Party representatives meeting in Ankara on the occasion of his party's 19th anniversary. He said:

[Begin Demirel recording] I regret to say that we are faced with the following fact: The factories that we built are not being allowed to operate and the country--which has 2.5 million unemployed [as heard]--is facing shortages of goods. People are barricading themselves in the factories and firing at the outside. This is regrettable. The entire nation must stop and think. We spent billions of liras [to build these factories]. Is it their rights they want to achieve? The way is not to barricade oneself in factories and fire at the state security forces, who are asking them what they are doing there. I cannot think of anything worse. And all this in a Turkey that has 2.5 million unemployed and where 30 million villagers have absolutely no social security. This cannot go on this way. I am complaining to the nation about this behavior [words indistinct]. I want the entire nation to support the state security forces.

To those citizens who ask what they can do I say: Do not be taken in by the provocations. That is the first thing. The second thing is not to protect them [the provocateurs] in their houses. The third thing is to be able to ask them "what are you doing?" I am not telling the citizens to fight. This the state does. However, the state's security forces must have moral support. Everyone must declare his stand. The state is against communism. The state is against [word indistinct]. The state is against treason. [applause] Is there any need to think "who is this?" or "who is that?" We must overcome those who want to turn Turkey into a Cuba, an Afghanistan, a Korea or Indochina. Otherwise we are despicable. That is the greatest duty of the Justice Party. That is why this government was established. [end recording]

Election of Party Officials

TA101604 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 10 Feb 80 TA

[Text] At the Justice Party Representatives Council meeting in Ankara today, Aydin Deputy Nahit Mentese was elected general secretary of the party. This post was vacated when Nuri Bayar, the former general secretary, joined the government as a minister. Mentese was the only candidate for the post of general secretary in the elections, which were held in the council meeting this afternoon.

In a statement after he was elected general secretary of the Justice Party, Mentese said: Turkey is going through difficult times. The Justice Party is the party that knows how to cope with difficulties. These difficulties will be solved through unity, cooperation and solidarity.

Bursa Deputy Kasim Onadim and Ankara Senator Yigit Koker were elected deputy leaders of the party. These posts were vacated when the two former deputy leaders Huseyin Ozalp and Barlas Kuntay were appointed ministers.

Meeting Ends; Statement Issued

TA21123 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 12 Feb 80 TA

[Excerpts] A statement by the Justice Party Representatives Council says the Justice Party is ready for early elections. The statement adds: Either the implementation and results of the economic measures taken with good will and courage by the government must be awaited, or the nation must be called on to make its judgment. The Justice Party is ready to go to the polls.

The statement issued at the end of the council meeting was read to newsmen by Justice Party General Secretary Nahit Mentese. The statement says the party is doing its work in a responsible way, avoiding partisanship in matters of state and regime. Reading the statement, Mentese said:

[Begin Mentese recording] Those who occupy and destroy the factories--built with billions in public money--instead of operating them for the benefit of the people, those who are treacherously using arms against the Turkish soldier and policeman and those who support these acts for political expediency or class interests should be aware that what they are indirectly helping to disrupt is the very free and democratic system which is so vital to them as well. [end recording]

Pointing out that everyone who is not ready to let the communists destroy the country must take part in the struggle being waged by the Justice Party for a nationalist and great Turkey, Mentese said that, until this truth is grasped by everyone, Turkey will not be able to solve its problems. Mentese added that the great efforts made recently in this struggle by the state forces was being publicly appreciated.

ANKARA REPORTS IZMIR VIOLENCE UNDER CONTROL

TA111733 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 11 Feb 80 TA

[Text] It has been reported that the anarchic incidents caused by various aggressive groups in Izmir have been brought under control by security forces. TRT Izmir correspondents report that various groups tried to stage illegal demonstrations. Meanwhile, booby trapped posters were hung in various parts of the city. The posters were disarmed by security forces. The airport road, near which the TARIS [the producers sales cooperations union] spinning mill is located, was barricaded by a group. Cotton bales were placed over the barricades and later the bales were set on fire. The airport road was later opened through the joint efforts of the security forces and the fire department.

The Alsancak branch of the third region representatives of the Confederation of Nationalist Labor Unions [MISK] was raided by an armed group. Attempts were made by terrorists to set on fire two gasoline stations in the Hatay District around the same time. The terrorists wildly fired shots and escaped from the stations. The fire which broke out in one of the gasoline stations was soon extinguished. Extensive security measures have been taken in Izmir to catch those who are creating incidents and disrupting tranquillity in the city. Officials said that a continuous search will be conducted.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

EEC-ROMANIAN TRADE PANEL TO BE ESTABLISHED

LD111129 Paris LE MONDE in French 10-11 Feb 80 p 2 LD

[Philippe Lemaitre dispatch: "Bucharest Establishes Direct Ties With EEC"]

[Text] Brussels (European Communities)--Negotiations on setting up a mixed EEC-Romanian committee have just been completed. The agreement was initialed by the two sides 8 February. Furthermore, discussions aimed at reaching a trade agreement relating to industrial products (other than textiles and iron and steel trade which is governed by previous arrangements) are making rapid progress. In short, the normalization of relations between the EC and Romania is virtually complete.

In so doing, Romania is once again distancing itself from the Soviet Union. Moscow would like trade relations between Eastern bloc countries and the EEC to be governed chiefly by an agreement to be reached between the EEC and CEMA (Socialist countries' economic organization.)

The Community, which cares little about helping to increase the prestige and power of an organization it considers to be too narrowly controlled by the Soviet Union, intends to pursue trade negotiations not with CEMA but with each separate Eastern bloc country--an approach which the Soviets have hitherto not tolerated. By establishing direct contractual ties with the Community, the Romanians are doing exactly what the Russians wanted to avoid.

The mixed committee, which will meet once a year "at the highest possible level" in Brussels and Bucharest alternately, will have extensive powers: It will be able to discuss any question concerning trade relations between the Nine and Romania. The agreement, the first of its kind with an Eastern bloc country, refers to the idea of reciprocity as expressed in the Helsinki Final Act. This means that in return for the concessions given by the Community, Romania will have to give the Community effective trade advantages.

ROMANIA'S FOREIGN MINISTER ANDREI TALKS WITH LEADERS IN VIENNA

AU121320 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 12 Feb 80 pp 1-2 AU

[Unattributed report: "Romania's Foreign Minister in Vienna"]

[Text] Yesterday [11 February] Austrian President Dr Rudolf Kirchschlaeger received for a talk Stefan Andrei, minister of foreign affairs of the Socialist Republic of Romania, who is paying an official visit to Austria. The reception was also attended by Octavian Groza, Romanian ambassador to Austria; Dr Andreas Somogyi, Austrian ambassador to Romania; Cabinet director Dr Weihs and chief of protocol Ambassador Dr Friedrich Froelichthal.

In the afternoon the Romanian foreign minister was received by Chancellor Dr Kreisky.

In two working sessions with Foreign Minister Pahr a number of important questions were discussed. The first round of talks focused on taking stock of visits exchanged in the past and of bilateral relations. Moreover, possibilities of cooperation in third countries were discussed, especially an expansion of cooperation regarding projects in Africa. Regarding cultural cooperation, the Austrian foreign minister drew attention to Romania's role in the key program worked out by Austria for intensifying cultural relations with the East European countries.

Regarding the assets agreement, it was stated that all problems related to it have been virtually solved. Only four indemnification cases are still pending. Minister Pahr pleaded for the earliest possible settlement of these cases and transfer of the amounts concerned to Austria.

At the second working session held by the two foreign ministers in the afternoon, the situation in the crisis areas of the world was discussed.

Regarding Afghanistan, Pahr declared that the very manner in which the intervention in this country was carried out was a provocation for other states. Thus Austria voted at the United Nations for the resolution condemning this intervention, because it is incompatible with the UN principles and a threat to peace. Nevertheless, Austria believes that the policy of detente must be pursued further, he said.

Andrei pointed out that his country's delegation had not taken part in the UN vote. He declared that the Soviet Union could withdraw from Afghanistan if it was guaranteed that no other power would interfere there.

Regarding the Madrid CSCE followup conference scheduled for the fall, the Romanian foreign minister declared that his country was in favor of holding this conference at the foreign ministers level--a view which, as is known, is also held by Austria. Pahr declared that Austria supported holding this followup conference because it would provide an opportunity for checking on the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act.

Both sides expressed the view that it would be desirable for the Madrid conference to achieve concrete results, but that this would depend on the big powers' attitude.

The Romanian foreign minister then suggested an intensified exchange of information about a new international economic order. This proposal was taken up by Pahr, who added in this context that the chain of failures in the North-South dialog must be interrupted.

Regarding the Middle East problems, Andrei suggested the convening of an international conference in which, the United States and the Soviet Union should participate as well as the PLO. The topic of this conference should be the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the occupied territories and the future of the Palestinian people. As far as the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty is concerned, it should neither be approved nor condemned.

Pahr pointed out that the Middle East problem could only be solved simultaneously with the Palestianian problem.

At the close of the talks, Pahr was invited to pay a visit to Romania. The Austrian foreign minister has accepted the invitation. The date will be fixed through diplomatic channels.

Comment on Afghanistan

AU121325 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 12 Feb 80 p 3 AU

[Special DIE PRESSE report on Romanian Foreign Minister Andrei's talks with Foreign Minister Pahr in Vienna on 11 February 1980]

[Excerpt] The talks on international issued focused primarily on the developments since the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. On this occasion, Andrei made it clear that Romania has developed an opinion of its own on this issue which recently was also brought to Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko's ntoice during his visit to Bucharest. At the same time it was stated by Romanian delegation circles that it must not be overlooked that the country was a member of the Warsaw Pact and of CEMA.

Reports asserting that state and party chief Ceausescu had promised good conduct in return for Soviet oil deliveries were understandably not confirmed. However, interlocutors admitted that Bucharest had weakened its criticism of the Soviet Union.

BRIEFS

TRADE WITH USSR, CEMA--In the past decade the volume of Austria's trade with the USSR has trebled. Thus the USSR has become Austria's most important trade partner in East Europe. Because of the large volume of Austria's energy imports from the USSR--80 percent of the country's total imports from the Soviet Union--Austria has at present an annual deficit of about 3.4 billion schillings in trade with the USSR. In its trade with the CEMA region, Austria had a surplus of some 3 billion schillings last year, whereas it incurred a 64.4 billion schillings deficit in trade with EEC countries. [Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 10 Feb 80 p 2 AU]

MORE REFUGEES--In January 1980, 748 asylum cases were concluded in Austria, as against 168 in January 1979. Of the refugees who had applied for political asylum, 292 were from the CSSR (as against 10 in January 1979); 142 from Romania (1979: 73); 119 from Poland (1979: 24); 87 from Hungary (1979: 27); and 108 from "other countries" (1979: 34). In January, 619 people were granted refugee status in line with the Geneva Convention, and another 129 asylum applicants were given permission to stay in Austria. In January, 363 new applications for political asylum were submitted, as against 211 in January 1979. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 12 Feb 80 p 2 AU]

GENSCHER HINTS AT FOREIGN MINISTERS MEETING 20 FEB

LD121835 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1800 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] Speaking to the FDP Bundestag parliamentary group in Berlin today, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher hinted that a meeting of foreign ministers of European countries will probably still take place in Bonn on 20 February. U.S. Secretary of State Vance will also attend.

STRAUSS SUPPORTS FRANCE ON FOREIGN MINISTERS MEETING

LD122116 Hamburg DPA in German 1936 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] Paris--Franz-Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister-president and CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor, today expressed understanding for the French refusal to participate in the foreign ministers conference planned for 20 February in Bonn. At the end of his 2-day visit, during which he held talks with Premier Raymond Barre, Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet and Senate and National Assembly Presidents Alain Poher and Jacques Chaban-Delmas, Strauss laid the blame for the failure of the meeting on the Federal Government.

Had everything been discussed at the German-French summit, including the foreign ministers meeting, France would have taken part, Strauss emphasized. But if Bonn plans to go it alone, he can understand the French. He also accused the Federal Government of "speaking French in Paris, English in Washington and both in Bonn."

Strauss said that as federal chancellor he would intensify German-French relations. At the same time, he said that cooperation in aviation and space technology and political support for France would be increased. "The French do not need malicious criticism when they assume international responsibility, rather they need support and cooperation."

Strauss gave assurances that he would naturally continue the policy of detente as federal chancellor. He would not dramatize matters, but, within the framework of ostpolitik, he would reestablish the awareness of problems, that has been eroded. This includes removing the fallacy that the policy of detente signifies the end of the East-West conflict. It is in fact a constituent part of it.

Finally Strauss endorsed France's increased defense efforts. At the same time, he demanded that several gaps existing in the West's defense system be filled. The infrastructure for the Reforger system in the Federal Republic and the rapid arrival of American troops is not satisfactory.

The chancellor candidate demanded that the Federal Republic assist in defending the West's vital interest in the Persian Gulf. If partner countries should be forced to intervene there militarily, it should at least put air and sea transport capacities at their disposal. In addition, it should fill the gaps that arise as a result of the departure of other countries' NATO troops.

Strauss is convinced that no crisis will occur in the Federal Republic which will be serious enough to justify the creation of another Great Coalition. From today's standpoint, there is no such prerequisite.

PRESS CONFERENCE MARKS END OF VISIT BY YUGOSLAV DELEGATION

LD121204 Hamburg DPA in German 1102 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--In the present world political crisis the policy of detente must be maintained, and the nonalined countries are now of greater importance for its development than ever.

This was the joint conviction expressed today at the end of talks between a delegation of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) and leading SPD representatives in Bonn.

At a press conference the head of the Yugoslav delegation, Aleksandr Grlickov, member of the 23-man party Presidium, and SPD Federal Business Manager Egon Bahr stressed the principle of nonintervention in the form particularly supported by the nonalined states. Bahr said that Yugoslavia in particular had a special role among the nonalined countries. Grlickov called for all possible influence to be exerted on the two great powers--the United States and the USSR--to interrupt the "dialog of the deaf." He said that the long term boycott measures proposed by the United States, including a boycott of the Olympics, were inopportune.

Bahr spoke of the danger of taking decisions that would be difficult to revise and recalled that the United States had canceled the economic embargo at first imposed on Iran in order not to hamper the diplomatic efforts for the liberation of the hostages held in the U.S. Embassy. We said he hoped the United States would show the same flexibility in dealing with the Afghanistan crisis.

In Bonn the Yugoslav delegation met, among others, with SPD politicians Hans-Juergen Wischnewski and Horst Ehmke, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, and Minister of State in the Foreign Office Klaus von Dohnanyi.

APEL HOLDS TALKS WITH VISITING SPANISH DEFENSE MINISTER

LD111906 Hamburg DPA in German 1413 GMT 11 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] Bonn--Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel received Spanish Defense Minister Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun in Bonn this afternoon for a lengthy confidential talk. Apel had earlier greeted the Spanish guest with military honors at the Defense Ministry. Sahagun is on a 3-day visit to Bonn.

The Spanish Army is working toward closer cooperation with the Bundeswehr. According to reliable information this became apparent during the meeting between Defense Minister Hans Apel and his Spanish counterpart, Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun. It was learned that the Spaniards are particularly interested in armaments cooperation and exchanging troop training experience. Spanish membership in NATO also seems to have been a topic of discussion between the two ministers.

So far there has been no sizeable military cooperation between Bonn and Madrid. Spain has purchased BO-105 helicopters, which are used by the Bundeswehr as antitank helicopters and the Spanish minister is said to have expressed interest in purchasing M-48 tanks from the Bundeswehr.

It was also learned that Sahagun is in favor of developing Spain's arms industry, perhaps with German licenses. Tomorrow Sahagun will visit the III Corps in Koblenz and the Ehrenbreitstein fortress.

Madrid Report

LD122252 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Spanish Defense Minister Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun has ended his visit to the FRG. Here is a dispatch from Bonn by Asuncion Valdes:

The specific aim of this visit was to study the possible framework for Spanish-German industrial cooperation in the field of armaments, the defense minister said at a press conference before leaving for Madrid. Rodriguez Sahagun said we need to take advantage of the important purchases of armaments that still have to be made abroad, to acquire new technologies and to increase the level of national integration of arms material. At the same time, we hope to reduce our dependence on other countries and to diversify this dependence, which is currently concentrated on a few countries. To achieve this, cooperation with the German arms industry is of great importance, the Spanish defense minister stressed.

The Spanish position of NATO was not discussed during meetings with his German colleague, Hans Apel. Reports in the West German press on the role that the possible entry of our country into NATO could have played in this visit were called pure conjecture and guesswork by the Spanish minister.

However, the question was raised as to whether arms purchases from and arms cooperation with NATO countries does not already prejudice Spain's entry to the Atlantic alliance. Rodriguez Sahagun said no to this question, proving his good eye for business.

GENSCHER WELCOMES GIEREK'S PROPOSAL TO CONTINUE DISARMAMENT TALKS

LD121452 Hamburg DPA in German 1403 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] Berlin/Bonn--FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has welcomed the readiness expressed by Polish party chief Edward Gierek to continue the East-West disarmament dialog. At a meeting of the FDP parliamentary group in Berlin today, Genscher said that Gierek's suggestion to convene a European disarmament conference in Warsaw deserved "serious examination."

Genscher pointed out that in response to a relevant French proposal, Bonn, together with its partners in the EEC and NATO, had called for a European disarmament conference for which a mandate should be sought at the forthcoming CSCE followup meeting in Madrid. If Poland is now taking up this proposal it must not be ignored or rejected out of hand. Genscher suggested sounding out to what extent Polish ideas regarding such a conference squared with those of the West.

GENSCHER INVITED BY IRAQI COUNTERPART TO VISIT BAGHDAD

LD121654 Hamburg DPA in German 1617 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] Bonn--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has been invited by his Iraqi counterpart, Sa'dun Hammadi, to visit Baghdad, where the exchange of views begun over the weekend between both governments is to be continued. This was announced in Bonn today following the final 90-minute meeting between the two foreign ministers. The date for Genscher's visit is yet to be agreed.

Both foreign ministers described their talks as "most positive" and underlined the importance of the visit. Hammadi's agenda tonight includes a meeting with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. It has been learned that Iraq is also interested in closer cooperation with West Europe, but it seems to take a skeptical view of cooperation limited to the EC and the Arab Gulf states. Iraq instead advocates cooperation within a European-Arab framework.

MINISTER COMMENTS ON LOGISTIC SUPPORT TO TUNISIA

LD131150 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 13 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The latest in the difficult relations between Tunisia and Libya: Colonel Qadhdhafi is now demanding the convening of an extraordinary conference of the Islamic countries. Also to be noted is the return of the French planes and helicopters sent there. They were termed logistic support at the time of the attack on the town of Qafsah.

Minister [of Youth, Sport and Leisure] Jean-Pierre Soisson, moreover, is back from a visit to Tunisia. He sums up the situation there to Bertrand Vannier:

[Begin recording] [Soisson] The Tunisians are worried, worried about a further operation from the Libyan side. They consider that in this situation, which is a difficult one for them, France can provide them with a political and diplomatic guarantee. France appears to them--and the president of the republic himself appears to them--as a factor of peace and a factor of stability.

[Vannier] At the time of the Qafsah events, France notably provided logistic support to Tunisia. Do you feel that the Tunisians want this military cooperation to be strengthened?

[Soisson] What they want is political and diplomatic support, and that is France's position. We provided them with temporary logistic support; there is no question of going any further. They do not want that. [end recording]

ARTHUR PAECHT JUSTIFIES CALL FOR MORE SPENDING ON DEFENSE

LD111411 Paris LE MONDE in French 8 Feb 80 pp 1, 8 LD

[Part I of a series of articles by French National Assembly National Defense and Armed Forces Committee Secretary Arthur Paecht and Jacques Cressard, National Assembly Finance Committee defense budget keynote speaker: "Which Policy?"--I--New Financial Sacrifices," by Arthur Paecht]

[Excerpt] The existing balance of forces has changed markedly. Without disregarding the importance of the protection offered to Western Europe by the United States, nobody can deny that it no longer has the same credibility, at least for the time being. The balance of armaments has constantly changed in favor of the East and to the West's detriment.

How could we fail to be saddened on reading the annual report submitted by U.S. Defense Secretary Brown, in which he says, in essence, that the Americans cannot count too much on their old and weary European allies who would be well-advised to contribute more to the defense of Europe proper. Moreover, Mr Kissinger's recent statements took the same line.

It must also be noted that there is not, or not yet, any real coordination among European countries regarding the defense effort and that, in any case, Europe, for lack of political unity, is not really in a position to draw up the military doctrine or find the equipment likely to weigh heavily in the balance between the two big established blocs.

However, while it can be said that the Europeans cannot and do not want to do without the Americans in defense matters, France, because of the clear-sighted defense policy constantly followed under the Fifth Republic, now stand apart because--like the British--it possesses nuclear weapons but above all because it can decide to use them in complete independence.

This original position, which effectively gives France considerable strength in its policy of seeking negotiated solutions with a view to maintaining peace, will only remain fully valid if the options are constantly adapted to the development of this type of weapon.

Therefore, the debate should also relate to the modernization of our strategic nuclear forces, our tactical nuclear weapons and the new conventional weapons systems which our advanced technology in this sphere enables us to develop.

Convincing the Country

If we are to move in this direction, choices also have to be made in the financial and budgetary spheres.

Some people might imagine that it would be enough to give priority to nuclear weapons and to reduce the budget for other weapons. The importance of our army could also be called into question, but we have for some time considered that that would be a very serious mistake.

Our defense is a whole--nuclear and conventional, air, sea and ground defense. Although the nuclear force might play a major role in the apocalyptic hypothesis of a great East-West conflict, the other forces would be just as indispensible in the interventions which we might be forced to undertake, and have already undertaken in the North-South context.

Therefore, we must envisage an all-embracing effort, and that inevitably requires a major increase in the percentage of the budget devoted to defense and this increase will, in any case, have to be more than the rise planned for the end of the current programming law (4 percent of the gross domestic commercial product).

We must now convince the country and make it understand that the financial sacrifices which the whole nation must make, despite the already difficult economic context, are indispensible and that they are the price which must be paid for freedom. However, is it not rightly said that freedom has no price?

The debate will probably show that we have no other choice.

Systematically sheltering completely under the American umbrella by de facto integration into NATO is unsafe if not dangerous.

It would be just as unrealistic and illusory to try and take an isolated stand and provide our own defense alone. "It would be very foolish to try to be wise all alone." (La Rochefoucauld)

Therefore, the only option left is that taken by the president of the republic--namely a France which makes a major effort to modernize and increase the efficiency of its forces while respecting its alliances and serving European defense.

It is a difficult path and a great plan, but this is probably the price of peace!

INDUSTRY MINISTER GIRAUD DETAILS ENERGY POLICY

ID121417 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 6 Feb 80 pp 1, 4 LD

[Gabriel Farkas interview with French Minister of Industry Andre Giraud: "No Limit to Oil Blackmail"--date, place not specified]

[Text] Gabriel Farkas: In November and December we experienced a sharp increase in fuel prices. A week ago, it started again. What will our bill for 1980 total?

Andre Giraud: Prices are now increasing erratically, so nobody can forecast what the bill for 1980 will be. But I can tell you that it will greatly exceed Fr100 billion. It is an enormous sum.

Gabriel Farkas: How much will we be paying for gasoline tomorrow, and when will the increase come?

Andre Giraud: We do not yet know all the oil-producing countries' decisions, and, under these circumstances, it would be too early to speak of the repercussions on the prices of the various products.

But it is clear that the price increases over the last few days--of 12-15 percent--create a grave situation. You see, the most serious aspect is that there is no longer any regulating mechanism. We are confronted with the utmost arbitrariness, with decisions being made anarchically by the various oil-producing countries. It is an extremely troubling situation.

Gabriel Farkas: What, in your opinion, is the limit to the oil blackmail? What is the limit to the burden which can be borne by the consumer countries--rich or poor?

Andre Giraud: There is no limit. The poorest countries, which are in the process of ruining themselves to pay for their essential oil imports, are affected the worst. This poses considerable dangers of a world imbalance. The excessive oil price increases are threatening to disrupt the international payments system. This is why the president of the republic is preparing to make proposals concerning the functioning of the international monetary system.

Utmost Arbitrariness

Gabriel Farkas: Do you not believe that the time has come to put an end to the arbitrariness and say "no" to the oil-producing countries?

Andre Giraud: A number of oil-producing countries are well aware that the situation cannot continue along this course. Moreover, we are seeing a certain surplus appear on the "spot markets"; prices are falling. Some stabilization can therefore be expected within a few weeks. But in any case we must not fall asleep, because the lull will be only temporary.

Gabriel Farkas: You have just met with your U.S. counterpart in charge of energy affairs in Washington. What conclusions do you draw from your visit to the United States?

Andre Giraud: I found a considerable change since my previous visit in June 1979. This time the Americans have fully realized that there is an energy crisis and that this crisis is tied to the international situation.

A year ago most Americans did not know that the United States imported oil; this is no longer the case today.

Gabriel Farkas: Since 1973, the consumer countries have not faced up to the oil crisis in a united way. Each government hopes to secure better terms from the oil-producing countries than the others. Will the current gravity of the situation lead the consumers to display greater solidarity?

Mobilization

Andre Giraud: Since early 1979 the French Government has striven to promote coherence in the consumer countries' decisions--first, on the European level in Strasbourg in June 1979, and then, at the level of the major industrialized countries, in Tokyo in July. We succeeded in setting--and this is very important--import quotas with which everybody has undertaken to comply.

We are also seeing a certain mobilization of the industrial countries to resort to alternative sources. We in France have a major nuclear program. The United States has announced a program for the production of synthetic fuel from coal; it can afford this because it has very cheap coal. But it, too, ought to develop nuclear power.

And then there are initiatives here and there in favor of renewable energy sources, such as the sun. We are fully aware that, unfortunately, these will be unable to contribute significantly for a long time yet.

Last, I believe that people are gradually becoming accustomed to the idea that it is necessary to hold talks between the consumer countries and the oil-producing countries. The obstacle is the oil-producing countries' difficulty in reaching agreement among themselves. The difficulty is no longer on the part of the consumer countries.

Gabriel Farkas: You recently announced the development of coal production at Gardanne, in the Provence coal mines. Why not in the north and in Lorraine?

Andre Giraud: What the government has decided--to be precise--is to launch an ambitious coal policy, characterized by efforts to redevelop the use of coal to replace fuel oil and to supplement nuclear energy. Within the framework of this policy, we have to define a national production policy.

I will remind you that at present we import 30 million tons out of every 50 million tons of coal consumed. As far as the national production policy is concerned, I will make my decision after meeting with the miners' trade union organizations some day next week.

But I would like to point out the two basic imperatives. The first is that we cannot continue to work exhausted mines whose production costs would be prohibitive for the taxpayer. On the other hand, we would rightly be criticized for not exploiting our country's profitable coal resources.

Basically, our coal policy should be governed by the desire to develop national production within acceptable economic limits and by a number of measures to guarantee the reliability of our imports.

Develop Nuclear Energy

Gabriel Farkas: Will the recent changes on the oil scene lead the government to intensify its nuclear policy?

Andre Giraud: No, I do not believe so. Our program was devised with a view of the development of the oil situation which has unfortunately proved correct. It is advisable simply to continue this program resolutely and earnestly.

Gabriel Farkas: You recently said that the development of nuclear energy is the only way to avert an "oil war" in the future. What do you mean by that?

Andre Giraud: Unless there is a widespread and persistent economic recession, the amount of oil available will become increasingly limited. Current events in the Middle East give us a foretaste of the situation which could arise. Yes. The danger is real. So any policy which opposed the development of nuclear energy--that is, the replacement of oil--would be a dangerous policy for world peace.

Gabriel Farkas: One final question: Can the West's anxieties over Afghanistan also be explained by the proximity of the Middle East oilfields?

Andre Giraud: That seems obvious to me....

CHIRAC CALLS FOR FIRMNESS IN FACE OF SOVIET AGGRESSION

LD121630 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Jacques Chirac is holding a press conference. He is speaking neither as mayor of Paris nor as president of the RPR [Rally for the Republic] but as an individual. In a preliminary statement at his press conference he dealt mainly with the international situation. Here are some details from Suzanne Gautier at the press conference:

Jacques Chirac has dealt mainly with foreign policy, placing it under the standard of firmness. Detente, he said, must not be preserved through weakness.

[Begin Chirac recording] If detente remains the fundamental objective for France, this cannot justify an attitude of weakness and, even less, abdication in the face of hegemonistic enterprises carried out in the world with the usual cynicism of brutal force. It demands, on the contrary, an attitude of very great firmness. In this respect, the Soviet aggression against Afghanistan, even if it does not more than complete the annexation previously carried out by Moscow in that country, is inadmissible and must be condemned. [end recording]

[Gautier] Summing up, Jacques Chirac stresses in all areas the spirit of decisiveness and retaliation.

[Announcer] Thank you, Suzanne. I will complete your report with two details: On the one hand, Jacques Chirac regretted that the Olympic games are in doubt for political reasons, as he said; on the other, Jacques Chirac demanded that everything should be done to insure that before the end of the century France have 15 nuclear submarines adapted to new technologies.

IRANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER QOTBZADEH TO VISIT 14 FEB

[Text] Rome, February 13 (ANSA)--Iranian Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh arrives here Thursday morning for a twenty-four-hour official visit and a probable schedule including talks with Foreign Minister Attilio Ruffini and, possibly, other Italian Government leaders. The Iranian diplomatic chief is due in Athens tomorrow and will fly on to Paris after his stop in Rome.

His talks with the Italian leaders are expected to give a useful insight into political prospects in Iran and may also confirm expectations of a more moderate line in Tehran after the election of President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr. According to one authoritive interpretation making the rounds here, Qotbzadeh's decision to include Rome in his brief European tour should be read as recognition of Italy's even-handed position with respect to the west Asian state.

PCI'S NATTA DEFINES DIRECTORATE'S LINE ON DC CONGRESS

LD111051 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 3 Feb 80 pp 1, 17 LD

[Enzo Roggi undated interview in Rome with PCI Directorate member Alessandro Natta: "We Are Prepared To Negotiate Only for a Government of Solidarity"]

[Text] Rome--New political options capable of giving this country a government finally worthy of the name can no longer be postponed. The Socialist Party Central Committee has already announced as much. Now we await the decisions of the now imminent Christian Democratic Party [DC] Congress. So the "truce" is over. The PCI Directorate discussed this situation at its latest meeting. We asked Alessandro Natta to tell us what approaches emerged from that meeting.

[Natta] In fact we have never talked about a truce. What we are saying is that the DC and other parties have spent 6 months waiting for something to happen. Perhaps they hoped that the country's situation would improve spontaneously. But, as was to be expected, this did not happen: Italy is marked more than ever, and from all angles, by an increasingly grave crisis. This is the objective fact behind our political proposal, which remains quite unchanged--a real, full solidarity of all the democratic and regenerative forces, which will take the form of a government of unity to resolve the emergency. We valued the fact that the Italian Socialist Party also indicated this same solution, without any second choices. Now it is the DC's turn to adopt a stance: It is up to the DC to provide an answer in precise--not ambiguous or noncommittal--terms regarding the kind of policy and the kind of government we should have.

[Question] Is the proposal for negotiations on the government program adequate to initiate a thorough clarification and to lead to an authoritative and stable government?

[Answer] I do not want to question the motivation of the Republican initiative. But let us try to understand its true nature, the true aims of these negotiations, especially since the DC seems to be supporting them. First, it seems strange to want to hold negotiations for the formation of a government proceeding from the premise of keeping the present government alive. We would not want everything to follow the usual scenario, in which the parties hold discussions, the government vegetates, the citizens go to the polls, the months go by and the solution is progressively postponed further and further into the future. Some people are afraid of a crisis in the dark; we are also afraid of inconclusive negotiations in the dark which will merely serve electoral aims and petty maneuvers and will not help us to tackle and resolve the country's problems.

[Question] Why "in the dark?" Has it not been stated that the negotiations must take place without preconceptions?

[Answer] There is absolutely no sense in holding negotiations which do not proceed from the protagonists' explicit and declared intention of managing to govern together if an understanding on a program is reached. How could we negotiate the guidelines and program of a government which--as the Italian Social Democratic Party and the Italian Liberal Party demand--we cannot join under any circumstances and while the DC says, via Zaccagnini, that our participation would cause dangers and political and social unease and, via Galloni, that the international conditions for it do not exist? Negotiations on these bases would be a pure waste of time. Worse: They would risk increasing the confusion and nurturing public mistrust of the political forces and institutions.

[Question] Zaccagnini has reproached the PCI for reducing the idea of national solidarity to the "elementary dilemma" of our presence in the government.

[Answer] There can be no doubt that this is the central "dilemma" of our democratic life. But why "elementary"? This harping on the distinction, indeed the gulf, between a program understanding and a government solution--on which so much imagination has been expended since 20 June--reflects a single aim: to evade or shelve the issue of the Communists' government participation. The DC is unable to resolve this problem, though it is aware of the unfeasability of a policy of conflict with the workers movement and though it declares that there are no alternatives to a policy of solidarity. This is why it is seeking excuses by accusing others of the stubborness and contradictions of which it alone is guilty.

[Question] One journalist went to Zaccagnini's defense by writing that basically the Communists' presence in the government is not indispensable since the PCI will in any case pursue a policy of national responsibility, as has been seen in connection with the antiterrorist measures.

[Answer] This is an extraordinary observation: A praiseworthy quality is cited to justify a discrimination. While it is true that our democratic options will remain the same whether we participate in the government or whether we remain in opposition, it is also true--as the 1978 experience showed--that a correct parliamentary dialog and even agreements on legislation are insufficient; the decisive thing is the consistent implementation of the laws, authoritativeness, the government's determination and effective capability. [paragraph continues]

Parliamentary consensus is insufficient for steering this country through the storms of the crisis: What is needed is the participation of and direct assumption of responsibility by the fundamental peoples' forces. This is the essential guarantee for creating in the nation the political and moral climate essential for an effective policy of solidarity and regeneration.

[Question] Senator Spadolini [Italian Republican Party secretary] has once again observed that his party has always given priority to the content of government programs as against alinements, as if urging us to do the same.

[Answer] We too regard the content as important but we cannot pretend to ignore the fact that the situation is entirely different for us. The other parties have not been, and are not being, subjected to any discriminatory form of blackmail and can decide for themselves whether or not to participate in the government on the basis of programs or other opportune aspects. We have to deal with other people's presumptions in submitting us to tests of ideological and political suitability, which in fact conceal the desire to evade the options for regeneration with regard to government approaches and structure which are now due and which our participation would make definite.

[Question] Which conditions, therefore, would make possible our participation in the negotiations?

[Answer] We are obliged to repeat ourselves. We can consider participating on three conditions: 1--That the proposed government be based on relations of equality, equal rights and observance of the various partners' political and parliamentary representativity; 2--that the program reflect the objectives of the regeneration of society and the state and the role of peace in Italy and in international relations; 3--that the government work collegially and unitarily and not as a federation of ministers managed to suit the individual parties' convenience.

[Question] Otherwise?

[Answer] Otherwise, unless there is absolute clarity regarding these criteria, the PCI will not take part in any negotiations, partly because we believe that the danger of wasting time could be fatal. Time is not working in the country's or democracy's favor. It is not at all a matter of "heavy conditions," as Spadolini claims: It is simply a matter of resolving at last this issue which has been blocking the Italian crisis for too long, by restoring a consistent link between program contents and their implementation, between the parliamentary majority and its government expression.

[Question] Does this mean that things are simpler as far as the program contents and the government approach are concerned?

[Answer] We must be equally clear about this. Here too there is a tendency to test our suitability, with an extraordinary reversal of roles. For instance, we are told that foreign policy issues are now decisive. But we are the first to see the dangers facing peace, to feel the need for detente and for the struggle to halt the rearmament race and to reactivate international cooperation. We have striven--through very significant actions, I believe--to indicate a responsible and valid foreign policy line which will, while rigorously observing our alliances, assert an active role for Italy and Europe in connection with the grave deterioration of relations between the major powers and the return to the logic of force and spheres of influence.

[Question] It has been objected that this would create an equidistant, almost neutral, position....

[Answer] Whoever makes that objection is not telling the truth. No equidistance and no retreat to defending our own national "peculiarities," but an active function and involvement capable of matching both Italy's and the general interests. This line is so responsible and strong that--in connection with the missiles, the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and the U.S. reprisals strategy--it has managed to prompt very significant respect and convergences, from socialist, social democratic and Catholic forces and from Western and nonalined governments (from France to India). Let it be clear: We do not intend to, and we must not stray from this line because we believe it is absolutely consistent with national requirements and the active peace role which Italy must play within both the EC and the Atlantic alliance.

[Question] Does this mean a redefinition, a reassessment of Italy's international approach?

[Answer] It means a reassessment of the consistency--or rather, inconsistency--of certain positions expressed by other parties regarding guidelines to which we have jointly committed ourselves in Parliament. Indeed, it is we who are indicating serious problems to others--to those who propose extremist distortions and the unquestioning acceptance of decisions which the United States wants. I see that people are now talking explicitly about extending the Atlantic alliance's military commitments to other "hot spots" in the world. We must be clear about this. This is the real test of everyone's autonomy. This is why we are asking what foreign policy the DC proposes. We believe it is lamentable that the DC has failed to appreciate the importance of our positions and initiative and that it has been unable to produce initiatives of any importance itself. Will it do so at its congress? First and foremost, will it manage to reply to the universal public wish with a policy which will calm the real anxieties regarding the future of our peace and peace in general?

[Question] What about other aspects of the program?

[Answer] Here too it is we who have had to ask the questions. What do we want? The mere, illusory defense of the existing social and economic situation, or do we want to establish incisive, though limited, objectives for change? To encourage inflation or pursue a policy of planning, conversion and development of the production base? And so forth, with every other aspect--from the functioning of the institutions to the reestablishment of morality in public life, from fiscal justice to the unyielding defense of democratic order and civilized coexistence. There must be absolute clarity, precise commitments and solid guarantees.

PARTIES REACT TO REVALUATION, ANTI-INFLATION MEASURES

LD121102 Lisbon in English to North America 0300 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The external competitiveness of Portuguese industry will not be affected by the 6 percent revaluation of the escudo, stated Mr Cavaco e Silva, the finance minister, during a press conference he gave yesterday to explain the anti-inflationary measures taken by the government. He also revealed that the government plans to maintain the present level of interest rates until there is a significant drop in the rate of inflation.

With the aim of combating speculation it was announced that the government intends to revalue the currency again if it is possible to reduce the rate of inflation to the desired level.

The measures taken, and intended to combat price rises, range from the contention of government spending and of subsidies to state-owned companies to new legislation on price controls, including heavier penalties for speculation and for attempts against the public health, and an attempt to link wage rises and productivity.

The first political reactions to these measures taken by the new government of Mr Sa Carneiro are already coming in. Of course the positions are different depending on whether the parties concerned belong to the ruling Democratic Alliance or to the opposition.

Vitor Constancio, speaking for the Socialists, who are in the opposition, said that the program now announced would not be enough to contain inflation within the bounds set by the government. However, he added that he had no objections to the revaluation of the escudo, since he and many other economists recognized that the escudo had already been devalued too much.

He nevertheless stated that he thinks that revaluation may not have significant effects on the rate of inflation, although it will impose a sacrifice on the productive sector.

For Angelo Correia, the spokesman for the Social Democrats--who are the main force in the Democratic Alliance--the measures are positive and imply a reduction of the deficit of the balance of trade and also a reduction in the prices of some products.

As to Luis Barbosa, speaking for the Centrists--who are also in the governing Democratic Alliance--the measures are a first step towards correcting an unfavorable exchange policy.

For his part, Jose Tengarrinha, of the opposition Portuguese Democratic Movement, stated that the measures were intended to try and take away the negative political effects of the higher prices for essential food products announced a few days ago.

Another opposition group, the Popular Democratic Union, says that the present measures are demagogic and aimed at hiding the real causes of the economic crisis that is affecting the (?country).

The Communist and Popular Monarchist parties have not yet revealed their positions.

HELSINKI REPORTS ON U.S.-NORWAY TALKS ON ARMS STORAGE

LD122120 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 12 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Norway confirms the New York TIMES report about talks between Norway and the United States on the deployment of American military equipment in northern Norway. The Norwegian defense minister has stressed that this is a project which has been under preparation in NATO for several years and has nothing to do with the present international situation. Here is a report by Ulla-Maria Johansen in Oslo:

Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg has confirmed the report by the New York TIMES, according to which Norway and the United States are holding talks on the deployment of American military equipment in northern Norway in the event of a possible crisis situation. Until now the Americans have only been able to store ammunition and fuel in Norway. The talks now underway deal with enough heavy military equipment, weapons, tanks and other vehicles for 8,000 U.S. Marines, which would be placed in northern Norway during peace time. However, Defense Minister Stoltenberg does not want to comment on the question of the number of troops for which the equipment will be stored. This question is still under discussion.

The defense minister also does not want to comment on whether the talks will lead to an agreement this year. It is a long-term process, notes Defense Minister Stoltenberg. The defense minister recalls that similar talks with the Canadian Government on the deployment of Canadian military equipment and troops in Norway in the event of a possible crisis situation have been going on for several years. The Defense Ministry also denies allegations to the effect that the talks with the United States have been speeded up as a result of the situation in Afghanistan.

AKEL LEADER RENEWS CHARGES OF U.S. USING BRITISH BASES

NC130721 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 13 Feb 80 p 1 NC

[Text] AKEL leader Mr Papaioannou has renewed his charge that American forces are stationed at the British bases and attacked the presence of British warships in Cyprus territorial waters. Mr Papaioannou was speaking at Episkopi village, near the Episkopi Base.

He defended Soviet action in Afghanistan and described the American reaction as "anti-communist and anti-Soviet hysteria".

"We are asking Carter and Thatcher: Why are the Americans and British with their bases in so many foreign countries thousands of miles away from their borders? What are they seeking in Turkey, the Gulf, Western Europe and Cyprus?"

"Soviet troops are in Afghanistan at the invitation of the legitimate government. But on whose invitation are the American U-2 spy planes using Cyprus soil and the other American military forces in our country? Who invited British warships in Cyprus waters? They violate the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus", Mr Papaioannou said.

SPOKESMAN DENIES INVOLVEMENT IN ARMENIAN TERRORISM

[Text] Referring to Turkish Cypriot and Turkish mainland press reports as well as to statements by Turkish officials that the Greek Cypriots are financing and training Armenians to wage an anti-Turkish struggle, the government spokesman has said that this is an obvious campaign of slander and suspicion against the Republic of Cyprus. He added: These press reports and statements are the subject of an assiduous study and investigation by the appropriate authorities, and measures to deal with the situation will be taken both in the international and the domestic fields.

As the interior and defense minister stated yesterday, no Greek Cypriot has the slightest connection with any assassination or attempt to assassinate any Turkish officials.

HOUSE PRESIDENT HOPES FOR LASTING, VIABLE CYPRUS SOLUTION

NC091947 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1830 GMT 9 Feb 80 NC

[Excerpts] House President Mikhailidhis has expressed hope that the UN secretary general's initiative, which is now in progress, will lead to holding talks on the Cyprus problem. Mr Mikhailidhis said: The Greek side, the Greek Cypriot side will exert efforts to create a positive climate for holding talks. He added: Our goal is to achieve a lasting, viable solution that will secure true independence and territorial integrity for our island within the framework of a biregional federation, a solution that will create the necessary prerequisites for the coexistence of Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots under conditions of progress, prosperity and mutual respect. The measures, he added, announced by President Kiprianou are an example and proof of how much the Greek side is conscious of the need for creating sincere cooperation between Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots.

Speaking tonight at Paralimni on the fourth anniversary of the Paralimni Vegetable Growers Association, Mr Mikhailidhis also stressed that during these critical hours for our country there is no room either for petty politics or for improvising. He added: And while we reorganize our own forces for the difficult struggle, we simultaneously become conscious that the steadiest and most lasting support for Cyprus' struggle comes from Greece because this support is due to reasons of ethnic identity and not due to reasons of interest or other expediencies.

Referring to the domestic situation, Mr Mikhailidhis said that there is discord and a chasm on the domestic front, and unfortunately this situation might be continued, but that personal or partisan differences, he stressed, should never move us from the joint front, the front of Cyprus' struggle.

TFSC'S ATAKOL SCORES ROLANDHIS ON RECENT U.S. TRIP

TA111910 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 11 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, has protested against a statement by the Greek Cypriot foreign minister, Mr Rolandhis, on his return from a recent visit to New York to the effect that his contacts abroad had not been on behalf of the Greek Cypriots but on behalf of entire Cyprus. He described Mr Rolandhis' stand as illogical and an insult to the Turkish Cypriot community. He said that this stand also ran counter to the efforts for the resumption of the intercommunal talks--Mr Rolandhis should have known that the Greek Cypriot administration, which illegally posed as the Government of Cyprus, represented only the Greek Cypriot community. Mr Atakol added that it was unbelievably irresponsible on the part of the Greek Cypriot leaders to regard themselves as an authority to speak for the Turkish Cypriots.

TURKISH DELEGATION ARRIVES IN NICOSIA FOR TFSC ANNIVERSARY

TA121612 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1215 GMT 12 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The speaker of the Turkish Senate, Mr Caglayangil; the minister of state and chairman of the Coordination Committee for Cyprus, Mr Ceyhun; the commander of the land forces, General Ersin; and the commander of the war academies, General Demirel arrived in Nicosia from Ankara this morning to take part in the celebrations marking the 5th anniversary of the foundation of the Federated State. On their arrival at Ercan State Airport, they were greeted by President Denktas; the Turkish ambassador, Mr Batu; the commander of the Turkish peace force, General Yamak; the president of the legislative assembly, Mr Korhan; the prime minister, Mr Cagatay and other officials.

Speaking at the airport, Mr Caglayangil said he had paid a visit to Cyprus just before the peace operation, and he was happy to pay another visit now. He expressed the hope that peace would be maintained in Cyprus in the 6th year of the Federated State's existence. He added that he had also brought with him the best wishes of President Koruturk for the Turkish Cypriot community.

The commander of the land forces, General Ersin, who commanded the first phase of the peace operation, said this was his first visit to the island since the operation. He said he was happy to pay a visit to the Turkish Cypriot community in the free Federated State. He added that thanks to the peace operation there would be no more dark days for the Turkish Cypriot community. He finally paid tribute to the Turkish troops and the Turkish Cypriot fighters who took part in the operation and said that those who fell in the fighting would always be remembered with deep gratitude.

The minister of state and chairman of the Coordination Committee for Cyprus, Mr Ceyhun, said that Turkey would continue to assist the Turkish Cypriot community in becoming self-sufficient and economically independent.

Welcoming the guests, President Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriot community was determined to be worthy of the sacrifices made by the many who fell while defending its cause and not to come under the domination of the Greek Cypriots. He stressed that his community wanted to resume the talks with the Greek Cypriots on equal terms and to perpetuate the freedom it had won with the help of the Turkish motherland. He expressed the hope that the Greek Cypriots would also act with the same feelings and agree to a federal system of government after accepting the Turkish Cypriot community as an equal partner. In conclusion Mr Denktas said he was convinced that in cooperation with Turkey his community would solve its economic problems.

DENKTAS COMMENTS ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH GREEK CYPRIOTS

TA111841 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1830 GMT 11 Feb 80 TA

[Text] President Denktas has declared that when the intercommunal talks are resumed the Turkish Cypriot negotiator will represent his community and the Federated State in the north and the Greek Cypriot negotiator will represent his own community and the Greek Cypriot administration in the south. Replying to a statement by the Greek Cypriot deputy interior minister, Mr (Katsallis), the president said that there was no place under Turkish occupation, but there was a free Turkish area in the north liberated from the 11 years of Greek and Greek Cypriot occupation. He stressed that the Turkish Cypriot community liberated by Turkey had a partnership right in the independence and sovereignty of the Republic of Cyprus and that a legitimate government for the entire island could not be formed without the participation of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Mr Denktas said that if a legitimate Cyprus government was to be formed the two autonomous administrations in the island should come together to discuss the question of restoring the intercommunal partnership destroyed by Greek Cypriot armed force. He added that in the forthcoming negotiations, any Greek Cypriot proposal for the return of all refugees to their homes would be unacceptable because the refugee problem was solved by the population exchange between the two communities in 1975. President Denktas stated that with the return to Cyprus of thousands of former EOKA [National Organization of Cypriot Fighters] men who had taken refuge in Greece after the coup of 1974, and with their participation in Greek Cypriot left or right-wing underground organizations, the safeguarding of the security and borders of the Turkish Cypriot zone and the maintenance of order there had become a vital question which should be discussed at the talks. In conclusion Mr Denktas said that the Turkish Cypriots had put up resistance for 11 years in order not to be hostages at the hands of the Greek Cypriots and that the peace operation had been carried out to stop the Hellenization of the island and the extermination of the Turkish Cypriot community under Greek Cypriot plans put into force between 1963 and 1974.

He added that during today's press conference he will reply to all press questions.

Tomorrow [14 February] the Iranian foreign minister will visit Rome where he will meet his Italian counterpart and other government personalities. On Saturday he will meet the French foreign minister in Paris.

This is Qotbzadeh's first overseas visit since he took charge of the Iranian Foreign Ministry. European diplomats in Tehran said they consider this visit as a demonstration of a more positive position by Iran toward Europe under Bani-Sadr's presidency.

TO VIMA REPORTS ON ROGERS-GRATSIOS NATO MEETING

AT121500 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 12 Feb 80 pp 1, 6 AT

[By TO VIMA correspondent V.P. Mathiopoulos]

[Text] Brussels 11 February--Turkish inflexibility was revealed again today during the 3-hour meeting between General Gratsios and General Rogers which began at 0900 at the NATO military headquarters in Casteau, a suburb of Brussels.

Absolutely nothing was announced officially other than a completely academic communique which mentioned that the two military leaders had discussed "issues within their authority." However, according to an excellent NATO source, General Rogers mentioned his proposals to Gratsios for the tripartite division of the Aegean (confirming the relevant TO VIMA reports) and stressed that Ankara does not accept the Turkish operational zone for control of the Aegean as he had outlined it (covering the Turkish territorial waters and the coast of western Asia Minor).

(General Gratsios returned to Athens last evening and today will brief Prime Minister K. Karamanlis and National Defense Minister E. Averof on the talks he had with General Rogers during a meeting that will be held in the political office.)

The Turkish position is that the border which was--arbitrarily--defined with the well-known Turkish NOTAM 714 early in August 1974 should be implemented. As is well known, with this NOTAM Ankara drew a line which covers almost half the Aegean.

However, the Turkish side has informed the NATO military leadership that should its proposal be accepted it would not object to the supreme responsibility in the field of operational control being given to a third party, an American or any other NATO commander.

Obviously, this Turkish position constitutes an essential rejection of the Rogers proposals for the tripartite division of the Aegean and is an indirect counterproposal for the bizonal partition of the Aegean airspace between Greece and Turkey, regardless of whether there will be another, third party, military commander who will also control the other two zones.

It has also been learned that an effort by General Rogers during a previous stage to present proposals through a different formula that in substance would approach the first Haig plan--establishment of a Greek staff headquarters in Larisa--was immediately rejected by the Turkish side.

It has not been learned whether General Rogers asked to have the Greek views on the issue of the tripartite division of the Aegean. What has been confirmed, however, is that, despite the inflexibility Turkey is manifesting, General Rogers recently mentioned to NATO Secretary General Luns that he is optimistic that finally his proposals, even though amended, will be accepted by both sides.

A senior NATO diplomatic source reported to TO VIMA that, together with the military-technical negotiations for Greece's return to the NATO military wing, diplomatic initiatives will be made by a U.S. initiative, supported by London and Bonn. Specifically, the ambassadors of the principal Western NATO members in Athens and Ankara will begin a dialog with the two governments on the issue of Greece's return to the NATO military wing and the defusing of Greek-Turkish differences, and will convey friendly advice by their governments to Ankara and Athens. This measure was considered necessary in view of the critical situation that has been created in the Middle East in the wake of events in Iran and Afghanistan.

The ATHENS NEWS AGENCY reported from Brussels that after the meeting General Gratsios and his two staff officers went directly to the Brussels airport from Mons and departed for Athens.

In reply to questions by journalists at the airport, General Gratsios said that in view of his previous acquaintance with General Rogers the meeting had been cordial, that no new meeting had been fixed, and he referred to the terse joint communique which stated: "General Bernard Rogers, supreme military commander of allied forces in Europe, today met in SHAPE headquarters with General Gratsios, chief of the Greek Armed Forces. They discussed issues of mutual interest to Greece and the allied staff headquarters in Europe."

In addition, the ASSOCIATED PRESS reported from Brussels that General Rogers has proposed the establishment of a U.S. Air Force headquarters in Crete which will have operational control over the Aegean airspace between Greece and Turkey. The U.S. headquarters would control the zone which would serve as a neutral zone between the Turkish and the Greek headquarters which would control their relative zones.

(In Athens last night, the government stressed that the question of establishing a U.S. headquarters in Crete is without foundation.)

The TURKISH NEWS AGENCY reported from Ankara that former Defense Minister Isik asked the government not to accept the tripartite plan for the operational control of the Aegean proposed by General Rogers in exchange for strong economic aid to Turkey. The Aegean, Isik concluded, should be under the control of Greece and Turkey.

VOTCP ISSUES STATEMENT ON AFGHAN, DOMESTIC CRISIS

TA100916 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 10 Feb 80 TA

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Politburo statement issued on 10 February, 1980]

[Text] The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee Politburo met and discussed the international situation, the recent political developments in Turkey and the duties awaiting the party. The new development in the international situation is as follows: U.S. imperialism has intensified its efforts to bring back the cold war period. The NATO decision to deploy U.S. death missiles in Western Europe and efforts exerted by U.S. imperialism to establish new blocs of aggression in the Middle East are endangering peace and security in our region and the world and are increasing the danger of war. U.S. imperialism has intensified its anti-Soviet campaign since the Afghan revolution reached a new phase.

Plans of reactionaries and U.S. agents to restore the old system in the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan have been foiled through the decisive opposition of the revolutionary forces and the Leninist internationalist aid extended by the Soviet Union. The TCP greatly values the Soviet aid extended to the Afghan revolution. The Soviet Union and socialist countries are uninterruptedly continuing their efforts to strengthen peace and to eliminate tension. It is necessary to continue the peace campaign in full strength, to warn the masses against the threat of war, to recruit new forces to the struggle against anti-Sovietism, to weaken the effectiveness of imperialist propaganda and to strengthen mass solidarity with the Afghan revolution.

The economic, social and political crises in Turkey have reached a new phase. Power circles are moving toward a semimilitary regime of oppression.. Democratic mass organizations are being closed down. Democratic elements are being purged from the state mechanism and from the armed forces. Oppression of civil servants and teachers is continuing. State cadres are being flooded with reactionaries. Oppression of and pressure on the Kurdish people is increasing.

The political and military hegemony of U.S. imperialism and NATO over Turkey is being further strengthened. Turkey is being dragged into new aggressive military blocs. Turkey is being used as a tool for the adventures of imperialism in our region. The country's economy has further been compromised by imperialist monopolies, the Common Market and international financial organizations. The monopolies, which are the collaborators of imperialism, are strengthening their positions in the economy and within the state mechanism. The bourgeois parties, the Justice Party and the RPP administrations, are conciliating over curbing the democratic gains of the workers and the toilers and making Turkey dependent on imperialism. The criticism leveled by the RPP administration against the Demirel government, which is in favor of the United States, holding companies and martial law, carries no effective significance other than recreating false hopes. The burden of the economic crisis is mercilessly being placed on the shoulders of the toiling masses. With the recent devaluation [of the Turkish lira] and the price hikes, the living conditions of the masses have further deteriorated. Multitudes are being laid off and unemployment is frightening. There are forces in Turkey capable of struggling against the attacks of imperialism, the collaborationist monopolist bourgeoisie, the militarist clique and the pro-American Demirel government which favors holding companies and martial law. The resistance potential is increasing among the working class and the toiling masses. Mass actions are increasing and developing. The struggle of the working class is being strengthened.

The TCP Central Committee Politburo believes in the necessity of a unity of action among the largest of democratic forces in a bid to regress the increasing hegemony of imperialism and NATO to repel attacks directed against democratic gains and positions, the living conditions of toilers, peace and security. The party is struggling to develop further the steps recently taken toward a unity of action. The TCP Central Committee Politburo states that there is no way other than the nationwide resistance by the democratic masses, above all of the working class, to repel the increasing attacks of sovereign forces and to strengthen democratic positions. Communists are the vanguard strugglers in organizing and preparing such a resistance. The TCP Central Committee Politburo has stressed that the party's ideological, political, organizational and Leninist unity has been further strengthened. It has determined that organizational developments have reached a new phase throughout the nation. The TCP is entering its 60th year as a party waging a nationwide struggle.

[Signed] The TCP Central Committee Politburo 10 Feb 1980.

FINANCE MINISTER EXPLAINS NEW TAX BILL

TA121850 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1516 GMT 12 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 12 Feb (AA)--Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin announced that the minimum living allowance was being raised 12 times the current rate and above the current minimum wage level to 75,000 Turkish lira annually for the average taxpayer. Giving details of a new tax bill submitted to the Prime Minister's Office Tuesday, Sezgin noted no changes had been made in the tax laws for almost a decade now. Among higher exemptions to relieve the taxpayer of low or medium income, the minister listed the raising of the minimum living allowance, redistribution of the tax burden in income tax tables, higher exemptions for income from copyrights, capital stocks, landed property, agricultural profits and for inheritance tax. To meet the loss in public revenue due to the new tax benefits for the low income tax payer, Sezgin said other tax rates would be raised. The current motor vehicle tax, construction tax, stamp tax and duties and tax penalties would be multiplied by 5 or 10, he announced.

Concerning corporate taxes the production tax would be replaced by a tax on turnover, a first step toward tax on added value, the minister said. A sales tax would be levied only on services and earmarked for municipalities. The corporate income tax rate was being raised to 50 percent, but corporations would no longer be responsible for withholding tax, as an incentive to foreign investment. Certain exemptions would be allowed on profits reinvested or invested in underdeveloped regions. The method of "indexation" would be applied to protect the taxpayer against inflation. Withholding tax rates would be increased, the minister announced, and several taxes earmarked as revenue for municipalities and other local administration units.

SENATE APPROVES DRAFT BUDGET FOR 1980

TA121900 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 Feb 80 TA

[Excerpts] In today's Senate session, following the debates on the various articles of the draft budget, debate was held on the total budget. Speaking on behalf of the RPP, Istanbul Senator Besim Ustunel said that it was impossible to improve the economy by simply devaluing the lira and making subsequent price hikes. He alleged that with the recent economic decisions the government had created its own demise. He added: The RPP will responsibly carry out its opposition to prevent the Justice Party minority government from damaging democracy when leaving the government.

Expressing the views of the Senate National Unity Group, Senator Necip Atakli said that Turkey had begun 1980 with great difficulties as a result of the past, erroneous economic and financial policies. Pointing out that a great portion of the budget was allocated for current expenses, Atakli said that for this reason his group did not believe that the fight against inflation--which was the target both in the government program and in the budget--would succeed. Atakli also said that it was essential to take measures that would prevent inflation and tax injustices as soon as possible.

Speaking on behalf of the Justice Party, Afyon Senator Kazim Karaagaclioglu said that with this budget the government was coping with all the problems of the country according to their importance. He stressed that the budget had been prepared by considering the realities and that its target was to create stable conditions. He added: However, unless the supremacy of the state is established and anarchy destroyed, no problem can be solved, because these problems can only be solved in conditions of peace and tranquility. Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin then came to the rostrum and gave details about the new tax bill that was submitted to the Council of Ministers today. Then the 1980 fiscal draft budget was put to vote and was accepted by a vote of 95 to 66. The finance minister thanked the Senate. The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, 19 February. The National Assembly will begin to debate the draft budget at 1000 on Saturday, 16 February. The debates on the total budget will be carried live on television the same day.

NAP'S TURKES WANTS EARLY ELECTIONS IN SPRING '80

TA121914 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 12 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Nationalist Action Party [NAP] leader Alpaslan Turkes has said that his party believes it would be useful to hold the general elections in the spring of 1980. In a news conference held in parliament on the 31st anniversary of the NAP, Turkes said that a NAP government would feature a party which had nationalism and morality as its basic principles, which was founded on idealism and which wanted science and technology to develop in the country.

Turkes added that with the ideas it defended for years the NAP had proved that it was a strong party of ideology and doctrines. He said: These ideas--which were launched by the NAP and which are now respected by our intellectuals and political parties--can be implemented only by a cadre of idealistic intellectuals who will be assigned by the NAP to serve the country. Turkey is now going through the crisis of passing from an agricultural society to an industrial society. Its industry is dependent on foreign help. Its exports are insufficient. It must continuously obtain loans from outside. It suffers from the problems created by an unjust income distribution. Under these conditions, the Turkish nationalists want to help Turkey develop rapidly, to insure social justice, to insure our state's economic, cultural and political independence and to create a strong, industrialized, prosperous and great Turkey by establishing our country's indivisibility and our nation's unity and solidarity.

Replying to a question, Turkes said that the NAP's proposal to hold early elections was still valid. He added that it would be useful to hold the early elections this spring. Another reporter recalled that the Senate had raised the civil servants' wage coefficient to 25, and he asked Turkes what the NAP position would be in the National Assembly regarding the issue. Turkes said: The NAP, is always in favor of proposals that are to the benefit of the lower income groups.

INTERIOR MINISTRY OFFICIAL GOES TO IZMIR FOLLOWING INCIDENTS

TA121804 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1630 GMT 12 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Izmir, 12 Feb (AA)--Under Secretary of the Interior Ministry Durmus Yalcin, accompanied by the director general of security and the chief of the intelligence service of the gendarmerie, (flew to) Izmir from Ankara last night and met all morning with the governor, police chief and commander of the gendarmerie regiment in Izmir.

Coming out of the 10-hour meeting at the governor's office shortly after noon Tuesday, Yalcin said all would be done to ensure "the supremacy of law and safety of life and property" in the city. He declined to say what his plans were for the rest of the day.

Intermittent shootouts between security forces and armed groups protesting the dismissal of workers from plants operated by TARIS, the agricultural sales cooperatives union, continued through the night. Seven persons, including one wounded, were apprehended. Military troops patrolled to keep traffic flowing on the road to Cigli Airport, which goes by the TARIS cotton spinning mill seized by demonstrating workers 5 days ago. About 350 of the 500 demonstrators detained in Sunday's incidents have been released so far.

RPP Chairman for Izmir Sedat Akman condemned Monday's armed raid on the local JP building. "We are opposed to all armed action," he declared. Referring to a recent statement by the prime minister, the RPP officer commented: "No power can turn Turkey into an Afghanistan, Vietnam or Lebanon." He added that his party was examining the legal aspects of the TARIS incidents, and believed, despite assurances by TARIS management, that the announcements in a recent newspaper ad by the same management amounted to unlawful mass dismissal.

KREISKY COMMENTS ON OLYMPICS BOYCOTT, AFGHANISTAN

AU131245 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 13 Feb 80 p 2 AU

[Report on Chancellor Bruno Kreisky statements at a press conference following the 12 February Cabinet meeting in Vienna]

[Excerpts] [At a press conference in Vienna] yesterday Chancellor Kreisky emphatically warned against making political decisions on holding sports contests.

Kreisky expressed the view that decisions should always be carefully considered, and nothing should be said or done that could not be revoked with loss of prestige. This, he added, also goes for the big powers.

An Austrian position on the U.S. President's appeal to boycott the Moscow Olympics cannot be expected in the near future, Kreisky said. Austria will wait for the decisions of the International Olympic Committee, then discuss the issue with the domestic sports organizations, and afterwards it will give careful consideration to the outcome. He added that, incidentally, the government had no right to give any orders in this matter--it would only have the possibility of withdrawing its financial support.

The chancellor emphasized that these considerations have nothing whatsoever to do with the categorical rejection of the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan. Nothing can justify an invasion by foreign troops, not even the fact that a paracommunist system had already existed in Afghanistan, he said.

ROMANIA'S ANDREI CONTINUES TALKS WITH GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Meeting With Trade Minister

AU131520 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 13 Feb 80 p 2 AU

[Unatrributed report on third day of Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei's visit to Austria]

[Excerpt] Yesterday [12 February] Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei's program continued with a talk with trade Minister Staribacher. During their exchange of opinions the ministers reached agreement on the need to continue to expand bilateral trade, and intensified cooperation regarding projects in the third markets was mentioned as a promising possibility.

Minister Staribacher then broached the subject of the international raw materials situation and its effects on the two countries' industries. The two ministers arrived at a far-reaching consensus.

Possibilities of expanding bilateral trade are to be discussed next week between high-ranking Romanian officials, who will come to Vienna, Austrian Trade Ministry functionaries, and representatives of interested Austrian firms. Late in the afternoon, the guest proceeded to Innsbruck by railroad.

CSCE Proposal

AU131530 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 13 Feb 80 p 1 AU

[Peter Martos report: Romania Proposes in Vienna a Timetable for Madrid CSCE"]

[Excerpt] Vienna--A strong impetus for the continuation of the process of detente might emanate from the visit of Romanian Foreign Minister Andrei. On Tuesday [12 February] the guest from Bucharest suggested the following timetable for the Madrid CSCE followup conference scheduled for the fall: opening if possible on the foreign minister's level, and subsequent adjournment until February 1981. Thus a quarrel over detente directly before the U.S. presidential elections at least would be avoided. In an interview with DIE PRESSE, Foreign Minister Pahr called this intiative an "interesting variant" but refused to commit himself as to whether Austria would become active in that direction. However, he said, it is neocessary to "obtain maximum results from Madrid."

There was far-reaching agreement between the two ministers regarding the world situation. Romania and Austria reject any interference in the internal affairs of other countries and the violation of their territorial integrity.

Without directly naming them, Andrei indirectly criticized both superpowers: The smaller and medium-sized states have the task of foiling a policy "of force, of interference and of hegemonism," he said.

As Pahr told DIE PRESSE, the talks between the ministers have given new rise to hopes for the solving of humanitarian problems. In the sphere of family reunification, Andrei promised a positive treatment of the cases brought to his attention by the Austrian side--Pahr: "I stressed that we do not want to interfere in internal affairs." On the other hand, Austria has shown understanding for Romania's intention to slow down emigration.

As Foreign Minister Pahr had stressed as early as Monday evening at a dinner for Andrei, both sides intend to make intensified efforts to promote cultural exchange and tourist travel. Following a talks between Andrei and Trade Minister Staribacher, closer cooperation seems to be in the offing. A civil servants delegation from Bucharest will negotiate specific projects in Vienna as of next Monday, including a cooperation project in China.

Andrei, who on Tuesday visited the Vienna "UN City" buildings, proceeded by train to Innsbruck in the afternoon. He will also visit Bregenz before leaving Austria for Liechtenstein on Thursday.

BRIEFS

CHINESE VISITORS--A delegation of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, headed by Vice Chairman Chen Yu, is currently in Austria on a study trip. On 11 January the delegation visited Anton Benya, chairman of the Austrian Trade Union Federation. "Chen Yu pointed out that the 52 million member All-China Federation of Trade Unions was virtually paralyzed for a decade and has been able to develop again only since the ninth congress in 1978. The delegation chief mentioned China's huge coal reserves and the fact that only 2.5 percent of the country's hydropower reserves are being utilized so far. Owing to the growing demand, he said, there is a certain shortage of electric power." [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 12 Feb 80 p 2 AU]

WILLY BRANDT EXPOUNDS NORTH-SOUTH COMMISSION REPORT

DW130803 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1730 GMT 12 Feb 80 DW

[Excerpts from correspondent Wiesner interview with Willy Brandt, chairman of the North-South Commission, on the report of the North-South Commission--recorded in New York]

[Text] [Question] You have provided the report with the subtitle: "Program for Survival." What short-term answers do you have to that problem?

[Answer] To begin with, let me explain the concept of survival. We proceed from the premise that the existence of mankind is threatened not only by conflict between the superpowers and the arms race but also by world famine. This is why we are endeavoring to state for the next several years how to increase the funds that are required to help the poorest countries overcome hunger, how to achieve an understanding with the oil countries so that supply will be insured, price development will be predictable, and the oil countries will be involved as well--meaning that their prices, which have increased considerably, can be put to fruitful use for international cooperation. The question is: How can we reform international institutions quickly enough, and how can we increase the funds required--I have already mentioned the oil countries--or how can they be rechannelled so that public development assistance will benefit the very poor countries more, if not exclusively? How can the threshold countries, meaning the countries which already have achieved some industrialization, in some instances to a considerable degree, be helped to obtain their funds from the capital market under conditions which would be relatively favorable to them?

[Question] Reducing this to a simple formula: Does the relationship between the poor states of the South and the wealthy states of the North suffer from the fact that the developing countries are demanding more than the industrial states are willing to give or are capable of giving? Have you made any progress in this question in your report?

[Answer] This, after all, is not a new discovery. If we recall the period prior to World War I and visualize the relations between labor, which was largely devoid of any rights at the time, and those who governed the economy, we did have in our own societies a problem similar to that which faces us in the world today. We had a nearly insurmountable antagonism; and from the viewpoint of those who had control of the economy, the workers demanded far too much. But one day, at any rate in some societies, people learned that it is also advantageous for, and in the interest of, those operating the economy and profiting from it not to let the others remain in a state of disadvantage. This means that the increasing standard of living of the broad strata has benefitted all parties involved, including industry, the economy, and the owners of capital. Transposed to the conditions of today, this means that a speedier development of those still lagging far behind will also be in the interest of those in the Western countries. Our own jobs tomorrow and the day after will depend largely on the speedier progress of the developing countries and the opening of new markets.

[Question] How does the obviously intensifying confrontation between East and West influence the efforts to solve the problems between the rich and poor states?

[Answer] At the moment it has become nearly hopeless again. The crisis which has emerged, first over Iran and then over Afghanistan, makes it appear nearly hopeless to get the leading powers in East and West together to discuss development policy.

However, looking beyond the next several months, perhaps the next few years, we realize that either the world, mankind will end up in a disastrous crisis or negotiations will be held not only on ways to limit arms but also on ways to insure in the Third World that hotbeds of crisis will be defused, that the supply of energy and raw materials will continue safely, and that world trade can develop under somewhat equal conditions.

Cabinet Discusses Report

LD131558 Hamburg DPA in German 1452 GMT 13 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--In the Federal Government's view, small informal meetings of heads of state and government from various regional groupings could help relax the often rigid fronts in the North-South dialog. Government spokesman Klaus Beolling said that this view was taken by the Federal Cabinet today when it considered the report of the international North-South Commission, which was submitted yesterday by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt to UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim. He said the cabinet would discuss details of the report this spring and draw the necessary conclusions.

Rainer Offergeld, federal minister of economic cooperation, briefed the cabinet on the report and, according to Boelling, pointed out that the Federal Government through its development and policy was already implementing some two-thirds of the proposals made in the report. The report advanced a number of suggestions worth consideration. It also contained suggestions which would be hard to implement, if at all. One of them, Boelling told a questioner, was the demand to allot 0.7 percent of the gross national product to development aid by 1985.

Boelling said the Federal Government supported the view, expressed in the report, that overcoming poverty and starvation was a prerequisite for preserving world peace. It also endorsed the proposition that all groups of countries must contribute to harmonizing interests between North and South. Priority should go to supporting the poorest countries promoting agricultural development and utilizing and opening up new energy sources in developing countries.

SPD'S BAHR PRAISES U.S. FOR COMMONSENSE IN HOSTAGE AFFAIR

DW131055 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2000 GMT 12 Feb 80 DW

[Excerpts from Winfried Scharlau interview with SPD Federal Manager Egon Bahr--live via direct line between Hamburg and Bonn]

[Text] [Question] There was talk about a division of labor in the alliance, including the point that possibly Bundeswehr units might have to stand by for missions in the Gulf. What is your opinion?

[Answer] This is adventurous, I think, for the mission of the Bundeswehr has been clearly defined, and those toying with the idea that the Bundeswehr or perhaps German soliders should, could, or ought to go into action in the Gulf never have advanced the argument that the Bundeswehr should get involved in Berlin. They knew perfectly well why they did not do that.

[Question] You mean to say that you think the idea is unrealistic and dangerous?

[Answer] I consider this idea dangerous and unrealistic. I believe that looking at Berlin will make something else clear. What becomes clear is the fact that the role of a superpower, a great power, cannot be assumed by anyone else. We do have a division of tasks in Berlin.

We know that the troops of the three powers there cannot be replaced by the Bundeswehr and that the Federal Republic of Germany is looking after the vital interests which it has in and for Berlin, not through any military involvement but through economic, cultural, and other ties and connections.

[Question] Will East-West relations ever be what they were before Afghanistan?

[Answer] I hope this will happen. The situation that existed prior to the massive intervention of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan must be restored. Then, I hope, the world will return to commonsense, that is to say, it will return to the realization that there is no alternative to detente policy lest all of us find ourselves looking into an abyss.

[Question] At a news conference today, following talks with a Yugoslav delegation, you voiced the apprehension that the United States, in the course of the crisis in the Middle East, might take steps which would be hard or impossible to correct. Is this not a clear criticism of the United States and President Carter?

[Answer] I have great sympathy, for the United States, as reflected by the reaction of its people, is hurt by the lack of any option to help 50 of its compatriots--the hostages in Tehran. I feel the United States has acted sensibly in this situation; and I think, besides, that the United States, as our ally, deserves forbearance. You do show forbearance for a friend when he is in a difficult situation. I have drawn attention to the fact that the United States showed a lot of commonsense when it retracted its economic blockade against Iran; this means that the United States has corrected one measure. I really have no doubt that it will act no less reasonably when it is necessary to induce the Soviet Union to do what it has announced: namely, withdraw.

[Question] The word "containment" is in use again. What does this mean? Is the Soviet Union supposed to be contained, or is this containment to apply to an American overreaction?

[Answer] No. What is to be contained is a reach by the Soviet Union into regions in which it so far has had no decisive military influence. This means that if we talk of detente we must say that this will work only with a balance of forces, militarily as well as regionally. No doubt the Soviet Union has changed the balance in the Middle East with its invasion of Afghanistan, and this balance must be restored so that detente will be feasible there.

[Question] But you do not want the word "containment" applied to the American reaction?

[Answer] No. The Americans react the way they see fit. I believe the European view of the matter was phrased ingeniously in the Paris statement, and there is not the least cause for criticism.

[Question] The TASS correspondent in Bonn wrote that it is necessary to decide between the continuation of detente and solidarity with the United States. Does this not violate, or even destroy, the bases of detente policy?

[Answer] I believe that detente policy is based on balance. This means that we and the Americans form one party, which means in turn that detente policy can be continued only if nobody, not even the Soviet Union, calls the solidarity of the alliance into question.

[Question] Do you believe we will be able to participate in the Olympic games if the Americans do not?

[Answer] I believe the Olympic issue is being overrated at the moment. I think it is appropriate for us to gain time, because gaining time means, among other things, establishing a situation, or restoring a situation, in which it will be possible to hold the Olympic games in Moscow, with the participation of us and all others.

PRESS DISCUSSES GIEREK'S EUROPEAN DISARMAMENT PROPOSAL

DW130951 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 13 Feb 80 DW

[Press review of PZPR First Secretary Gierek's proposal to hold a European disarmament conference]

[Excerpts] RHEINISCHE POST of Duesseldorf writes: The speech given by Polish Communist Party chief Gierek at the Warsaw party congress was remarkable. He repeatedly stressed solidarity with the USSR. What else could he do? But he did not utter one word of approval with regard to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The actual sensation of the speech was that he suggested a European disarmament conference in Warsaw without prerequisites, as if there were no NATO decision to close the arms gap, as if Moscow had not brusquely rejected the West's readiness to negotiate. Thus a signal has come from Poland. RHEINISCHE POST goes on to say that it could not be ignored that Poland is more interested than any other East bloc state in continuing the policy of detente. It accords with the sincere demands of the people and the sad economic situation, which is reflected, among other things, in the following figure: Poland's debt in the West has increased to DM32 billion. The supply situation is tight. If the country got fully involved in the waging of cold war, the economic crisis could easily turn into a catastrophe.

The daily DIE WELT points out: Following the Soviet Union, Poland is the second-largest country in the East bloc. It is a country that stresses its European traditions and that actually, because of its importance, ought to play an independent role on this continent, regardless of ideology. If Gierek suggests the Polish capital as a place to hold a European disarmament conference, the following question arises: On what ideological and political ground should such a conference take place, considering that it is the pet idea of Leonid Brezhnev? Host Gierek, who is asking all of Europe to sit at his table--and who possibly wants to rule out the United States for not being a European country--in the same breath proclaimed the full support of the Polish communist regime for all progressive forces in Angola, Ethiopia, Mozambique and South Yemen.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU notes: The fact that the Russians gave priority to the Poles with regard to this suggestion, which undoubtedly has their blessing, demonstrates some intuition. Since the days of former Foreign Minister Rapacki, the country has achieved a reputation with its disarmament efforts. So the West should be rather inclined to listen to initiatives coming from Poland. The fact that the conference also is supposed to be included in the CSCE process, the continuation in Madrid of the results of the Helsinki conference, probably is designed to disprove the suspicion from the very beginning that the East bloc with this plan merely wants to create discord between Western Europe and the United States, for a Warsaw disarmament conference agreed on in Madrid would automatically include the United States and Canada.

The editorial of the Ludwigshafen RHEINPFALZ says in part: So the Polish party boss, Edward Gierek, comes out with the proposal to convene a European disarmament conference in Warsaw and calls the CSCE followup conference in Madrid a suitable forum for adopting a relevent decision. A straw in the continuing and aggravating crisis--still, one reaches for it. Hans-Dietrich Genscher advocates the view that this proposal should be examined in earnest.

Yet, Gierek's proposal was barely 20 hours old when he was called to order by Moscow. Kremlin ideologist Suslov did not devote a single word to Gierek's golden words yesterday at the Eighth PZPR Congress, but he justified aid to Afghanistan and called on the socialist camp to demonstrate strict cohesion. This was bound to dampen the Bonn coalition's response to the promising tones from Warsaw the day before.

KIELER NACHRICHTEN arrives at the following conclusion: There are many indications that the Soviet leadership, with the proposal advanced by Gierek, has launched a diversion tactic with the motto: Whoever advocates a comprehensive disarmament conference indeed cannot be a mad aggressor. Well, it is generally known that the facts tell a different story. Yet, the Soviet offer should not be simply swept off the table. It might provide a chance to put the squeeze on the Soviets for concrete talks. Obviously the Kremlin desires a propaganda forum to show themselves off as friends of peace. Why should the West not use just such a forum to make it clear to the world's public what Moscow's love of peace is really like? This may well be a preliminary stage on the road to real disarmament negotiations. No doubt all sides are interested in the latter.

SCHMIDT CRITICIZES U.S. FOR 'UNILATERAL ACTIONS'

LD141428 Hamburg DPA in German 1332 GMT 14 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, in view of the present world political crisis, has stressed his firm stand for a policy of circumspection and at the same time criticized unilateral U.S. actions. In a speech he made to the SPD Bundestag group on Tuesday--which was not for publication and whose contents became known in Bonn only today--the chancellor said that "circumspect and calm actions now have priority."

In his--as Schmidt called it--"confession," the chancellor criticized the U.S. lack of readiness to reach agreement with the Western allies at the right time, and described Washington's current foreign policy as virtually unpredictable. Schmidt emphasized that in his political actions he was, "if need be, thinking second about the effect on the voters." He was glad to see that, following the latest public opinion poll, the majority of voters did not follow those who "succumbed to fear." Fear, he said, is a bad adviser. In the current situation nothing must be done to worsen it.

In an interview with Belgian television tonight, the chancellor emphatically advocated continuing the process of detente. He said, however, that the most important prerequisite and necessity for this was the balance of military strength. This balance must be reestablished constantly, and it could be safeguarded best if arming were limited on both sides.

Alluding to the differing reactions to the Afghanistan crisis within the Atlantic alliance, he said: "The fact that accents and nuances are different in various states of the West lies in the nature of their differing political traditions and differing histories. It is also based on the size of the state concerned. Small states are, as a rule, somewhat more careful than very large ones." Asked about a "third European road," Schmidt said this was "erroneous."

Schmidt is having talks with the Belgian Government in Brussels today and tomorrow. The interview was prereleased to DPA by the Belgian Embassy in Bonn.

SOVIET ENVOY LEAVES AFTER BEING ACCUSED OF SPYING

LD132200 Paris Domestic Service in French 2100 GMT 13 Feb 80 LD

[Text] It has just been learned that last Saturday, in Marseilles, a Soviet diplomat with the grade of consul was found to be in possession of documents concerning national defense. After being interrogated, the diplomat left France on Sunday without waiting to be expelled. Here is a report by (Philippe Real) from Marseilles:

The Soviet Consulate in Marseilles has lost one of its most influential members. Mr Travkov held the post of consul in Marseilles, but he left hurriedly on Sunday morning for Moscow. One should say that the day before he was challenged by Territorial Defense Security [DSI] officials and found to be carrying important documents concerning the national defense. Two Frenchmen are said to have been arrested in the wake of this affair, but this was denied this evening by the regional prefecture. What documents were involved?

Officially this is a secret, but it is believed that Mr Travkov was arrested between Toulon and Marseilles, and in Toulon there is the French Mediterranean fleet. Our aircraft carriers have just received on board tactical nuclear armament--Super-Etendard fighter-bombers.

It is certain that such concentrations attract spies, but fortunately the DST is on the alert.

FRG'S STRAUSS REPORTS ON TALKS IN PARIS

DW131132 Hamburg ARD Television Service in German 2130 GMT 12 Feb 80 DW

[Ulrich Wickert interview with Franz-Josef Strauss, Bavarian Minister-President and CDU/CSU candidate for chancellor, in Paris; recorded]

[Text] [Question] You have told the French that if you become German chancellor, German-French cooperation would have to grow even closer. On the other hand, however, you advocate strong solidarity with the United States. Is this not contradictory?

[Answer] If you were right, then this would mean that France and the United States are facing each other as enemies or adversaries. This indeed would be an erroneous assessment of the emphases.

[Question] But did the past week not show that different political concepts prevail?

[Answer] Surely there are different political concepts. These political concepts cannot, however, induce us to operate with the Americans against the French or with the French against the Americans. We would rather advocate our own view. It is a fact, of course, that in questions of global political significance we are primarily dependent on the Americans on Berlin and in the questions concerning our security, as long as there is no mapped-out European stance with a clearcut division of tasks and with a strong, express representation of that stance.

[Question] In the context of one German-French statement last week, namely in connection with the occupation of Afghanistan, you said that this statement contains something foolish. Have you succeeded in convincing your French interlocutors that some of it was foolish?

[Answer] I have made one passage of this statement the subject of my criticism. I welcome the avowal of German-French cooperation, Atlantic solidarity, alliance loyalty toward the United States of America, the condemnation of the invasion of Afghanistan, the demand for the pullout of the Russian troops. But this sole passage--which in part elicited highly ironic comment all over the world--namely that detente will not survive the next Soviet strike, was not the ultima ratio or the last resort.

[Question] But did you succeed in convincing your French interlocutors?

[Answer] I did not especially refer to this passage. Nor can I retract my criticism there. After all, I am a free German politician who need not kowtow to the Americans, to Bonn, or to anybody else.

[Question] All I want to know is whether the French realized this.

[Answer] We never quote each other. This is a rule which goes without saying, if I may put it this way.

[Question] Did the talks confirm or change your criticism of the Federal Government's policy?

[Answer] I surely cannot say that I have any reason to mitigate that criticism.

PRESS VIEWS FRANCO-GERMAN SUMMIT STATEMENT

LE FIGARO Commentary

LD121513 Paris LE FIGARO in French 6 Feb 80 pp 1, 3 LD

[Serge Maffert commentary: "Warning Shot?"]

[Text] France and Germany have given the Soviet Union an extremely stern warning. Their severity was more explicit and reasoned than in the previous stances taken by the two countries, especially France.

This is clear from the declration issued by Mr Giscard d'Estaing and Mr Schmidt in Paris yesterday--a declaration expressed in terms which are much more negative with regard to the USSR and restrictive with regard to detente and East-West dialog than recent statements by the president of the republic and the chancellor would have suggested.

The element of surprise does not lie in an explicit and categorical reference to the Atlantic alliance and the pledges it implies nor in the connection which the two powers seem to make between the withdrawal of the Soviet forces from Afghanistan and the future of detente. It lies in the energetic delegation of any specifically European action to promote dialog with Moscow. The only reference to Europe's "special responsibilities" is immediately qualified by a reference to cooperation with the allies (the Atlantic alliance).

So, underlying the words, is there a change in the fundamental positions of the two states, especially France, which originally seemed to prefer dialog to a response? Furthermore, is France alining with Germany as many observers feel able to maintain? In competent circles in Paris and even in the president's entourage both these assertions are disputed, and, furthermore, the explanations given by Mr Giscard d'Estaing yesterday afternoon provide a different slant on and interpretation of the Franco-German declaration. [paragraph continues]

But how can politicians, diplomats and even the public be prevented from adhering to the letter of a text which looks like a strong curb on Soviet action and in which the other side of the coin is barely distinguishable?

Indeed the real French and German stances are much more open to dialog with the USSR and to detente than is apparent in the declaration.

These positions can be summed up in two words: peace and security.

Peace means safeguarding the achievements of 10 years of detente and East-West contacts.

Security means first, curbing Soviet excesses and second, Atlantic solidarity and consultation.

France' position since the beginning of the Afghan affair, which has probably been poorly explained, seemed for a long time to amount to a refusal to break with the USSR and a desire to maintain the Olympic games. The rest, we are assured, went without saying and was implicit, but it is annoying that a detailed exposition of French policy (the joint declration includes almost the whole French plan put forward before the summit) should look like an innovation.

Let us point out once again that at first glance the Franco-German declaration gives the impression of preferring a warning shot to dialog. This has led Mr Giscard d'Estaing, in his personal comments, to stress dialog and assert that the joint document does not reflect a tougher line but expresses the continuity of a policy.

Indeed it does seem that France, and Germany too, in no way wished to break off, political dialog with Moscow. Mr Giscard d'Estaing stressed that publicly yesterday. The first objective will be to define ways of effecting a withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. However, dialog could be extended to cover all security problems, especially those concerning Europe. Paris does not regard withdrawal from Afghanistan as a "precondition" for talks but, as the joint declration stresses, the "success" of the discussions will depend on this withdrawal. It remains to be seen if, when and how the USSR will take this helping hand.

Chancellor Schmidt's position is more delicate owing to the election campaign which has already started in the FRG and the recent stance taken by his Christian Democratic Union rival Mr Strauss (who has blatantly changed sides). Indeed the present German leaders are determined--while giving as much consideration as possible to their fundamental need for the U.S. umbrella--to go as far as possible to preserve the ostpolitik detente which has benefited Germany a great deal. In doing this Mr Schmidt is supported by the German employers, who have maintained close contacts with the Soviets since the Afghan crisis. German industry and finance have vast interests tied up in the USSR and do not seem prepared to sacrifice them.

This leaves the question that is possibly most important for France and much less important for Germany. Mr Giscard d'Estaing yesterday reaffirmed his intention to do nothing which might strengthen the blocs and in any case not to implicate France in one of the two blocs. Amid the "two great voices" which have been heard until now (that of the United States and the USSR) the president of the republic hopes to make the voice of the European countries heard--the countries which suffered directly in the two great world wars and which have a special responsibility for peace on their continent.

This view has never aroused the FRG's enthusiasm. This has been clear since De Gaulle and the 1963 treaty. Germany wants to play its own game and not do anything which might make the Americans feel it is moving away from Washington, but at the same time it is determined to pursue, with a minimum of fuss and publicity, an ostpolitik which is primarily of benefit to German interests.

This gap between France and Germany will probably never be bridged.

L'AURORE Praise

LD110903 Paris L'AURORE in French 6 Feb 80 pp 1, 6 LD

[Jacques Guilleme-Brulon article: "A Message Worthy of Europe"]

[Excerpts] The joint Franco-German statement which was published in Paris yesterday at the end of 3-day discussions seems, after all, comforting.

It is clear that both the West German chancellor and the French president have made an effort to reconcile viewpoints which even though certainly not divergent were sufficiently far apart to make difficult the preparation of a document reconciling the conclusions of, for all that, complementary analyses.

It is especially fitting to praise the plain style of a document displaying none of the intellectual "contortion" only too often favored by diplomats confronted with unpleasant realities.

This time we have immediately been taken to the heart of the matter, without any embellishments.

Soviet intervention has again been assessed as unacceptable, but any resumption of detente no longer appears a foregone conclusion as it did only a few days ago.

Only the withdrawal of Red Army forces from Afghan territory could insure "successful discussions on which security and the future of peace depend."

This means that we are reverting to the logical and natural principle of the global nature of detente.

In short, this is a document of the highest standard in which dignity and awareness of our responsibilities compete with a balanced vision of the international situation as a whole.

A document in which note has been taken of the tragedy into which we could well be plunged some day but which proffers a hand to Mr Jimmy Carter, while warning Leonid Brezhnev that he will no longer be able to count on any possibility of dissension among allies in which he seemed too eager to believe.

A document which--we must admit--we in the end believed no longer possible and which by virtue of its conciseness, its compactness and the doors it opens and shuts has restored to Europe both its credibility and, quite naturally, the role which it should never have ceased playing in the international sphere.

We hope that the message will be beneficial to Washington and to Moscow; that we, West Germans and French, will not forget that this is our work; and that its value will fully depend on our scrupulous adherence to it.

LE MONDE BACKS REJECTION OF EURO-AMERICAN SUMMIT

LD111615 Paris LE MONDE in French 10-11 Feb 80 p 1 LD

[Editorial: "Sensationalist Diplomacy"]

[Text] Has France's refusal to take part in a Euro-American conference in Bonn on East-West relations in general and sanctions against the USSR following the "Kabul coup" in particular, brought us back to the Franco-American cold war? Have we returned to the days in which General De Gaulle sent back Roosevelt's invitation for a meeting in Algiers or in which Mr Jobert refused to bend to Mr Kissinger's orders? Probably not, because neither Paris nor Washington is now taking an inflexible line.

The Americans admit that blunders have been made in this affair. Rumors had been circulating for several days about a meeting between the U.S. secretary of state and his main European colleagues without France having given its agreement. The date and place were clearly announced to force France's hand. Moreover, Mr Vance's tactics were a little crude: By going to Bonn first the U.S. secretary wanted to bring the FRG into line; after which, backed by a British minister already won over and an Italian minister who would not make trouble, he would place France in the dock. If Washington thinks that France is the obstacle to a joint Western policy, would Mr Vance not have done better to begin his trip in Paris in order to reach agreement with France?

The annoyance, to put it mildly, and disappointment in U.S. public and political circles are nonetheless real, especially after the satisfaction aroused by the Giscard d'Estaing-Schmidt declaration and the protestations of fidelity to the Atlantic alliance.

The Americans find it difficult to believe that the Europeans, who are even more concerned than they are for the security of oil supply routes, are not all embracing the "Carter Doctrine" for the defense of the Gulf and are showing reluctance to take economic sanctions against the USSR. The Bonn meeting affair, in their view, heralds a dangerous split, at least on the psychological level.

In any case it would be a mistake on their part to reduce the French refusal to a question of pride. The uncertainties and untimely changes in U.S. diplomacy are well known. Have people forgotten how Foster Dulles slammed the door in An-Nasir's face after cajoling him without worrying about the consequences for the Europeans? What would be the consequences now of a sudden renunciation--however explicable--by the United States of sanctions against Iran if the Europeans had followed them in this respect?

The main thing in question once again is sensationalist diplomacy. What is the sense of these continual meetings and repeated summits if not to set attitudes (which, in the present case, would have consisted of isolating the French) when the aim is to define a policy? That is what diplomats are for, and they have the advantage that they can always be contradicted.

That leaves the fundamental problem: On the one hand how to help the Afghans rid themselves of an occupier, and it would be better not to advertise the means used; on the other hand, as Mr Couve de Murville rightly recalled, how to restore the balance of forces between East and West by SALT-type negotiations, if the USSR is prepared to join such negotiations, and by rearmament if it is not. No improvised conference in Bonn or elsewhere will change that.

EANES SPEECH OUTLINES FOREIGN POLICY, CHIDES NATO

LD131445 Lisbon in Portuguese to Angola, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe 1200 GMT 13 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The need for unity in Europe's foreign policy, a wager on detente and some criticism of NATO's sluggishness were manifest in the speech which President Ramalho Eanes delivered last night at a dinner for the [outgoing] chairman of NATO's military committee, Gen Zeiner Gundersen.

Both Europe and its NATO allies could have conveyed an image of incapacity, nurturing the expansionist designs and the possibility of perturbing those who know how to exploit power vacuums, Ramalho Eanes declared.

After addressing words of appreciation to his guest, the president of the Portuguese Republic reviewed the current crisis in international relations, reaffirming his country's position in the alliance by saying that the guiding principles of Portugal's position in the framework of its incorporation into Europe and NATO are not liable to be called in question. No one is unfamiliar with them, nor should they serve as a pretext for any changes in domestic policy that might nourish doubts in the minds of our allies about the reasons and interests justifying Portugal's position.

There is no doubt that in his speech Ramalho Eanes defined the broad outlines of foreign policy and international relations, criticizing both NATO's sluggishness in updating its current strategy and the stands of his own country's government in foreign relations after the Iranian and Afghan crises. The president of the republic said he felt it necessary to make such observations at a time when due to the effects of grave and very disquieting events, a wave of revisionism in foreign policy is sweeping across a number of countries.

On events in Iran and Afghanistan, Ramalho Eanes pointed out that the Soviet Union's military audacity will have to be analyzed with the full knowledge that NATO has remained too long confined to a pattern it set in its beginning. He emphasized the need to find effective unity in Europe's foreign policy.

At the end of the dinner, in Fort Sao Joao da Barra, Eanes decorated Gen Zeiner Gundersen with the insignias of Grand Cross of the Order of Prince Henry the Navigator, which, he said, were awarded to General Gundersen in the name of the Portuguese people and as a token of appreciation of the Portuguese Armed Forces.

EL PAIS EMPHASIZES NECESSITY FOR MADRID CSCE MEETING

LD111421 [Editorial Report LD] Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 7 February 1980 publishes on page 7 an editorial warning of the potential threats to the holding of the Madrid CSCE conference and urging action to insure that it takes place.

After pointing out that the issue of the conference is far more important than that of the Olympic games, it adds: "The most elementary commonsense shows that international negotiations on the prospects for peace are more necessary precisely when peace itself is threatened."

It asserts: "Europe's interest in this conference is in fact to prevent the topics of coexistence and detente becoming a dialog between the two big powers, with a visible surface but also with another large invisible area which could develop without the other powers' knowledge. It is not in Europe's interest to mount the horse of the 'cold war,' which the United States could later curb as the fancy takes it, when the harm on this continent--so damaged in its economy and so impaired in its social relations--was already irreparable."

After stressing the role which Spain could play at the conference, EL PAIS continues: "The idea that the conference in itself and the mere fact of engaging in dialog with the USSR--as the fanatical Solzhenitsyn said about Helsinki--is a means of insuring the USSR's domination over Europe, is simply aberrant. It cannot derive from any rational critical judgement. The fact that nations--such as Romania--which wish to escape Soviet hegemony were its principal advocates and that these governments continue to demand the continuation of the conference indicates, rather, the contrary."

It later maintains: "Spain is in no position to change substantially the correlation of forces worldwide through its leaders' boldness and intelligence. However, it can and should contribute its might, as far as its strength and means allow, to the crucial tasks of contributing to detente, promoting the cause of peace and averting the apocolyptic holocaust of the third and final world war."

EL PAIS concludes that "the holding of the Madrid conference should become the central aim of our diplomatic strategy."

GOVERNMENT 'DISAPPOINTED' BY IOC;;WILL CONTINUE CONSULTATIONS

LD131416 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1343 GMT 13 Feb 80 LD

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] The government is persisting with its campaign to have the Olympic games switched from Moscow--and will consult "a growing number of countries" which share this view.

This emerged in a Foreign Office statement today expressing disappointment at the International Olympic Committee's [IOC] decision to go ahead with the games in Moscow.

The statement said that not moving the games from Moscow "would appear to condone Soviet aggression in Afghanistan and allow the Soviet Union a propaganda victory."

The consultations with other countries will include the Common Market ministerial meeting in Rome on February 19, which Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington will attend.

After this the government will "convey their views to the British Olympic Association who are due to meet on March 4."

The Foreign Office was not prepared to comment on suggestions that an alternative games should be held in the United States.

The statement said:

"The decision by the International Olympic Committee to proceed with the Olympic games in Moscow this summer has been noted. The government are disappointed that the IOC came to this decision.

"They remain of the view that it would be preferable to move from Moscow. Any other course would appear to condone Soviet aggression in Afghanistan and allow the Soviet Union a propaganda victory.

"The government will continue to consult with the growing number of countries which share this view and will consider with them what options are open to us following the decision.

"This consultation will naturally include the European Community ministerial meeting to be held in Rome on February 19.

"After these consultations and having made a careful study of all the possibilities, the government will convey their views to the British Olympic Association who are due to meet on March 4."

POLITICAL FIGURES VIEW INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENTS, CYPRUS

AT131630 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 13 Feb 80 p 3 AT

['Discussions' by TO VIMA correspondent M.N. Raptis with Cypriot leading personalities Archbishop Khrisostomos, Glavkos Kliriohis, Vasos Lissaridhis and Ezekias Papaioannou, on "The Effect of International Developments on the Cyprus Issue." Discussions held in 'February']

[Excerpts] Nicosia, February--The discussions I had led to one conclusion: Everyone agreed that the latest international developments following the Afghanistan events, the intensifying U.S.-USSR antagonism, and the new "cold war" into which we have entered, will have an effect on the Cyprus problem. This is because of two basic reasons: the interest of both the Americans and the Russians in Turkey which is once again growing and, as a result, the price for possible Turkish concessions which is also increasing. At the same time, however, the strategic importance of Cyprus is also increasing. Under today's historic conditions Cyprus ought to be the home of Ares instead of the home of Aphrodite and her cult.

This conclusion, according to His Beatitude Khrisostomos, could have both adverse but also possible favorable repercussions upon the Cyprus issue. The United States and the West now have an interest and need to solve certain problems which weaken their common front against the Russians. The Cyprus issue is most certainly one of these problems. His Beatitude also stressed that Turkey also needs the economic and military aid of the West, perhaps more than the West needs Turkey. There is, consequently, the possibility that Turkey may give in to some favorable development of the Cyprus issue. If, however, this does not provide a "just and proper" solution to this problem then the current impasse will be continued.

Such an eventuality is also considered likely by Glavkos Kliridhis who, as he says, wants to see things realistically without distortions created by the well intentioned but in his opinion fruitless efforts to internationalize the issue and have it solved through sterile discussions at international organizations. Kliridhis attributes little moral value to repeated resolutions by international organizations and conferences as well as to the effectiveness of the "long struggle" of the Cypriots and its ability to bend resistence by the great all by itself. The timeliness of the Cyprus issue has been overshadowed by the dimensions of the new international explosive crisis into which we have entered and, perhaps, its solution will be delayed through preservation of the current de facto situation.

The kind of pressure the United States will exert upon Turkey will depend on the significance attributed to this country within the limits of the new defense line it is preparing with Turkey, on the one hand, and Pakistan, on the other, as cornerstones. Preservation of intercommunal dialog and suitably prepared pressures upon Turkey could, according to Kliridhis, bring about a favorable development of the Cyprus issue. Otherwise the current situation will be perpetuated but without the danger of unfavorable developments to the Greek Cypriot side.

V. Lissaridhis considers that recent international developments once again stress the strategic importance of both Turkey and Cyprus. This means new and greater U.S. pressures and more adverse conditions for the Greek Cypriot side if it exclusively limits itself to the framework of intercommunal dialog and appeals to international organizations exclusively. Lissaridhis always believes that at the same time it is essential to use the fighting spirit of the people of Cyprus; to organize the defensive military ability of the populations of the south; to support in various ways the unification moves and trends which are recently developing with the Turkish Cypriots of the north; to avoid new intercommunal negotiations without first establishing the framework of principles within which such negotiations could be conducted.

For Papaioannou the American imperialists and the West look toward a grand strategic plan for the encirclement of the USSR stretching from China to the Scandinavian shores. They consciously undermined detente even before the developments of Afghanistan. He believes that the "Carter-Thatcher" plans as well as the plans of others are destined to be a momentous failure. For the time being, however, without doubt the latest international developments certainly make "the national liberation struggle of Cyprus more difficult," and foster great dangers to world peace. Already the Americans are making extensive use of British bases in Cyprus for espionage and terror flights over the Arab countries, Iran and the USSR.

Papaioannou gave a detailed account of his party's positions for the solution of the Cyprus issue within a United Nations framework and through an international conference. Papaioannou fully understands the dangers created by the "adventurism" of the Atlantists and the position of China which "has deviated from the orbit of the socialist countries and became an anticommunist puppet of the imperialists."

TURKISH CYPRIOT ASSEMBLY HOLDS ANNIVERSARY SESSION

TA132027 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1531 GMT 13 Feb 80 TA

[Summary] "The Turkish Cypriot legislative assembly convened this afternoon to hold a special session to mark the fifth anniversary of the establishment of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC]. Assembly President Korhan, Prime Minister and National Unity Party leader Mustafa Cagatay, Communal Liberation Party [CLP] leader Alpay Durduran, Democratic People's Party [DPP] leader Nejat Konuk, Republican Turkish Party [RTP] leader Ozker Ozgur as well as Populist Party leader Alper Orhon, and Turkish Senate President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil, who arrived on the island to participate in the ceremonies, addressed the assembly.

"In his opening speech, Korhan said that the days of continuous fear were now over and that with the peace operation of 1974, the Turkish Cypriot community had achieved its own administration and had obtained a homeland where it could live decently and freely." Recalling that the Turkish Cypriot community would have to continue making efforts in order to improve its lot, Korhan expressed his gratitude to the Turkish nation and the Turkish Armed Forces which had contributed to their present situation. Korhan said that all good willed efforts of the Turkish Cypriot community for the solution of the Cyprus problem were met with continuous intransigence by the Greek Cypriots, who were looking for a solution in international forums. He added that this called for the revision of the unanimous resolution passed by the National Assembly on 5 November 1974. "Korhan said that it was imperative to take the necessary measures connected with the Federated State's economic structure in a bid to render the community self-sufficient.

"Coming to the rostrum after Korhan, Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay said that a period of 5 years, which had elapsed since the establishment of the TFSC, had not proven long enough for the Greek Cypriot administration to sit at the negotiating table with good will in a bid to find a lasting and peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem. Cagatay added that the long term struggle policy of the Greek Cypriot leadership would definitely fail and that no force or pressure would be enough to impose an unacceptable solution on the Turkish Cypriot community. Those hoping that our social and economic problems would damage us should do well to remember this fact." He then explained the recent economic measures saying that new measures intended to alleviate the burden of the people would be made public in a week.

Referring to efforts being exerted by the UN secretary general for the resumption of the intercommunal talks, Cagatay said that every day which passed without a solution to the Cyprus problem was exacerbating the situation. He added that the more the economic gap between the two Cypriot communities widened the less hope there was for a solution to the Cyprus problem.

Speaking after the Cagatay, CLP leader Durduran said that although the TFSC was facing many problems, the Turkish Cypriot community had the belief that it could solve them. "Reviewing the struggle of the Turkish Cypriot community waged in order to reach its present phase, DPL leader Konuk said that the Turkish Armed Forces would not leave the island until peace was insured." RTP leader Ozgur complained that not enough efforts were made in order to solve the community's economic problems during the 3 years since the establi-hment of the TFSC. Populist Party leader Orhon recalled the island's geopolitical importance and claimed that differences between Turkey and Greece and the fact that enough initiative had not been taken by the Turkish Cypriot community were the reasons why no progress was made in solving the Cyprus problem.

Caglayangil was the last speaker to address the legislative assembly. "Caglayangil said that history had proven that the Turkish Armed Forces would not leave by the force of resolutions from a place where they had come through the force of bayonets." He said that remembering the past would be beneficial to solve the Cyprus problem. "Caglayangil added that Turkey was having difficulties in replacing its legal troops on the island, while 15,000 Greek troops, received with ceremonies, were stationed in Cyprus. What we need, Caglayangil said, is to seek a solution to this problem and not Kiprianou's consent." But in order to argue or to make peace, two sides are needed. Let us seek a solution through peaceful means. The unity of the community must not suffer during this process. Our mission is to transform this place into a homeland.

DENKTAS COMMENTS ON RECENT ROLANDHIS TOUR

TA111845 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 11 Feb 80 TA

[Text] President Denktas has said that the Varosha quarter of Famagusta was part of the Federated State and that nobody has the right to give a guarantee to the foreign minister of the Greek Cypriot administration, Mr Rolandhis, on Varosha. Mr Denktas was answering questions on a recent tour of foreign countries by Mr Rolandhis.

He said that those who posed as the legal government of Cyprus were to sit at the negotiating table with the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus on equal terms. He added that there was no place for deceit at the negotiating table. He stated that the future of two equal administrations would be discussed at the talks.

Mr Denktas said that the principles of this future had been determined and found its expression in the agreement in principle reached at the summit meetings. He stressed that the Turkish Cypriot community would not concede the rights it had defended at the cost of lives. Commenting on reports that the Armenians would initiate a massacre campaign against the Turkish Cypriot community on the 5th anniversary of the foundation of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, President Denktas said that this report was aimed at overshadowing the celebrations and had been fabricated by the Greeks and Armenians. He stated that there was no organization in north Cyprus which would make such an attempt and he added that these reports were being closely followed and the Turkish youth could not keep quiet forever in the face of the cold war continued by the Greek Cypriots. President Denktas concluded by saying that bombing Turkish-owned buildings and assassinating defenseless Turkish diplomats and their families was an action encouraged by the Greek Cypriots.

I KATHIMERINI VIEWS GREEK ROLE IN INTERNATIONAL EVENTS

AT131500 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 13 Feb 80 p 5 AT

[Editorial: "The Primary Conditions"]

[Text] We have no knowledge of the exact and full content of the proposals and plans by leading personalities of the Atlantic alliance for a settlement of the well-known controversial issues which would allow Greece's return to the military wing of the alliance under conditions acceptable to our country. Consequently we are in no position to offer criticism on these specific plans, particularly because we have no knowledge of the "positions" and reactions of the Turkish side on the entire or a portion of these plans, nor do we know of certain other dependent issues and peripheral effects under current developments.

We will only present--and we will repeat--certain general thoughts on the issue as a whole and on the criteria which affect our country's position.

First of all we want to repeat that Greece withdrew from the military wing of the Atlantic alliance during that tragic summer of 1974 for very specific reasons related, on the one hand, to the Greek necessity of having its own armed forces under its full national control and at its complete disposal during the invasion of Cyprus and under the Turkish claims against Greek territory and, on the other hand, to the indignation of Greek public opinion over the alliance's inactivity toward the Turkish invasion of Cyprus.

These reasons have not yet been neutralized. Yet Greece stated it would be willing to return to the military wing within a framework of special relations which was both acceptable to the alliance and also met our country's special needs for security--as a result of the Turkish claims.

Turkey, however, exercized the right of "veto" and raised claims which affected Greek sovereign rights over its own territory and which were a threat to Greek security.

Instead of opposing these claims, the command of the alliance adopted the Turkish demands even though they had absolutely no relation to the alliance's defensive effectiveness--but on the contrary undermined it. The alliance thus incorporated these claims in the two "Haig plans" which, naturally, were rejected by Greece.

There was a stalemate until, under the well-known international climate created during the past two months, the leadership of the alliance took the initiative for a settlement which would allow Greece's return to its military wing.

It is obvious that this initiative falls within the trend or aim for a return to the monolithic character and internal "cohesion" and "discipline" of coalitions along the lines which existed during the first postwar 15-year period. The alliance's command is pressed to close the gap in its southeast wing.

This in itself is understandable. It is, however, essential that those who are interested in this and who are in so much a hurry, should know that this "gap closing" will not and is not likely to occur at the expense of the sovereign rights and national security of Greece which will never accept any "deviations" in these sectors and, generally, from the status of the region established on the basis of the general and specific provisions of international law.

This gap and the entire crisis in the area were not created by Greece, which never denied anything nor raised any claims against anyone. This state of affairs was created by others through their invasion and conquest of a third and independent country and through their claims and aspirations at the expense of Greece territory.

If, therefore, the Atlantic alliance is truly interested in restoring the state of affairs, it must turn toward these others. The "cold war" climate which is being created will not--and it ought not--draw the responsible leaders of Greece into possible hasty and spasmodic actions.

We do not overlook the complicated character of the problem facing Greece to which is added the not so insignificant factor of possible, even though long-term, developments in neighboring Yugoslavia after Tito's death, no matter how improbable these might be. What is needed is a calm and "staff" study of the entire problem under the guidance of experience gained during the entire postwar period generally and the past 15 years specifically, without any revival of "syndromes" and psychoses of the past which were always such bad counsel in the past and which could be even worse today.

In any case, the "cold war" climate we mentioned is, to a certain extent, artificial and, in any case, disproportionate in tension and tone to the objective facts and their true significance. As an example we have the elusiveness of West Europe (headed by France and West Germany) and its separation from the United States in face of a situation which virtually started developing prior to developments in Afghanistan and its insistence on the preservation of detente in Europe.

The same is happening with Japan and with certain conservative and clearly pro-Western Arab countries. This divergence of positions demonstrates that a return to forms and situations of the first post-war 15-year period is impossible because the entire international situation and potential is objectively different today.

At a time, therefore, when powers such as the ones mentioned maintain such a policy, Greece would have no reason to get involved over and above the degree permitted and dictated by its specific interests in confrontations and clashes of forces and interests of a worldwide scale and character.

It is, therefore, certain that a return to the Atlantic alliance's military wing will take place only when conditions and prerequisites set by the Greek side are met because these are related to the country's vital national interests and to its very security. As we recently underlined, international as well as Balkan developments--existing or possible--do not cancel out these conditions and prerequisites, nor is there any change in the origins of direct claims upon Hellenism.

In conclusion, no matter how things may develop, the Greek people must be kept fully informed, right up to the smallest detail.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA SCORES GOVERNMENT'S DEPENDENCE ON U.S., NATO

AT121745 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 12 Feb 80 p 4 AT

[From the "Viewpoints" column: "With Cards on the Table"]

[Text] This meeting by the chief of Greece's Armed Forces, General Gratsios with the NATO supreme military commander, General Rogers, which took place yesterday in the Atlantic alliance's headquarters should have been accompanied on the part of the Greek side with crystal clear specifics, and should not have been complicated by speculation.

The way the government replied to the charges of the opposition--which accused it of not having clarified to the Greek people, as it should, the goals of the meeting between the two military leaders and of almost letting it be understood that they intended to talk haphazardly and irresponsibly with just any conclusions to be reached--manifests an unforgivable tardiness toward national issues and a lack of respect for the Greek people.

Justifiably, the PASOK chairman warned the government that it is undertaking immense responsibilities toward the country and its future if, under the pretext of some arrangements in the troubled area that is being tested by the oil crisis and the events in Afghanistan, it makes concessions to Turkey or NATO that will have unfavorable consequences on our national area.

Most correctly, therefore, Papandreou asked the Karamanlis government to commit itself publicly on the validity of the declared Greek positions on the issue of "operational control in the Aegean" (as the Atlantic allies euphemistically call the dependence of Greece's sea area on Turkey and NATO) while promoting the famous Rogers plan, which in essence is nothing else but the tripartite division of the Aegean, this ancient cradle of Greek civilization.

There is something else too which naturally wounds the Greek people's dignity when uttered by the country's government: Its statement that NATO is being encouraged by the government to plan its pressures in order to achieve Greece's return to NATO's military wing.

This is something entirely new in the government's charted policy--something that is suddenly appearing without the knowledge of the Greek people who, full of surprise, are informed that, during the "comings and goings" of Davos and Gratsios to the NATO headquarters, our government became convinced that we must return to the NATO military wing "because it has judged that this is dictated by the country's interest!"

It is a mystery when and how this government conviction was forged when until recently it was being declared before the Chamber and in all tones that Greece's position was and has remained outside military NATO pending the abolition of Turkey's role as the alliance's regulator, a Turkey which occupies 40 percent of Cyprus and tries to displace our country from the Aegean with the blessings of the Americans.

It is most surprising how the prime minister imagines that Greece can become an international amphictyony where the Olympic games will be held every 4 years in a spirit of freedom and peace if, before all this, he does not cleanse the political territory from dependence on foreigners and from the pollution of their interventions in Greek affairs.

DEFENSE MINISTER REPLIES TO ALLEGATIONS ON AEGEAN AIRSPACE

AT121710 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 12 Feb 80 p 2 AT

[Text] In a statement issued yesterday in reply to claims by General Siapkaras and General Anagnostopoulos--claims which he described as irrational--National Defense Minister E. Averof stressed that the two generals' conclusions are arbitrary.

Citing among other things, a study by OBSERVER political editor Andrew Wilson that was issued by the London International Institute for Strategic Studies, Siapkaras and Anagnostopoulos claimed that Greece offered to reduce significantly the terminal area of Limnos Airport, that Turkish airplanes are not controlled by the Greek FIR during air and naval exercises inside the Greek airspace but by the operational center of the 1st tactical Turkish Air Force, and so forth.

Averof's reply is as follows: "I am afraid that, basing themselves on invisible reports on a foreign study, the two generals have drawn arbitrary conclusions entirely contrary to reality. The most classic example of this arbitrary interpretation is the alleged Greek recognition of NOTAM 714 which, on the contrary, caused Greece to close the Aegean air corridors, as is also the case regarding the report that Turkey has included many Aegean islands 'within its own airspace'. These irrational claims conflict with daily practice which has been uninterrupted over the last 5 years. Let the two generals not hasten to draw arbitrary conclusions from inaccurate information, and let them be a little patient in order to understand that they have no monopoly on patriotism and logic."

I KATHIMERINI REPORTS CONCERN OVER INCREASING STRIKES

[Excerpts] The wave of strikes which is daily increasing as new branches of workers join it, leads to total dislocation of the country's economic and social life. It is a fact that with the bank employees strike--which will be continued for one more week--as a catalyst, we now have the start of a broad cycle of strikes which threatens to paralyze vital sectors of the economy as well as sectors of high social importance such as education and health. As of this morning we have a taxi strike [4 days]; pharmacies will close on Monday [11 February]; teachers and professors will strike on 22 February while the personnel of OTE, the Greek Telecommunications Organization are planning new strike action, and the farmers' refusal to sell their produce will apparently be repeated. Authoritative government personalities appeared particularly concerned over the situation and spoke of a severe crisis because, as they stressed, certain trade unions are suffering from a crisis of intransigence which makes any form of dialog with them, for the examination of their demands, impossible. According to the government this intransigence has political motives and is specifically due to the activities of political circles which want to create tension in the relations between the government and the trade unions and which fan the flames of broad social upheavals. In other instances this intransigence manifests itself in view of imminent association elections.

The bank employees strike was extended for one more week after yesterday's consultations between bank administrations and OTOE, the Federation of Greek Bank Employee Organizations collapsed. Following this development the bank administrations resorted to the process of law 3239/55 which provides for mediation and compulsory arbitration. On Tuesday Labor Minister Laskaris will attempt to mediate between OTOE and the banks. It is expected that this will be futile and the dispute will be referred to compulsory arbitration which, according to the law, means lifting the strike. Late last night strike action by DEI, Public Power Corporation, personnel was called off after their demands for salary increases, long-service allowances, pensions and others were settled. Settlement was reached after protracted negotiations. The 4-day countrywide taxi owners strike started this morning. Due to the "odd-even" [license number] driving restrictions the strike is expected to cause severe hardship. The strike was called because taxi owners rejected the 50 lepta [half drachma] per kilometer increase, considering it totally insufficient. Pharmacies throughout the country will remain closed on Monday following a decision of the Panhellenic Pharmacists Association. A statement stresses that the association demands from the government an "immediate settlement of the pharmacists problem as recognized by the ministers of social services and trade at their 5 February meeting with the association." The administrative council of the teacher's federation will meet Education Minister Varvitsiotis and Deputy Education Minister Kondoyiannopoulos at 0800 GMT Monday. Later the two ministers will confer with the administrative council of OLME, the Federation of Secondary School Teachers, in order to discuss their demands.

FINANCIAL DELEGATION CONTINUES WESTERN TOUR

TA132053 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 13 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Turgut Ozal, the under secretary of the Prime Minister's Office and the deputy under secretary of the State Planning Organization, has said that a wide ranging standby agreement would soon be signed with the IMF. Ozal added that the IMF was expected to extend a large loan to Turkey.

Ozal, who is touring certain Western countries to hold talks regarding economic aid to be extended to Turkey, met for a second time today with Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer. Talks held to date regarding aid to Turkey were reviewed and the guidelines of the policy to be followed in the future were discussed in the talks.

In a statement to AKAJANS [MEDITERRANEAN NEWS AGENCY] in Bonn, Ozal said that during his tour of Western countries, he had called on Western financial institutions to support Turkey. Ozal said briefly: We are expecting a big loan from the IMF. I do not want to disclose the amount involved, since bargaining is still continuing.

Meanwhile, loans amounting to $960 million promised by the OECD last year will reach more than $1 billion this year. Ozal said that, to date, a loan of $200 million was received from certain Western banks. He added that $600 million of additional loan would be extended to Turkey. In addition, he said Turkey's foreign debts amounting to $700-$800 million had been postponed.

Pointing out that certain U.S. commercial banks had renewed their credits to Turkey, Ozal said that thus new prospects for acquiring additional loans of $300-$400 million had arisen. Ozal said that other support provided by the IMF was the payment of 30 to 40 percent of the credit letter transfers by the Turkish Central Bank instead of 100 percent.

It has also been announced that the loan to be extended to Turkey by the IMF in February and June in two $78 million installments will be released simultaneously as a loan of $156 million.

TERCUMAN CALLS FOR CONCESSIONS ON CYPRUS

NC131358 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 11 Feb 80 p 4 NC

[Commentary by Zafer Atay: "Ankara-Athens-Nicosia-Washington"]

[Excerpts] For years on end, Turkish foreign policy has been wandering within the Ankara-Athens-Nicosia-Washington quadrangle. Frequently, serious obstructions and tensions occur within this framework. The Cyprus operation, the embargo, the Hora dispute, the Continental Shelf and the FIR skirmishes are the best examples.

In reality, Cyprus is at the root of these quarrels. Turkey has been suffering an unending crisis since it undertook the two successive operations in 1974 on the basis of international rights.

In the forthcoming weeks Turkey must prepare itself for the big noises that will emanate from Washington. Following developments in Iran, Afghanistan, the hostages and the shah, the United States is now starting its new preelection period. For the time being, the electioneering stock and trade of the presidential candidates are the invasion of Afghanistan and the severe trials and tribulations of the 50 American hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. After a short time, a more in-depth campaign will begin and the Cyprus, Turkey and the embargo will come into the limelight again. [paragraph continues]

It was after the Cyprus peace operation that the American politicians realized for the first time the strength of the Greek minority in the United States. The truth is that it is not easy for any candidate to push aside more than 3 million affluent Greeks who can influence the press and information media.

After a lapse of so many months, it might seem rather meaningless to ask whether "the embargo has indeed been lifted." But even today embargo is hanging over Turkey like the sword of Damocles. Well, the embargo has been lifted but the U.S. President must report to Congress every 60 days and "say that the situation in Cyprus is improving."

In other words, as soon as the new president-elect says: "The situation in Cyprus is deteriorating; Turkey refuses to take any peaceful steps" Congress is sure to suspend again the dispatch of arms to Turkey.

Therefore, the most important thing for Turkey to do would be to take the initiative as soon as possible and seek a righteous and lasting solution to the Cyprus dispute.

If necessary, Turkey will have to make concessions for the sake of peace. For the only way out of this circle is to conclude a peace that will guarantee the security of our ethnic people in Cyprus.

It should be duly noted that the demand "settle the Cyprus issue", which has been suggested to us at the United Nations and at the Council of Europe, will again be reiterated when we apply for EEC membership. We have no doubt that the same demand will be put to us when we ask for the credit fountains to flow more generously so that we may extricate ourselves from the current economic bottlenecks.

NSP'S ERBAKAN PROMISES 'RELUCTANT SUPPORT' TO GOVERNMENT

TA131819 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1710 GMT 13 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 13 Feb (AA)--National Salvation Party [NSP] Chairman Necmettin Erbakan claimed the government's new tax bill would double the tax burden on the citizen. At a 2-hour press conference Wednesday, the NSP leader said the Justice Party [JP] government had done "exactly the opposite" of 12 specific recommendations the NSP had made as the government was being formed. Therefore he said "from now on, we will provide only reluctant support" to it.

Erbakan declined to say whether the NSP would vote in favor of the budget bill for fiscal 1980, adding he would speak up Saturday. He said the NSP was ready for early elections but preferred to have them at a time "best suited to saving (?the) nation."

He did not think the tax bill could pass parliament easily, but offered to help raise the minimum living allowance if it were presented as a separate item. He rejected rumours of division within his party, noting such rumours about the NSP were circulated just when the JP "applecart" was being upset.

WORK RESUMES IN SOME TARIS FACTORIES IN IZMIR

TA131743 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1635 GMT 13 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Izmir, 13 Feb (AA)--Production was resumed at some of the plants operated by TARIS, the agricultural sales cooperatives union, Wednesday morning, the general manager of TARIS announced. He said the dried fig packaging and alcohol and cologne manufacturing plants had gone back into operation, while the olive oil extracting plant had been working all along.

As workers resisting management decisions still occupied the cotton spinning mill, the general manager said, the extent of material damage to the plant could not be assessed there.

The governor of Izmir told reporters production at the spinning mill would also be resumed "soon", but declined to say exactly when.

Meanwhile, the workers inside the spinning mill were seen surrounding the grounds with bales of cotton, and pouring combustibles over them. The workers kept silent, but reportedly threatened to set fire to the bales.

A group of workers dismissed by TARIS management had an interview with the governor at his office this morning.

Police said they had released 50 more of the 500 persons detained in Sunday's disturbances, in addition to the 350 released earlier.

A union spokesman affiliated with the Confederation of Revolutionary Labor Unions, DISK, claimed the workers at TARIS plants reported to have resumed production were in fact on the job, but were merely sitting-in and not working to protest the dismissals.

In Ankara, Undersecretary of the Interior Ministry Durmus Yalcin and Director General of Security Rafet Kucuutiryaki, just back from Izmir, briefed the interior minister, the commander of gendarmerie and other officials on the TARIS incidents. Developments so far had been the subject of a general assessment, ministry officials said.

INA REPORTS ON JOINT IRAQI-BELGIAN COMMUNIQUE

JN091123 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1020 GMT 9 Feb 80 JN

[Text] Baghdad, 9 February--Iraq and Belgium have reaffirmed that Zionist withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories and the achievement of the national rights of the Palestinian people are two basic conditions for a just and comprehensive peace.

This came in a joint communique issued in Baghdad and Brussels today upon the conclusion of Iraqi Foreign Minister Dr Sa'dun Hammadi's official visit to Belgium.

The two sides agreed on the necessity of Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, and the achievement of the national rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to self-determination in their homeland.

The Iraqi and Belgian sides stressed the political and economic importance of the Arab-European dialog for the two regions for laying the bases for mutual and fruitful cooperation. They agreed to exert efforts to resume the Arab-European dialog on a comprehensive level.

They also stressed the importance of Arab European unity to strengthen the independence of the two regions and to develop their economies in order to establish more balanced international relations. They voiced special concern over the world economic order, including the issue of energy, and other issues.

Iraq and Belgium stressed the importance of reforming the world economic order in a way that guarantees economic equality, justice, progress and stability with regard to relations between the developing and developed countries.

The communique pointed out that the talks which Dr Sa'dun Hammadi held in Belgium were fruitful and opened new spheres of bilateral cooperation.

KREISKY AFFIRMS SUPPORT FOR AS-SADAT, CAIRO VISIT

AU140941 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 14 Feb 80 p 2 AU

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "GPE"]

[Text] Vienna--Asked by DIE PRESSE about rumors that he intended to postpone or cancel his visit to Egypt scheduled for the end of April or the beginning of May in view of President as-Sadat's difficult position, Chancellor Kreisky termed these rumors as "absolutely false. Of course I will be going." The chancellor will also pay an official visit to Belgrade in April.

The persistent rumors about a cancellation of the Cairo visit have caused astonishment in Egypt. Thus it was pointed out that As-Sadat and Kreisky repeatedly referred to one another as "friends" and that if Kreisky were now to call off his visit, it would look as if he were leaving As-Sadat in the lurch.

In an interview with DIE PRESSE Kreisky recently expressed great concern over the political fate of the Egyptian chief of state, and had repeatedly declared that he expected a failure of the Egyptian-Israeli-American autonomy talks. Consequently, he had referred to the month of May as a political "turning point."

ANDROSCH REVIEWS BONN TALKS ON FINANCE, OTHER COOPERATION

AU141440 Vienna ARBEITER ZEITUNG in German 14 Feb 80 pp 1, 4 AU

[AZ, APA report on Vice Chancellor Androsch's visit to Bonn on 12 and 13 February 1980]

[Summary] Bonn--On 12 and 13 February Vice Chancellor and Finance Minister Androsch had talks in Bonn with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Foreign Minister Genscher, Finance Minister Matthoefer and Deputy SPD Chairman Wischnewski. In an ARBEITER ZEITUNG interview Androsch stressed that there was full consensus with his FRG interlocutors regarding a relatively optimistic assessment of the two countries' economic prospects: "This year, the FRG and Austria will again be among the countries with the greatest stability, although the inflation rate in both countries will be around 5 percent," Androsch said.

Regarding the question of foreign participation in financing the construction of a transit superhighway throughout Austria, Androsch claimed to have made some progress in his Bonn talks although the EEC is disinclined to contribute directly to the financing because it might set a precedent. Alternative solutions are now being worked out, including financing by an international syndicate, in connection with a toll system. "In his talks with his counterpart, Matthoefer, Androsch reached agreement on closer cooperation in combating drug smuggling." The smoothly functioning cooperation between German and Austrian customs authorities in the drug sector is to be extended to the police. In the framework of the aid program for Turkey initiated by the FRG--to which the FRG will contribute $200 million, Switzerland $20 million, Sweden and Belgium $5 million each, and Denmark $2 million--Austria will grant Turkey a 20-year $15 million loan at 4 percent interest.

"In a lecture at the annual meeting of the German industry and trade congress in Bonn, Androsch pleaded for not letting the East-West contacts break apart. The vice chancellor called for holding the CSCE followup conference in Madrid while noting that the SALT III agreement and the Vienna forced reduction talks should not be lost sight of or shelved."

FRG Finance Minister Matthoefer will resume his talks with Androsch in Vienna in the spring. Both finance ministers take an optimistic view of the present currency situation, being in consensus that the European currency system has proved its worth. Androsch told ARBEITER ZEITUNG: "The hard currency policy will be maintained."

SCHMIDT SPEAKS IN BRUSSELS ON EAST-WEST RELATIONS

LD142345 Hamburg DPA in German 2317 GMT 14 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Brussels--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said in Brussels tonight that it is urgently necessary for Europe to play a part in the current international situation following the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan. The part which could be played by Europe, however, is limited. This applies especially to the Federal Republic.

This was stated by the federal chancellor in a toast during a dinner given by Belgium Prime Minister Wilfried Martens in honor of the German guest. Schmidt arrived in the Belgian capital on Thursday for a 24-hour official visit to discuss the international political situation following the Soviet march into Afghanistan.

The chancellor stated in his speech that efforts for the reestablishment of trust between East and West should be continued. A precondition, however, is the maintenance of the military balance between East and West. This balance presupposes constantly new efforts by the partner countries. NATO's decision of last December on the modernization of nuclear arms in Europe was not an easy one, neither for the German Government nor the Belgian Government.

The German head of government emphasized that there are no bilateral problems between Belgium and the Federal Republic. In the economic sphere, too, the two countries are pursuing the same policy, aimed above all at economic and monetary stability.

PRESS VIEWS SCHMIDT CRITICISM OF CARTER'S TACTICS

DW151036 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 15 Feb 80 DW

[Press review on German complaints about lack of communication between Europe and the United States]

[Text] SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE writes: The blunt criticism voiced by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt against the communication policy of U.S. President Carter makes it clear where the weak spots of the Western alliance are to be found. The coordination between Washington and its partners on the reaction to the Soviet action in Afghanistan is indeed inadequate, and, contrary to the opinion of U.S. Government circles displaying irritation particularly over France, it is not the Europeans alone who are to blame. Bonn's irritation over the growing unpredictability of U.S. policy must not, however, lead to the point where the differences of opinion turn into serious controversies.

AUGSBURGER ALLGEMEINE stresses: Notwithstanding our solidarity with the United States, which is necessary if only for the sake of our own survival, the irritation of the chancellor is understandable; but the real scandal is the fact that this speech, classified as secret, is now being bartered on the open market, whereupon the impression is bound to recur in Moscow that in the long run there will be a chance after all to create an Atlantic trench.

The Mainz ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG voices the following view: The chancellor's criticism is somewhat at odds with the usual behavior of the chancellor, who occasionally demonstrates to visitors in his office his intensive telephone contacts with Carter. Are they talking with each other but failing to understand each other because one of them is always listening for the rumble from Paris with one ear? Such communications difficulties in the alliance strengthen Moscow in its view that it might succeed in driving a wedge between the United States and its allies after all. Granted, there are nuances and different accents in the assessment of possible countermeasures in the face of the Soviet strike in Afghanistan; but in no case must the discussion on them promote the impression among world public opinion that a European third road might be right for bypasing Carter and the United States.

BERLINER MORGENPOST states: In the long run it is irresponsible for a politician, who is considered one of the most respected spokesmen of the Western camp and who liked to cultivate his voice as the preceptor of the Europeans, to present himself as the giant clam. His silence may be misinterpreted. Carter and Brezhnev might interpret it as a lack of solidarity with the United States, to the grief of the former and to the joy of the latter. In any event, the chancellor's refusal to define his position strengthens the fatal impression that he is moving back and forth between the fronts and working on a pretentious mediator's role, which could make us permanent losers.

ECONOMICS MINISTER LAMBSDORFF INTERVIEWED ON U.S. VISIT

DW150939 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West German 0617 GMT 14 Feb 80 DW

[Reporter-held interview with Federal Minister of Economy Otto Graf Lambsdorff in the United States; place and date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] If everything went according to plan, you have talked in the past hours to Secretary of State Vance, Secretary of Energy Duncan and World Bank President McNamara. Was that actually enough for you to become acquainted with the U.S. boycott plans and expectations with regard to the Federal Republic of Germany?

[Answer] I would not say that it sufficed, but naturally we discussed the Americans' ideas with regard to economic sanctions and economic measures as an answer to the actions of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan. First I talked to Secretary of State Vance on the basic approach of the Federal Republic of Germany toward the United States. I sensed pleasant and, for us, most delightful agreement with what the Federal Government has said so far. The U.S. secretary of state highly praised the statement made by Federal Foreign Minister Genscher last weekend, saying that this was exactly what the United States had expected at the time. Also with regard to all other problems, the Federal Government's stand on the problems and needs of American policy is considered positive.

[Question] You said in the U.S. capital that the United States could rely on the Federal Republic of Germany. Could you be a bit more specific?

[Answer] Yes. We have said in the past that we intend to support the United States in its considerations on what measures should be necessary and effective, as well as on what measures do not seem promising and should not be taken. We want to consider together what decision ought to be made under these circumstances. That includes such issues as the Olympic games, the supply of sensitive goods to the Soviet Union, help within NATO with regard to economic and military support of Turkey, Greece and Pakistan, and efforts aimed at insuring Yugoslavia a reasonable status in its relations with the European Community. We want to discuss all these together and implement them together.

[Question] A specific question: What would the economy of the Federal Republic have to face in the event of a boycott?

[Answer] I do not think one can discuss details in this connection. There is the so-called COCOM agreement that has been in effect for years. The involved countries--the highly industrialized countries of the West--have agreed that the export of certain goods to the Soviet Union must be discussed first before a decision can be made. The United States is interested in adhering to these agreements more stringently and with more respect than in the past. That is an ad hoc decision.

One can only outline rough ideas and agreements in advance. That has been discussed. Individual cases must be discussed. One thing is certain, however: The Federal German economy must not imagine--and the Federal Government has outlined this clearly and repeatedly--that it can take over business deals that have been rejected by American firms at the request of their government.

[Question] One has the feeling that American economic circles did not understand the hesitation of German enterprises with regard to sanctions against the Soviet Union. Have you been in Washington again as an interpreter of these ideas?

[Answer] Nothing of the kind was mentioned. That can be noted best not in Washington, but in New York where the firms are located and where I talked with the representatives of many large American firms. They voiced no criticism and no reservations with regard to the stand of the Federal Republic in these matters; there is mutual understanding for the necessary decisions and possibly necessary measures. I explained to my American discussion partners--and recently on German television--that we naturally take seriously the reservations and requests of the economy, of trade unions and of sports organizations, but that these are political decisions after all. The Federal Industry Association, the German Industry and Trade Association and the German Trade Union Federation are not responsible for political decisions; rather the Federal Government makes them. It must take the responsibility and make the decisions.

[Question] Does the American side realize that the German economy, which depends so much on exports, can hardly renounce the Soviet market? Do they know about the possible consequences of a boycott for the Federal Republic? As raw material have-nots we depend on a number of raw materials coming from the Soviet Union--such as natural gas. We have contracts for it.

[Answer] Well, as regards the key word "contracts". I will accept that, but I do not like the formulation that we depend on these supplies. We do not depend on gas supplies from the Soviet Union. The volume is not such that one could speak of dependence. They can be replaced by others. By the way, nobody has asked us--certainly not the United States--to reduce our trade, say with the Soviet Union, to zero from one day to the next. That is not considered. That is not desired. On the contrary: we do not have to face these consequences.

[Question] We note that the Soviets presently are almost thirsting for meetings with West German economic leaders, while the desire to have talks with German politicians seems to have deteriorated almost completely. How do you explain that when you are asked about it in America?

[Answer] First I regret that the Soviet Union seems to have put a stop to contacts for political talks with the West. It seems the telephone receiver is not being lifted off the hook there. That is simply too bad. We all have set up these lines for talks--take, for example, the hot line--not for passing on occasional Christmas greetings, but for talking to each other particularly in crisis situations. The U.S. secretary of state confirmed today that such contacts ought to be exploited. This is why the U.S. Government, for example, continues to take part in all further disarmament and arms control negotiations. This accords with the stand of the Federal Government, which has been pointing out all along that the arms control offers in connection with the NATO decision of December 1979 are on the conference table, waiting for a positive answer from the Warsaw Pact or the Soviet Union.

[Question] What makes the Americans hesitate with regard to the boycott?

[Answer] The Americans are not hesitating. I would not say it like that. The Americans are considering--and this is a sensible consideration--first, what measures will be effective? They found, for example, that a wheat boycott would be effective, and they introduced that boycott long ago. Second, they ask: What measures can be implemented over a longer period so that one will not have to discontinue them for lack of breath. Third, what measures will simultaneously hurt us more than those who are supposed to be hurt, and will uninvolved third parties also suffer? All that must be considered carefully so that no rash decisions are made.

[Question] Did your American discussion partners, such as Secretary of State Vance, indicate how they feel the tense East-West relations will continue in the near future?

[Answer] The United States is also interested in talks. The United States is interested in pointing out to the other side how it would react to any relevant action by the Soviet Union. We were not the only ones who were concerned by the fact that the Soviet Union obviously had miscalculated the reactions of the West, particularly the reactions of the United States, to its intervention in Afghanistan.

TRADE WITH SOVIET UNION INCREASES IN 1979

[Excerpts] Bonn--The Soviet Union was the Federal Republic's largest Eastern trade partner last year. Total trade with the USSR reached DM14 billion (in 1978 it was DM11.7 billion). The second largest trade partner in the East was Poland, total trade being DM4.7 billion. Total exports by the Federal Republic in 1979 to the 11 CEMA countries amounted to DM18.9 billion, while imports were DM16 billion.

The largest growth rate in trade last year was registered with the Soviet Union. Because of higher raw materials and fuels prices Soviet exports to the Federal Republic increased by 36 percent to DM7.4 billion, while German exports rose by 5 percent. Total trade between the Federal Republic and the countries with state trade organizations in East Europe and Asia increased in 1979 by 11 percent, and registered a growth rate compared with all FRG foreign trade.

Imports from the East increased by 28 percent, whereas German exports to countries with state trade organizations increased by only 7 percent. The traditional trade deficits of all Eastern countries dropped correspondingly. The Soviet Union had a surplus of DM775 million, but the PRC, because of higher imports, went into the red DM1.8 billion.

Yugoslavia, which plays a special role among the Eastern countries with state trade organizations, increased its total trade turnover by DM1 billion to a total of DM8 billion (in 1978 it was DM6.9 billion). Exports to Yugoslavia rose to DM5.8 billion from DM5 billion in 1978, and imports rose to DM2.2 billion from DM1.9 billion in 1978.

GOVERNMENT: SOVIET WAS SPYING ON MIRAGE 2000

NC141200 Paris AFP in English 1146 GMT 14 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Marseilles, southern France, Feb. 14 (AFP)--A Soviet consul arrested here with secret documents was carrying top-secret information on France's future Mirage 2000 fighter plane, an official source disclosed today.

A source at police headquarters here said Consul Genadiy Travkov took a plane for Moscow willingly on Sunday after being arrested the day before just after taking possession of the documents. It was therefore not necessary to expel the consul, who had diplomatic immunity.

A spokesman at the Soviet Consulate in this Mediterranean port said Mr Travkov's arrest was a provocation, and that he had gone home simply because it would have been impossible for him "to keep working under the conditions created by the French police".

The Mirage 2000 is a single-engined, delta winged interceptor with a top speed of 2.5 times the speed of sound. It is slated to go into service in 1984. Its prototypes started test flights near here a few weeks ago.

The new craft is said to be twice as manoeuvrable at high altitude as the Mirage 3, which it will replace, and to climb five times faster.

LE FIGARO URGES GOVERNMENT TO ENDORSE OLYMPIC BOYCOTT

LD141615 Paris LE FIGARO in French 11 Feb 80 pp 1, 5 LD

[Max Clos article: "Brilliant Conversationalists"]

[Text] There is an effective and workable measure which could be used to respond in a credible way to the "Kabul coup" without endangering world peace--a boycott of the Olympic games. We find it difficult to understand that the governments of the free world--including ours--have been so timorous on this precise point.

Opponents of a boycott argue that such a decision could well have consequences out of all proportion to the real importance of a sports competition. They stress the fact--this is what France is doing--that above all it is necessary to prevent any resumption of a "bloc policy," that world "peace and security" is an objective to be continually borne in mind, that "detente" must be saved at all cost and that a rupture of the "dialog" with Moscow must be prevented.

This thesis is perfectly justifiable in theory, but it nonetheless raises some problems in practice. Here are three of them:

The Franco-German communique published at the conclusion of the Paris summit is decked out in martial plumes. It asserts: "The Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan is unacceptable and has posed grave dangers to the stability of the region and to peace.... Detente would not withstand another shock of this kind." This document has been represented as a clear warning to the Soviet Union or even as a hardening of attitudes toward Moscow.

But what is the meaning of the sentence "detente would not withstand another shock of this kind"? Please forgive me, but this is exactly what parents for whom things are getting too much say to their malicious children: "If you put out the dog's other eye I will get angry." In fact, where would "another shock" of this kind have to occur to be deemed "unacceptable"? In Pakistan? In Iran? In Yugoslavia? On the Rhine? Outside the Bois de Vincennes? Let us hope that Mr Brezhnev has been frightened out of his wits by this terrible warning and that he will not do it again! Meanwhile, he is carrying on in Afghanistan--and I have not heard about any intention to release either Sakharov or any of the hundreds of thousands of "seks" [detainees] from the labor camps.

The second problem also follows from the Franco-German communique. That document reaffirms Bonn's and Paris' "solidarity" with the Atlantic alliance. Furthermore, the president has repeatedly stated that detente is indivisible, a view strongly contested by Moscow. In plain language, "indivisible" means that you cannot come to terms with the Soviets in the rest of the world by pretending to believe that nothing of real importance is taking place in Afghanistan.

But in that case what is the meaning of the words Atlantic solidarity" if they find no practical expression in facts?

Obviously, it is possible to opt for a strictly neutral line for the sake of national independence. But you cannot both declare your "solidarity" and also abstain. Racine has already asked: "Can passive faith be sincere?"

We will be told that France cannot and must not appear to "aline itself" with the United States. Must it not be asked whether in fact it is not "aligning itself" with Moscow?

Third problem: Paris has adopted an apparently clear-cut attitude toward the boycott issue--we will participate in Olympic games but not in spartakiads," that is, games in which only communist countries and their clients would compete. Let us tally up. It is now certain that the Americans will not go to Moscow. Nor will the British. The Germans will probably not go either. This means that it is already clear that what is to take place is a "spartakiad." Therefore why not recognize this fact right now and draw the appropriate conclusion from a principle which we ourselves have put forward?

Intelligent people dislike primary simplifications. They are right. In drawing rooms it is nuances that make brilliant conversationalists who charm ladies. However, something more serious is at stake here. Important problems always require clear-cut decisions in black and white. Anyone trying to avoid at any cost such an essential decision is bound to fall between two stools and to run the risk of a disaster.

LE MONDE SCORES LIBYA'S 'ADVENTURIST' FOREIGN POLICY

[Editorial: "Adventurism"]

[Text] Libya's passionate and chaotic foreign policy, which is a faithful reflection of Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi's personality, is full of inconsistencies. Last December, 1 month after officially calling for the Tehran hostages' release and clearly condemning "any action against diplomatic missions and their staff," Tripoli organized a demonstration against...the U.S. Embassy--with the building being completely sacked. A similar operation was launched against the French Embassy in Tripoli Monday and against the consulate in Benghazi.

When the demonstrators attacked the U.S. mission, the authorities said that it was a "blunder." They expressed discreet "regrets" on that occasion--just as they have done to the French Embassy's first counselor. However, it is obvious that Tripoli bears full responsibility for these actions, which have been described as "totally unjustifiable" in Paris. The systematic way in which the French premises were sacked and the discipline shown by the "demonstrating masses," to quote official terminology, who have fortunately so far avoided attacking the staff but have carefully destroyed the buildings, are a tribute to the local authorities' sense of organization.

It is by no means certain that this strange method of expressing your disapproval of a foreign state's policy could be kept within the bounds of well-ordered violence for long. The torrent of accusations hurled against France by the radio and the JANA Agency are likely to be all too convincing to the demonstrators, who are incapable of seeing it as rhetoric. In addition to the "French invasion of Tunisia" aimed at "restoring a protectorate" and "treating the people like sheep," an official communique goes so far as to denounce the hitherto unknown heinous crimes of "Paris' military interventions in ...Canada, southern Africa and Lebanon."

For several years internal propaganda and overseas action have been subjected--like everything in Libya--to the unpredictable methods of the "People's Revolution." These methods, which have caused the Tripoli leaders a great deal of embarrasment in Uganda and Chad in particular, are based on the "creation of People's revolutionary committees throughout the Arab world, acting openly or secretly with the aim of seizing power, achieving unity and solving political problems." This explains why the Libyan leaders gave their support--among other things--to the kamikaze commando responsible for the attack on Gafsa and why they recently quarreled with the PLO which was accused of not wholly espousing Tripoli's viewpoint on the Israeli-Arab conflict.

In both cases these "revolutionary" methods have not had the desired results. President Bourguiba's regime, which Tripoli wanted to see fall, has been strengthened by the support it has been given in the present circumstances by the various opposition groups. Similarly Libya, which aspires to lead the struggle against Israel, has estranged the PLO, which is the Palestinian resistance's most representative organization.

Nonetheless, as has already been seen, it would take a great deal more than mistakes and failures to persuade Libya to abandon what is probably the world's strangest and most adventurist foreign policy.

PCI'S BOFFA VIEWS EXTENT OF OPPOSITION TO SOVIETS

LD141539 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 9 Feb 80 pp 1, 18 LD

[Giuseppe Boffa commentary: "World Reactions Prove Us Right"]

[Text] There is much material for reflection in the way in which the world has reacted to the grave international tension which has been looming over all our heads in recent months, initially as a result of the Iranian events and later, in an even more accentuated manner, in connection with the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Without minimizing in the least the extremely dangerous nature of the crisis, I believe one can say that this reaction contains elements which should be regarded as encouraging.

The price the USSR has already paid for having sent its expeditionary force across the Afghan mountains is the highest degree of international isolation that Moscow has experienced in 25 years. Obviously we are not talking here about the modest and hyprocritical indignation of those who have always been extremist adversaries of the USSR or of the revolutionary movements (and, of course, formerly supporters of the Vietnam war).

If that had been all, it would have been nothing new. Much more revealing--and, we believe, worrying for the Soviet leaders--is the response of those who had no preconceived motives for hostility toward Moscow, but who were (and in general remain) broadly well-disposed toward a policy of friendship. We are talking primarily about the nonalined countries and the stances which they adopted at the UN Assembly or the Islamabad conference.

But that is not all. Within the nonalined front itself, it is precisely the most radical line--which emerged at last September's Havana conference, declaring its willingness to recognize a "natural friend" in the USSR--which has felt the recent events most deeply. One indication of this is the highly cautious stance of Fidel Castro, in his two-fold capacity as Cuban leader and nonalined chairman. But another indication is the conduct of the Palestinians, Iranians and Nicaraguans. Even the new Indian Government, despite its understandable worries regarding Pakistan's armament and Chinese policy, has deplored the intervention in Afghanistan and demanded the withdrawal of Soviet troops. Even countries which have not associated themselves with any organized condemnation, such as Syria and South Yemen, have not uttered a single word of approval. The more careful observers have noted precise signs of unease even among the European socialist countries, even apart from the different ways in which they expressed themselves in the UN vote.

Nevertheless, such widespread censure has not prompted any hasty alinement under U.S. banners. The evident dissent or mere confusion prompted by the threats to Iran have not died down. Nor has the hostility--created in Africa by a policy which, despite the black Andrew Young's good but unfortunate intentions, has too long remained mistaken in the Africans' eyes--died down: This is shown by the unsuccessful mission of the good Cassius Clay, promoted to ambassador for this occasion. Finally, the measures, often rash, with which Washington has responded to the Afghan expedition have met with evident caution from the U.S. allies.

There is much discussion in our country of Europe's attitude. It is often forgotten that the behaviour of Japan--which is certainly no less concerned with the events--has been perhaps even more cautious. A new factor has emerged in Europe: the French-German meeting in Paris. Its final communique is an important document. It would be wrong for anyone to try and distort its meaning in one direction or the other, precisely because it is a carefully measured text designed to address firmly several interlocutors. [paragraph continues]

However, there is one objection which deserves an answer: It is the one made by those who reproach Schmidt and Giscard for having acted alone. In fact, Western Europe is now aware of its great need to puruse a policy of its own. We too would have preferred to see it interpreted by the Italian Government or the European Community as a whole, and we regret the fact that neither has yet proved capable of doing so. But in view of such a need, one should expect that sooner or later someone will decide to respond to it.

Furthermore, our paper has already indicated its high approval of the stance adopted by the Socialist International at its Vienna meeting. But there is another phenomenon which must be pointed out. It might indeed seem that all these initiatives are destined to fall on deaf ears on the other side of the Atlantic, given the tendency for an exacerbated public reaction to prevail. But even in America figures certainly not suspected of haboring an excessive tenderness toward the USSR, such as the doyen of Sovietologists, George Kennan or SALT II negotiator Paul Warnke, have braved temporary unpopularity and the criticisms of the angry brigade in order to advise the Washington leaders to adopt more constructive foreign policy options.

The error which must be avoided is to regard such tendencies as manifestations of equidistance or--worse still--of weakness and resignation to faits accomplis, if not indeed of a desire not to get involved, to step aside, out of fear or petty considerations. That is to say, they are the expression of a widespread desire which has developed very considerably in recent years in several new international protagonists to make their own voice heard so as to make their maximum contribution, be this large or small, to bringing about a course of events which will involve us all and, above all, to guiding it in the direction of peaceful coexistence instead of a war which would destroy the whole of mankind.

Nobody is unaware of the major powers' predominant role in world life, and nobody would even consider expressing their own worries while abandoning their own options, friendships and alliances. But in the presence of such troubling events, there are far fewer countries and political forces which believe that they can blindly entrust their fate to one or other of the major powers. One of the reasons for this is that the major powers, especially the United States and the Soviet Union, have revealed--albeit for different reasons--their inability to resolve the modern world's most dramatic problems on their own. The most tragic of all these problems, as we will never tire of repeating, is the terrible contrast between the often squandered wealth of some and the underdevelopment, poverty or famine of the majority.

Erroneous criticisms have been directed--sometimes for reasons of petty opportunism--even at our line of conduct and at the proposals put forward by us Italian Communists. But let us look around us for a moment. Let us cast a glance at the world as a whole. I believe we will see how, within the limits of our capabilities, we have sought not only to represent one vital interest of our people, but also to act as required by a basic need of millions of people and various different countries of our time.

PARTY FACTIONALISM WIDESPREAD ON EVE OF DC CONGRESS

AU150930 Rome ANSA in English 0850 GMT 15 Feb 80 AU

[Text] Rome, February 15 (ANSA)--The Italian Christian Democrat Party's (DC) fourteenth national congress, and its first since the abduction and slaying of party Chairman Aldo Moro in spring 1978, opens here today with political violence still one of the main components in the country's grave political crisis.

But the major problem facing the congress, which opens with a report from outgoing Secretary Benigno Zaccagnini, will be whether or not the Italian Communist Party (PCI) should be admitted to government responsibility.

The DC, which has been the senior partner in all Italian governments since shortly after the foundation of the republic, is the largest party in the Rome Parliament with the PCI tagging closely behind.

The present cabinet is a three-way coalition of the Christian Democrats with two minor parties, the Social Democrats (PSDI) and the right-of-center Liberals (PLI). The third-ranking Socialists (PSI) ensure its survival thanks to their crucial abstention.

Only yesterday, a meeting of the Socialist Executive Committee confirmed an end to the PSI's benevolent abstention towards Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga's administration and warned with a unanimous vote that a "more representative" government must be found.

There is some dissent among the Socialists over what form this government could take. Party Secretary Bettino Craxi holds the minority view that the premiership should go to a Socialist, leaving open the possibility of a five-party coalition adding the PSI and the minute Republican Party (PRI) to the present three partners.

The majority within the PSI, led by the left wing and Deputy Secretary Claudio Signorile, believes that the next step should an emergency government with some form of direct Communist participation.

The DC Congress opens in a climate of great uncertainty. No observer was prepared to hazard who might succeed Zaccagnini, who yesterday confirmed that he would not be standing for reelection.

The 1,219 delegates, representing a claimed 1,400,000 party card-holders, will in any case be faced by a fairly restricted choice. The most likely bets should include Chairman Flaminio Piccoli, former Premier Giulio Andreotti, former Foreign Minister Arnaldo Forlani, or former lower house caucus leader Giovanni Galloni, to mention the best-known.

The sessions promise a closely fought battle between the various party factions that, in some senses, make the DC into a series of parties-within-a-party rather than a party in its own right. One novelty is that the "Dorotei", one of the classical moderate factions, is no longer the largest. The biggest is now the faction that identifies itself with Zaccagnini. These "Friends of Zac", as they have been dubbed, picked up 28.29 [percent] of the delegates, the "Dorotei" only 22.50 percent.

The others are somewhat smaller: "the Chronicles", the centrist followers of Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani--13.01 percent; the followers of Andreotti--12.84 percent; the moderates of "New Forces"--18.6 percent; the hardline anti-Communists of "Proposal"--1.9 percent.

Apart from assessing their duties towards the over fourteen million Christian Democrat voters in the country, the congress delegates will be faced by a crucial procedural question, which will have its weight in the future management of their party. The problem is whether or not to follow the procedure laid down in 1976 of electing the secretary by the direct vote of the delegates, or whether to return to the old system of indirect election by the National Council, in its turn elected by the congress.

Speaking with newsmen yesterday, Organizational Secretary Vincenzo Russo said that internal opinion probes showed a strong tide in favor of direct election as a remedy for the rampant factionalism and for decision-making by the leading party officials over the heads of the rank-and-file.

According to some observers, this need is all the more deeply felt in that the congress promises to be crucial for the party's near future, especially as regards giving ministerial responsibility to the Communists.

Most estimates reckon that there is unanimous support for some form of broad-ranging coalition of national solidarity to cope with the crisis, but there also seems to be a clear majority, estimated at over eighty percent, against Communist participation.

At the start of the congress, the only factions that seem to be clearly in favor of Communist participation are part of "Zac's Friends" and the supporters of Andreotti, but there also appears to be a small majority, estimated at about sixty percent, in favor of a government with the socialists and the other minor parties.

The new wave of international tension that has swept the world is another telling factor in the congress' counsels after the decision to bolster the West's nuclear arsenal in Europe and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

On this latter point, the Christian Democrats have called for a closing of the Atlantic alliance's ranks, coupled with the search for a common stance among the European Nine.

SA CARNEIRO GIVES FIRST OFFICIAL INTERVIEW ON POLICIES

LD141122 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0700 GMT 14 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Prime Minister Sa Carneiro last night spoke of his government and its political philosophy in his first interview with the media since taking office.

Speaking by invitation on Radio Renascenca, the prime minister said that his cabinet had shown that it does not fear taking stands nor that it would allow itself to be drawn into party political wrangles.

Voicing support for the foreign policy outlined by Freitas do Amaral, Sa Carneiro said that it was in fact a policy fully adopted by the government as a whole. It was up to the cabinet, he said, to conduct Portugal's diplomacy.

Dwelling at length on the Portuguese standard of living, Sa Carneiro assured that in principle his cabinet did not contemplate introducing further increases in the price of essential commodities or fuel.

It was the first time in Portugal, he said, that the country's currency exchange policy had been determined by the government and not through foreign pressures. The prime minister said that no new agreement with the International Monetary Fund would be signed this year.

[Excerpts] The government will not allow itself to be drawn into political wrangles among the parties. This is one of the remarks which Prime Minister Sa Carneiro made in an interview with Radio Renascenca. As his scheduled appearance on Portuguese television was postponed, Sa Carneiro accepted an invitation from the radio of the Portuguese Catholic Church so that, as he put it, his first interview since taking office could be given to the Portuguese media.

On international matters, he said the government was faced with issues resulting from the march of events, taking place almost simultaneously with its assumption of office. Thus the first official condemnation of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan appeared in his swearing-in speech.

The president of the republic represents the country, the state and the republic, internally and externally, but it is up to the government to conduct policy. There is neither controversy nor confrontation. But there are persons who are interested in provoking controversies and confrontations. Right from the outset the attitude of the president of the republic and the government has been based on a desire for constructive relations.

Answering another question, the prime minister stressed that there is no such thing as a policy of the foreign minister, but rather the government's policy--and the government is ultimately the prime minister's responsibility. He stressed that as head of state and as chief of staff of the armed forces, the president of the republic had every right to take a stand both on NATO and Europe, but added that it is within the government's competence and responsibility to conduct the country's policy.

He said that if the president lost his confidence in the government tomorrow, he could dismiss it, but as long as he did not act in this way it was up to the government to conduct the country's domestic and foreign policy, without any dependence on any other organ of sovereignty.

Having come to power on the basis of an electoral choice, the government will carry out its mandate to the end of its term and will not resign. If dismissed by the president or the Assembly of the Republic, Sa Carneiro said he would not form another government because in his ministerial team all are united. All of his government's members have only a single policy which they all share, and as the ultimate responsibility for this policy rests with the prime minister, there is no chance for any one to divide the team.

With regard to policy toward Portuguese-speaking African countries, particularly Angola--a country specifically mentioned by one of the interviewers--the prime minister declared that such relations should be conducted on a state-to-state basis. As the head of the executive, he was concerned neither with the MPLA nor with UNITA, but with the Angolan state and people. Thus he rejected the idea that relations with any country could be dealt with at the political party level.

The UNITA issue is an Angolan problem which the Angolans themselves should resolve and one which we, he said, will follow as attentively as we ought to follow all the problems of Angola, Mozambique, Cape Verde, Sao Tome and Principe, and Guinea Bissau. We will never ever accept the idea that a political party can serve as a channel in interstate relations.

The policy of rapprochement toward Africa--which is in both Africa's and Europe's interest--has a priority in our foreign policy. But even there, as in everything else, we must defend the interests of the Portuguese. We should never accept internal interference and not even consider external interference.

On the question of the revaluation of the escudo, the prime minister spoke of the subsequent improvement in the balance of payments deficit and in the balance of current transactions. He said that the measure was a political decision, courageous and necessary, taken by the cabinet on its own and not dictated by external (?pressures) or conditions. It was a symbolic and major act of national reconstruction that has contributed to alleviating inflation, the root cause of inequality and a worsening of social justice. The government expected to arrest (?creeping) inflation even further, thus setting off a period of recuperation for the country's economy.

COUTINHO SUMS UP VISIT BY PRC DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER

LD141754 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 14 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The deputy foreign minister of the People's Republic of China said yesterday that he was convinced that his visit would produce positive results in the near future. In an airport statement prior to his departure from Lisbon, Mr Zhang Wenjin said that although it was a brief visit he could not fail to say a word of praise for the country's beauty and warmhearted people.

Without elaborating, the Chinese deputy minister admitted an interest in Portugal's foreign policy matters.

During his stay in the country, the visiting minister had an audience with President Ramalho Eanes and held talks with the secretary of state for foreign affairs.

Mr Azevedo Coutinho, the Portuguese secretary of state, who bade farewell to the Chinese deputy minister at Lisbon Airport, summed up the talks: He disclosed that Portugal and China are preparing to sign cooperation agreements in trade, cultural, economic, technical and scientific fields. Azevedo Coutinho said that he was hopeful of an increase in trade and technological exports to the PRC, adding that Portugal has something to give as well as to receive.

In conclusion, Mr Azevedo Coutinho said that China's main preoccupations in international matters were those connected with the Soviet Union's conduct.

Official sources at the Portuguese Foreign Ministry last night disclosed that the president of the republic, Gen Ramalho Eanes, has accepted an invitation to visit the PRC, but up until midmorning today the office of the president had not confirmed the report. The invitation had been conveyed to Gen Ramalho Eanes by the PRC deputy foreign minister. It was Azevedo Coutinho who disclosed the conveying and acceptance of the invitation.

PAPER CITES SUAREZ ON IRAQ VISIT, OIL DELIVERIES

LD141509 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 13 Feb 80 p 14 LD

[Alberto Miguez dispatch: "Iraq To Increase Its Oil Exports to Spain 40 Percent"]

[Excerpt] Baghdad, 12 February--Despite everything, there are no surprises at all at the conclusion of Spanish Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez' visit to Iraq--a visit which seemed difficult from the outset, following King Hassan of Morocco's "interference."

Suarez dramatically announced on board the aircraft taking us to Amman that Iraq had agreed to grant an oil quota 40 percent greater than last year's to cover possible shortfalls in supplies to our country. This increase in the quota allocated by Iraq amounts to about a further 2.5 million tons to be added to the 5 million tons definitively negotiated in 1979. According to Suarez, we will thus be in an excellent position to tackle the problem of supplies in 1980, although 2 or 3 million tons have still to be negotiated. Spain will very probably have to turn to Saudi Arabia--a country which Suarez will be visiting in about 2 months--to secure them.

The Ministry of Trade experts had set their requirements at 3 million tons vis-a-vis the Iraqi oil minister. The concession made by President Saddam Husayn to Suarez modestly reduces these aims, since an extra 760,000 tons, payable at the new price (an additional $2 per barrel), had already been approved in January.

Prime Minister Suarez--who held a lengthy and informal conversation with journalists on board the DC-8 taking us to Amman--said that there had also been substantial concessions in other economic sectors. For instance, the Iraqi Government approved a $90 million housing construction project submitted by Spanish construction enterprises.

And it also seems prepared to give the go-ahead to another $150 million project for communications and telephones submitted by Standard Electrica--a subsidiary of Transnaco ITT.

Points of Agreement

According to Adolfo Suarez, these economic concessions demonstrate the priority which the Iraqi Government gives to Spain and reflect the excellent relations existing between the two countries.

"In fact, our points of agreement on political issues are considerable," the Spanish prime minister also said, "both on purely Arab and on international issues."

Saddam Husayn--who "is acquainted with the Spanish domestic situation, and so I did not need to explain it to him"--attributes considerable importance to the role which Spain could play in the European-Arab and North-South dialogs--a role comparable only with that of France, a country which Iraq recognizes as having "an independent foreign policy," and with which it has large-scale and close economic relations. The Iraqi president explained to Suarez the significance of the recently published "Eight Points for Arab Unity," which make Baghdad the propagating center of pan-Arabism and Saddam the emerging leader of the new nonalined movement. "Iraq's leading role in this field is increasing," asserted Suarez, who for his party attempted to deny a leading role of his own and to reject the role of "mediator" attributed to him by some people.

"The United States does not need us to mediate on its behalf, but we took the opportunity to explain some of our ally's stands to our Iraqi friends," the Spanish prime minister also stated.

With respect to the issue of the Sahara, "there is complete agreement that the solution cannot be a military one," and the "Eight-Point Program" put forward by Husayn could serve King Hassan as an emergency exit or subterfuge for achieving a negotiated solution in the future. Both Hassan and the king of Jordan have hastened to espouse the letter and spirit of the "Iraqi Manifesto." This support and Hassan's rapid visit to Baghdad delayed the meeting between Suarez and Saddam for several hours.

Regular Contacts

But, as the Spanish prime minister himself admitted to me, "the conversation with Saddam was easy and cordial. We hit it off immediately, and that does not always happen to me. The dialog lasted over 4 hours, not including the dinner. We agreed to maintain regular contacts. The most important aspect of this kind of visit is becoming directly acquainted with the leaders and the problems."

ABC CITES PSOE CRITICISM OF LUNS' 'INTERFERENCE'

LD121607 Madrid ABC in Spanish 9 Feb 80 p 9 LD

[Unattributed report: "PSOE Accuses Luns of 'Interference' in Our Politics"]

[Text] The Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] yesterday accused Atlantic alliance Secretary General Joseph Luns of "irresponsibility" and "interference" in our country's internal affairs, because of the content of statements made by the Atlantic leader to the EFE news agency 5 February in Brussels.

NATO's top political leader stated at that time that if Spain submitted its application for membership, it would be "unanimously" welcomed within the alliance, and that the organization would agree to our country's application to join NATO being approved "by a simple majority" in the Spanish Cortes.

A press release from the Spanish Socialists described it as "an act of irresponsibility" on the part of Luns "to prejudge the degree of welcome which Spain would receive if its government decided to seek admission to the Atlantic organization."

The PSOE also regarded as "an act of interference in Spain's internal affairs on the part of the Atlantic leader the statement that he deems parliamentary approval by a simple majority of a possible government application to join NATO acceptable and sufficient," "something which demonstrates," the communique adds, "that Mr Luns despises the legal provisions and the appropriate machinery which should be applied in our country to analyzing matters of such gravity and importance as this."

GONZALEZ REJECTS CARRILLO INVITATION FOR NEGOTIATIONS

LD141451 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 10 Feb 80 p 16 LD

[J.P. report: "Leftwing Unity Is Not Alternative to Rightwing Shift"]

[Text] Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez yesterday attended a meeting of about 900 party cadres in the province of Madrid. In his lengthy account of the current political situation, he said among other things that the alternative to the current process of a rightward shift is not leftwing unity, while reaffirming the existence of an individual Socialist Party strategy.

Felipe Gonzalez stated that the Communists' current policy is totally at variance with that which they were upholding 1 or 2 years ago. He asserted that the PCE is split between a Eurocommunist strategy and the "Cunhalist temptation, which gives good election results." This explains the contradiction on the part of Santiago Carrillo, who proposed a rapprochement with the Socialists after the meeting of his party's Central Committee, "while the workers commissions and the Communists are devoting themselves to reviling and insulting the Socialists in businesses and on the streets, because of their responsible policy in the economic field, reflected in the workers' statute.... There will be no negotiations with the Communist Party until it behaves fairly and respectfully," the PSOE secretary general stated in reply to the indirect invitations to this effect extended to him by Carrillo.

With respect to the Union of the Democratic Center, Felipe Gonzalez devoted much of his account to analyzing Prime Minister Saurez's maneuver to neutralize--he said--an operation on the part of the right wing of his own party, which was intending to approach the democratic coalition with the aim of ousting Suarez. The latter, informed in time, took the initiative of the contacts with Fraga, and--in Felipe Gonzalez's opinion--the Basque Nationalist Party, convergence of Catalonia and the Socialist Party of Andalusia are also involved in the maneuver initiated by the prime minister.

According to Felipe Gonzalez, the Socialist alternative vis-a-vis this operation is not leftwing unity, since the overall maneuver embarked upon by Suarez will fail because of the "heterogeneousness of its component parts." The PSOE secretary general reaffirmed the upholding of an individual strategy in his party, and said that, even though others may change with respect to the Socialist Party, the latter does not need to change its strategy but to make "tactical readjustments."

The meeting held in Madrid yesterday falls within the framework of an operation launched by the PSOE Executive Committee, whose members are explaining the broad outlines of the Socialist strategy to party cadres in various provinces and regions this weekend. There has been a small bout of protest in the PSOE's critical sector, which believes that these spectacular mass meetings do not meet the requirements of information and internal democracy.

FINLAND

FRANCOIS-PONCET TALKS WITH VAYRYNEN, KEKKONEN

LD141134 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 14 Feb 80 LD

[Text] French foreign minister Jean Francois-Poncet, who is currently visiting Finland, this morning had talks with Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen. Among other things the talks touched on European security and disarmament. About 1 hour ago President Urho Kekkonen received Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet. During the courtesy visit they discussed the state visit by French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing to Finland in the beginning of June. Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet's 2-day visit to Finland comes to an end today.

Press Conference Report

LD141800 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 14 Feb 80 LD

[Text] French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet's visit to Finland has ended. Today he had talks with Finnish Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen and also met President Kekkonen. At a press conference this afternoon, Minister Francois-Poncet stressed the similarity of Finnish and French views on the policy of detente, despite their different standpoints. Vrjoe Lautela reports:

Since the time of President Charles de Gaulle, France has strongly stressed the independence of its foreign policy, and this phrase was reechoed by Foreign Affairs Minister Jean Francois-Poncet during his visit to Finland. The most tangible expression of the French foreign political line is that France does not participate in the military cooperation of the North Atlantic alliance although it is a member of this alliance. The joint communique issued after the French-German summit last week was regarded--in respect to the part dealing with events in Afghanistan--as relatively strong and both sides stressed the identity of their views. However, after the summit, French President Giscard d'Estaing explained to French editors that France continues to oppose the introduction of economic sanctions against the USSR.

At his press conference in Helsinki today, Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet did not wish to comment on French foreign policy but preferred to discuss Finnish-French relations. However, in an interview with Finnish radio he let it be understood that France does not regard boycott as a suitable means of effecting a removal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. But France does regard the withdrawal of the troops as a condition for the restoration of trust, required by a policy of detente.

Because of their different positions, Finland and France have differing views on international policies, but a considerable identity of views exists on questions concerning the policy of detente, Minister Francois-Poncet said. He felt that countries such as Finland, France, Yugoslavia and India could each in its own way play an important role for the relaxation of international tension:

[Begin recording in French] I am convinced that countries such as France and Finland, countries such as Yugoslavia and India, can act in today's world, each in its own camp, each in the framework of its own alliances and loyalty to these alliances. [end recording]

The French foreign minister said France and Finland sought to intensify their cooperation, for instance on the disarmament question. Both Finland and France have in fact made initiatives for more effective efforts for disarmament in Europe. Economic matters were also discussed during the visit: France's share in Finland's foreign trade was only about 3 percent and there was a Finnish surplus which France wished to reduce. France wished to sell electronics, computer technology and automobiles. Minister Francois-Poncet also believes in cooperation in wood processing and, later, possibly also in nuclear energy.

ISS DIRECTOR INTERVIEWED ON U.S. INVOLVEMENT IN GULF

DW150846 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0509 GMT 14 Feb 80 DW

[Excerpts from interview with Christoph Bertram, director of the London Institute for Strategic Studies [ISS], aparently recorded in London]

[Text] [Question] Are there any indications that the Soviets may reach out for Iran or intend to blaze a path to the Indian Ocean for themselves in some other way, as people in the West are fearing?

[Answer] I am still looking at the matter more in the sense of deterrence. I believe that the means, the military means cencentrated by the United States in the Arab sea above all serve the purpose of deterrence and of reassurance to the allies. It does not look to me that we have here the first stage on the way toward a direct conflict between Washington and Moscow. From the Soviet viewpoint there is no reason to take military action in the Gulf region against the oil supply of the West. The Soviets, too, are aware that this would practically mean war, and not just war in the Gulf but everywhere, for this, after all, involves the lifeline of the Western industrialized world. If the Soviets attack this vein, they would thereby trigger a general conflict, and they know it.

We here do not think much of the American statement that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan is the preliminary stage of another invasion against the Hormuz Strait. If the Soviets wish to become militarily active in the Gulf they could do that as well without Afghanistan.

[Question] Can the Soviet Union be militarily impressed at all, at least as long as the main point is to show oneself in the best state of armament and as long as no nuclear war is at stake?

[Answer] I do believe that the Soviet Union can be impressed. I think it can be most impressed, for example, if it is possible to make it plain in Afghanistan that its options of employing military means for political purposes are limited. In other words, if its reckoning in Afghanistan does not pan out. This requires two things: To begin with, this surely includes, the support of those who are defending themselves against this invasion in Afghanistan, and secondly, this requires encouragement to the states in the region to cooperate with each other and to bury their antagonisms. This would not necessarily be a bulwark against the Soviet Union, yet it would indeed be a contribution toward regional stability on which, after all, the security question hinges.

[Question] To what extent do you think the situation will be relaxed or aggravated if and when the United States occupies new bases in Kenya, Somalia, and Oman? News reports today say that the negotiations on the project are near conclusion.

[Answer] They are probably near conclusion. I personally am very skeptical that such new facilities will actually make the problem forming the basis of concern for the Gulf easier. Namely, the problem of the internal stability of the individual regimes. An enhanced U.S. military presence may well additionally weaken regimes which are not so steady on their legs anyway. Conversely, it is necessary to add that the United States, much more than the Soviet Union, is dependent on advance bases because of its distance from the region. If I am interpreting the news reports correctly, it is materiel stockpile locations rather than bases that are at stake, intended for the event a military intervention becomes necessary, when U.S. units can make use of these reserves. So this perhaps is the lowest form of military bases, and we can only hope that this is what they will remain.

PAPANDREOU, GOVERNMENT ON FOREIGN, DOMESTIC ISSUES

AT141548 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 14 Feb 80 pp 1,3 AT

[Text] PASOK Chairman A Papandreou revised the extreme positions he supported during the latest Chamber of Deputies debate at party leader level and, for the first time, admitted that separate positions on detente exist between Europe and the United States. Speaking at a dinner in his honor by the Foreign Press Association, Papandreou admitted his party does not want to break off relations with the EEC and stressed that during the plebiscite that he will hold when PASOK becomes the government, he will put forth the question: either accession or special relations. Last night the government spokesman replied to Papandreou in a mild manner. The main points of the address by PASOK's chairman and his answers to questions are as follows:

1--He underlined a divergence of positions between Europe, particularly France, and the United States. For the Europeans, he said, as well as for many American commentators, Afghanistan is only an isolated development, which does not threaten detente.

2--For the first time he mentioned Soviet interventions in Angola and Ethopia, adding that these were different from the ones in Hungary and Czechoslovakia because the first two were carried out through a third country, Cuba. He admitted that the Soviet Union does not appear prepared to be led to acts of confrontation with the opposing power.

3--He appeared closer to the positions of the Socialist International as adopted in Vienna and of the Islamic conference of Islamabad, openly condemning the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan as well as the exile of Soviet Academician Sakharov.

4--He admitted his party does not want to break off relations with the EEC but that it intends to propose an agreement on special relations. However, the context of this agreement has not yet been defined.

Detente and Russia

On other points Papandreou said that detente remains Russia's goal because it cannot carry the economic burden of the arms race. He stressed that the Soviet Union paid very dearly for its Afghanistan intervention among the nonalined.

He accused the United States of wanting a cold war and, within this framework, of stirring up the issue of human rights, adding that the climaxing of this issue started at Camp David. He also described as catalytic events the changes brought about in Iran and the decision to deploy missiles in Europe, which was blackmail for the Europeans. At this point he stressed it is fortunate that the Europeans, and particularly France, are separating their positions from those of the United States and playing down the importance of Afghanistan.

He then said the government, with its vote in support of missile deployment in Europe, had abandoned its multifaceted foreign policy. He also accused the government of hastening to return to NATO and not making use of its rights as a guarantor power on the Cyprus issue. At this point he demanded the opening of the dossier on Cyprus and denounced that the compromise being attempted in the Aegean leads to concessions of sovereign territory. He asked the government to inform the people and the Chamber of Deputies. On being asked his opinion on Turkish policy, he described it as the spearhead of the United States and NATO, which plays the role of a subimperialist power in the area. He also added that economic aid being granted to Turkey is of no interest to us but that we are particularly interested in military aid because it threatens the balance of power in the Aegean.

In reference to the question of the presidency of the republic he said PASOK has made its decisions but it will not announce them before Karamanlis announces his own intentions. At this point Papandreou stressed there is no government because ministers clash between themselves "with the prime minister trying to resolve their differences when the Olympic games leave him some time."

Government's Answer

Commenting on Papandreou's statement the government spokesman stated:

"In his statements to representatives of the foreign press, Papandreou once again proved he has lost all touch with Greek and foreign reality. Answers were provided to all these issues about a month ago in the Chamber. One wonders why he returns to them? A. Papandreou's observations continue to be unrealistic, contradictory and dangerous.

"1--He plays down the Russian invasion of Afghanistan and excuses interventions in Hungary and Czechoslovakia, describing them as internal affairs of the Warsaw Pact. The dangers from such a position are self-evident.

"2--Although he argues that the Middle East balance of power has been overthrown at the expense of the West and although he knows that Soviet arms supremacy in Europe is obvious, he denies the defense of the democracies through missile deployment, which will once again restore the balance of power.

"3--Papandreou criticizes the government's multifaceted policy and the independent foreign policy being followed. The government's foreign policy to date and its initiatives have proved it is not tied to any apparatus and that it is dictated by purely national interests. What the PASOK chairman criticizes is proof of the uninfluenced, multifaceted policy pursued by the prime minister.

"4--Papandreou criticizes the government because it abandoned Cyprus. He insists on ignoring the submission of five Greek appeals to the United Nations. He insists on this although he was proved wrong in the Chamber. There is cooperation between Athens and Nicosia. The type of cooperation was established by an agreement with the never to be forgotten Archbishop Makarios and subsequently with President Kiprianou in order to avoid misunderstandings and friction for which the Cyprus people paid so dearly in the past. The government believes that with its entire foreign policy it will be able to effectively help Cyprus by strengthening the country's own security.

"5--Papandreou for the umpteenth time returns to his well-known sloganeering about concessions to Turkey, about NATO pressures, about ceding national territory in the Aegean and about trisection or bisection of the Aegean. The Greek people are tired of seeing the forecasts of the PASOK chairman's being proved wrong.

"6--Nobody can follow Papandreou in what he says about the EEC because, as it is well known, he has so often changed his basic positions.

"7--PASOK's chairman speaks of elections and makes propaganda forecasts. It is, however, certain that whenever elections are held the Greek people will once again vote in favor of those who have both a higher sense of responsibility as well as more experience. The time for elections is provided for under constitutional time limits and there is absolutely no reason for speeding them up.

"The more Papandreou makes such statements on our country's foreign policy the more he will strengthen the government's majority."

FINANCIAL DELEGATION RETURNS FROM WESTERN AID TOUR

TA141940 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The Turkish delegation headed by Turgut Ozal, under secretary of the Prime Minister's Office and under secretary of the State Planning Organization, has returned home. In a statement at the Ankara Esenboga Airport, Ozal said that his contacts had been positive and expressed the belief that sufficient loans to Turkey will be secured within this year and the following 4 years.

He said: Turkey needs some $7 billion for its imports in 1980. There is a strong possibility that Turkey will secure Western aid close to that figure. Noting that developments holding promise for the future had been achieved during his contacts with the IMF, the World Bank and various other big banks in the United States, Ozal said that the economic decisions being implemented in Turkey had been received positively. Noting that, immediately after the economic decisions in question, a loan of some $222 million had been secured from the IMF through the intermediacy of two banks, Ozal added that an agreement had been reached regarding the renewal of the standby agreement between Turkey and the IMF. He said that this agreement was aimed at securing more aid for Turkey.

In reply to a question, Ozal said that at the moment it was not right to make any statements on the amount of the aid to be secured through the standby agreement. He said: However, this amount will be far greater than the one secured last time. Stating that a loan of some $500 million will be secured from the World Bank, $200 million of which will be allocated to programs [as heard], Ozal added that some $200 million of this loan will soon be transferred to Turkey. Ozal said that through work carried out to obtain foreign loans, until now some $1 billion has been secured and that this amount will increase in a short time. In reply to a question, Ozal said that for Turkey's economic policy to be successful, foreign aid was necessary for the next 5 years.

VOTCP COMMENTS ON CRASH OF 'U-2 SPY PLANE' NEAR SINOP

TA150914 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 15 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The patriotic forces reacted to the remarks by government officials that they know nothing about the American U-2 spy plane that crashed near Sinop. The patriotic forces described these remarks uttered by the foreign minister and by the national defense minister as shameful and ridiculous. A retired officer, who is also a parliamentarian, said: No one in Turkey can know from what base this plane took off, what kind of a plane it was, how many persons were in it and why it was flying, until U.S. officials disclose the information.

A few days ago, during the Senate debate on the budget, the foreign minister and the national defense minister said: "There are no bases in Turkey, only installations, and they are under the command of Turkish officers." This lie was exposed once again when the U.S. U-2 spy plane took off from a U.S. base in Turkey and crashed near Sinop. Flying these spy planes--which spy on our neighbor, the worker-peasant state, the Soviet Union--from our territory is aimed at undermining peace and neighborly relations in the region.

All patriots, all patriotic soldiers and officers in the army: Ask for accounts from the motherland-sellers and American lackeys who rent our lands to the U.S. imperialists and then claim they know nothing about what is going on.

Patriotic soldiers, NCO's and officers: Participate in the struggle of our people and of the progressive democratic forces being waged to tear up the slavery agreements signed with the United States. Participate in the struggle being waged to withdraw our country from NATO, imperialism's aggressive organization, whose target is the liberation struggles of the people and the socialist countries that want to live in peace. There is no room in our lands for U-2 spy planes, for U.S. and NATO bases or installations or for nuclear arsenals.

ANATOLIA REPORTAGE ON IZMIR INCIDENTS

Military Surrounds Mill

TA141539 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 14 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Izmir, 14 Feb (AA)--Over 10,000 gendarmerie commando units and infantry troops surrounded the "TARIS" [the agricultural sales cooperatives union] cotton spinning mill where around 500 workers have shut themselves in at Cigli, for a week now to protest their dismissal by TARIS management. The Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions "DISK" has decided to declare a general strike to protest the dismissals by the TARIS management. The strike is to start as soon as the military evacuates the mill.

Siege of Cotton Mill

Military units cut off the road to the airport which goes by the mill, removed two heavy trucks and a trailer blocking the main entrance as well as bales of cotton which the workers had threatened to set fire to, and took positions inside the yard by 0400 hours early this morning.

The commander of the local gendarmerie corps who led the operation [words indistinct] the workers inside they must surrender "unconditionally" without harming the plant [words indistinct] the army had not come in hostility to workers, but to fulfil a duty. He gave them two hours.

His units were supported by tanks and other armored vehicles, with reconnaissance aircraft hovering above, artillery accompanying the unit brought in from the nearby towns of Manisa, Foca and Bornova was turned toward the factory building.

Army units also took positions in nearby shantytown districts, while police units accompanied by panzers and wearing bullet-proof vests, waited at the turn-off from the highway to the airport.

Fire was opened on the police teams standing by from rooftops, and armed groups engaged them in gun duels, it was reported. A riot policeman was wounded by a bullet.

General Strike

Top officials of DISK met with local leaders of affiliated unions late through the night Wednesday and decided to start a general strike in Izmir, to be timed with the evacuation of the spinning mill by the military. The strike was to start in Izmir first, and might be extended to the Aegean next and to the whole of Turkey "if necessary."

The strike in Izmir would affect places where 38 affiliated unions have members.

The general services union "Genel-Is" [Public Services Employees Union of Turkey] with a large membership among municipal employees, first abstained from the decision to strike, but later joined it. Municipal buses were withdrawn from service starting at noon today. Municipal services in surrounding towns as well as Izmir would be affected by a "Genel-Is" strike.

Disturbances

Fire was opened on a municipal trolleybus earlier in the morning and armed groups turned off the ignition of several buses in Izmir. Others staged unauthorized demonstrations.

Student Protest

Students of the Aegean University campus decided to boycott ongoing examinations for a day to protest the siege of the TARIS spinning mill. Students were asked to return to campus Friday for a meeting.

General Strike

TA141545 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1530 GMT 14 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Izmir, 14 Feb (AA)--Members of 38 unions affiliated with the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions "DISK" started to strike at all places of work where they are represented in Izmir [words indistinct] the agricultural sales cooperatives union, particularly its cotton spinning mill, where 500 resisting workers were surrounded by large numbers of troops this morning. Union leaders had decided on a general strike of at least 2 days last night.

Several banks, whose employees are members of "DISK" affiliated "Bank-Sen" [Bank Workers Union] closed down. The Anadolu, Yapi-Kredi, Seker and Aydin banks were immediately affected by the strike.

Several hospitals were also affected, where members of "Saglik-Is"[Turkish Health Workers Union] kept up only vital services.

Municipal workers affiliated with "Genel-Is" [Public Services Employees Union of Turkey] were also joining the strike.

A union spokesman said they would not wait for the outcome of the current siege of the TARIS spinning mill to start their protest strike.

Evacuation of Mill

TA141657 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1630 GMT 14 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Izmir, 14 Feb (AA)--Commando troops gendarmerie and infantry units of the army, which had surrounded the "TARIS" [the Agricultural Sales Cooperatives Union] cotton spinning mill Cigli, early this morning, started to move into the premises shortly after 1500 hours this afternoon to evacuate the group of around 500 workers who had shut themselves in for a week to protest their dismissal by Taris management.

Supported by armored vehicles, the troops moved in four columns through the iron gates crashed open by panzers. There were reports of spot clashes inside the mill. Officials said the workers inside had set fire to bales of cotton they had set up as barricades, but the troops carried the burning bales out with large hooks.

A number of workers were seen coming out of the mill with their hands up. The gendarmerie colonel commanding the operation, stopped all firing as the workers came out. He told reporters a small number of militants were still inside.

Labor Leader Justifies Strike

The regional representative of the Confederation of Revolutionary Workers Unions "DISK" claimed the strike started by affiliated unions in Izmir today was "not aimed against the state" or "its armed forces" but was in fact "the exercise of a constitutional right" in support of the "justified grievances" of workers.

The truly powerful state, he commented, is one which watches out for its citizens, but those currently in power were conducting "an armed attack on citizens" and failing to implement the law he claimed.

Meanwhile, employees of Izmir hospitals went on a strike today to protest the TARIS incident in line with a DISK (Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions) call.

ASSEMBLY COUNCIL MEETS TO DISCUSS 'RECENT INCIDENTS'

TA140814 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 14 Feb 80 TA

[Text] National Assembly President Cahit Karakas said that all political party groups share the same view, that the parliament should be more effective and should do more comprehensive work in the face of the incidents that have been taking place in the country for some time.

In a statement to reporters after the National Assembly Consultative Council meeting, which convened to discuss the recent incidents, Karakas said that he and all the other members of parliament were concerned over the regrettable incidents that have been occurring in the country for some time. Noting that he had called the Consultative Council into session to evaluate the regrettable incidents, which have reached new and larger dimensions recently, and to show the effectiveness of parliament, Karakas said: I believe that, in their speeches and attitudes during the discussion of the budget in the Assembly, which will begin on Saturday--which, in a way, will have the significance of an interpellation--the parties will dwell on these issues and will once more prove that the parliament has the composition and power to overcome all these incidents. In reply to a question, Karakas said that the democratic parliamentary system will overcome these incidents.

RPP National Assembly Group Deputy Chairman Metin Tuzun, Justice Party Assembly Deputy Chairman Oguz Aygun, National Salvation Party Assembly Group Deputy Chairman Hasan Aksay and Nationalist Action Party Assembly Group Deputy Chairmen Ihsan Kabadayi and Faruk Demirtola participated in the consultative meeting chaired by Karakas. Minister of State Kosal Toptan attended part of the meeting and briefed the council on the recent incidents.

DEMIREL GIVES REASSURANCE AFTER RECENT INCIDENTS

TA141905 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 14 Feb 80 TA

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel has said that the state is in control of the situation regarding the incidents which have occurred in the various parts of the country.. Demirel said: The state exists and is performing its duties. The state is sufficiently strong to crush all those who attempt to disturb Turkey.

Demirel replied to questions by reporters as he was coming out of the prime minister's office following the Council of Ministers meeting today. In reply to a reporter who recalled the general strike decision taken by the Confederation of the Revolutionary Workers Union [DISK], Demirel said that general strikes did not appear in the laws and that it was illegal. Giving information on the incidents which occurred in the various parts of Turkey, Demirel said:

[Begin Demirel recording] Calm prevails in Izmir now. The situation has been since this morning. Calm prevails in Istanbul. There might be certain unpleasant incidents concerning the closing or opening of shops. The state is in control of the situation throughout Turkey. Actually, the situation is not any different than what has been happening in the past. There is no reason for it either. There are certain people who wish to disturb the people. All the state's power has been mobilized against those who wish to disturb the people and those who wish to create panic. I have just talked with the governor of Istanbul. I also talked with the governor of Izmir a while ago. Everything is under control. Various bank branches were bombed in Kars this morning. The security forces are pursuing the attackers. One person was killed in Tunceli. [Words indistinct] under control there as well. In other words, there is no need to panic. The enemies of the state wish to cause unrest among the people. I accept that the people might be disturbed. However, we should be strong. The state exists and is performing its duties. The state is sufficiently strong to crush all those who attempt to disrupt Turkey. [end recording]

Demirel said that he did not want to comment on the issue of expanding martial law to Izmir and various other provinces before the meetings to be held by the martial law commanders and the National Security Council.

A reporter recalled the statement made by RPP leader Bulent Ecevit at a news conference today to the effect that human rights were being violated and various persons were being tortured and asked Demirel's opinion on the issue. In reply Demirel said: Where? In TARIS [the agricultural sales cooperatives union] do the workers have a right to occupy a factory and transform it into an arms cache? What does this have to do with human rights? Instead of provoking incidents any further let them [words indistinct]. They [presumably RPP] are continuing to encourage the workers.

ECEVIT ACCUSES GOVERNMENT OF TORTURE AND OPPRESSION

TA141608 Ankara Anatolia in English 1545 GMT 14 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara 14, Feb (AA)--Republican People's Party leader Bulent Ecevit criticized the Demirel government for alleged cases of police torture and oppression "on a scale unprecedented since the end of the Idi Amin regime in Uganda." Human rights were being violated by security officials or "bandits of the government disguised as policemen" who kidnapped and tortured innocent persons because of their political or religious beliefs, he told a press conference in Ankara today.

"Fascist criminals" were being allowed to flee from prison while at the same time security forces were "using inhuman and oppressive methods against innocent masses under the pretext of trying to apprehend or intimidate a few militant provocateurs," he added.

Ecevit accused the Justice and nationalist movement parties of having tried for years to provoke ethnic and sectarian differences and to "divide them into different camps as Sunniites and Alewites, on the one hand, and as Turks and Kurds, on the other," whereas "the Turkish nation lived in equality and fraternity thanks to the climate of equality and unity brought about by the Kemalist nationalism and laicism" for centuries.

Ecevit stressed that it was "no coincidence that attempts to divide and rule the nation reached its present dimensions at a time when an economic model is being introduced in Turkey aimed at establishing in the country a high degree of exploitation."

Further Ecevit Comment

TA141857 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1705 GMT 14 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 14 Feb (AA)--Ecevit continued his press conference Thursday to claim the Justice Party had become "integrated" with the Nationalist Action Party [NAP] demonstrated by the recent Justice Party communique, which "provoked domestic strikes at home, and cold war abroad."

Ecevit claimed those who feared communism should be pleased that democratic left RPP was attracting most leftist tendencies in the country thus serving as the major obstacle to communism.

He charged Justice Party with attempting to attract the whole range of the extreme right, from fascist to advocates of theocracy, and with "exploiting" religious beliefs in collaboration with NAP through certain organizations both in Turkey, and among Turkish workers in Germany.

The RPP leader claimed his predictions about the South Americans model were coming true. He cited the incident in Izmir, where the government has pursued workers into the lap of a handful of militants by threatening to take away their jobs.

RPP also wanted all terrorists of the left and right weeded out of all places of work, he stated.

Ecevit rejected any connection between his earlier call to workers to voice their opposition to the government's economic measures "under the law" and the "DISK" [Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions] decision to conduct a general strike.

VOTCP URGES SOLIDARITY, SUPPORT FOR IZMIR WORKERS

TA141139 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 14 Feb 80 TA

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee appeal issued on 12 February 1980]

[Text] Let us strengthen our solidarity with the brave TARIS [the agricultural sales cooperatives union] workers. The brave TARIS workers have been staging a glorious resistance for days. The Izmir workers went on a 24-hour general strike. This resistance has already won the support of the people in the Aegean region. The action of the TARIS workers is being echoed in all parts of the country. A chain reaction of resistance activities is being observed. The struggle power of the working class and of millions of toilers is being sharpened against the attacks of imperialism, of the monopolies and of the Demirel government.

An atmosphere of general resistance is spreading. Our people are increasingly realizing that there is no way but resistance against unemployment, inflation, unbearable taxes, antidemocratic oppression, brute force, fascist attacks and for jobs, bread, land, personal security, democratic rights and freedoms.

The workers who are opposing the mass firings, the efforts to turn TARIS into a fascist base and are against the monopolies' attempts to loot it are completely justified in their demands. The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] is on the side of the resisting brave TARIS workers.

The Demirel government has started a bloody war against the resisting workers and the people. He is sending the soldiers, the gendarmes and the police against the people with panzers, like an occupying army. The workers caught by the police are being used as living shields. The workers' quarters in the city are being raided. Thousands of workers, working women and children are being arrested and kept in sports stadiums.

The Demirel government, which only yesterday signed a slavery agreement with the United States and sold the country to imperialism, is implementing the plans of American banks, of the local and foreign monopolies by means of oppressive laws and at the point of a bayonet.

In the face of this bloody assault, the workers are completely justified in the resistance they are waging with their wives and children in barricades and in the factories they are defending against the class enemies. The Demirel government, which is the enemy of the workers and of the people, is responsible for the blood being shed. The reactionary and promartial law generals are responsible for the blood being shed.

The truth is clear. The government and the militarist clique are organizing bloody provocations in order to crush the workers movement and the democratic movement and thus place the load of the crisis even more intensely on the shoulders of the people. Not to fall into this trap and to keep the mass resistance moving in an organized and disciplined way, without slipping into adventurism is the motto of the day, the key to success.

The rightist leaders of the RPP who criticized the justified resistance of the workers as illegal are saying nothing about bloody attacks by the government and the brutes. All RPP members, all the deputies who are against the government's illegal brutality in this case: show your solidarity with the TARIS workers!

Sons of the working people wearing army jackets, soldiers, gendarmes, patriotic officers who say "we are not an occupying army," policemen who keep the memory of Yurdakul--murdered by the fascists--alive, who stood against the police chief who ordered them to fire: Do not fire on your brothers, your neighbors, your citizens. Return to your army barracks, to your police stations.

Workers whom the Nationalist Action Party [NAP] has been trying to deceive with promises of appointing them to TARIS: Do not fall into the trap of the fascists. Do not break the strike. Do not become the tools of those who will take away the jobs and bread of your class brothers.

The SEKA [Turkish Cellulose and Paper Factories Adminstration], railroad and textile workers who stood up to tear up the collective agreements signed by union leaders who are collaborators of the employers, hundreds of thousands of workers who are waging a collective agreement struggle against monopolies, city and village workers who are resisting against inflation, the taxes and the shortages, the teachers, civil servants and intellectuals who are fired and oppressed: Strengthen your solidarity with the TARIS workers.

The Aegean villagers whose cooperatives were looted by the local and foreign monopolies and whose produce was bought at minimal prices: Support the resisting workers.

All the national democratic forces: Hand in hand with the TARIS workers so that all the arrested workers are released, so that not even one fascist is allowed into TARIS and so that TARIS is protected from the looting of the monopolies. [Signed] TCP Central Committee, 12 February 1980.

AU141230 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1159 GMT 14 Feb 80 AU

[Text] In view of the current international situation, Chancellor Kreisky does not think much of new conferences. In comment on Polish party chief Gierek's proposal for convening a disarmament conference in Warsaw, Kreisky said at a Vienna press conference that the world has grown tired of conferences. What is needed in the present situation are deeds. Regarding the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, Kreisky said what happened in that country would leave deep marks in the Islamic world.

FRG'S SCHMIDT, MARTENS DISCUSS ENERGY POLICY

LD151620 Hamburg DPA in German 1159 GMT 15 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Brussels--Federal Chancellor Schmidt and the Belgian Prime Minister Martens agreed in Brussels today on closer cooperation between their two countries on energy. From German delegation sources it was learned that in their efforts to reduce their dependence on oil imports, the two countries are seeking closer cooperation on coal hydrogeneration [?liquefaction] and gasification--a field in which the Federal Republic plays a major role. Chancellor Schmidt briefed Martens on the progress made with corresponding pilot projects in the Federal Republic.

It was further learned that both heads of government agreed that the development of nuclear energy was essential. In addition, the chancellor and the Belgian prime minister had strongly emphasized the "imperative need" for a European energy concept.

Schmidt and Martens also discussed the functioning of the European currency system and the Federal Republic's efforts for more effective aid for Turkey.

German sources described the atmosphere of the German-Belgian talks as particularly cordial.

Joint Press Conference

LD151622 Hamburg DPA in German 1530 GMT 15 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Brussels--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt made it clear to the USSR here today that all attempts to separate the European allies from the United States were bound to remain "a very shortsighted strategy; they are futile." The chancellor added that this would be the case "regardless of whether these attempts are initiated by blandishments or threats."

Schmidt used the opportunity of a joint press conference with Belgian Prime Minister Martens at the end of his 2-day talks in Brussels to make an unequivocal declaration of solidarity with the United States. "We do not wish to leave any doubt as to our firm determination to master the crisis situation following Afghanistan together with all our partners in the alliance, especially with our U.S. allies," Schmidt said.

Agreeing with Martens, the chancellor declared that everything had to be done to restore the prerequisites for a continuation of the policy of cooperation with the East "which has now been damaged by the events in Southwest Asia." He also agreed with the Belgian prime minister in the statement that a policy of detente was not possible without a military equilibrium and "that the military equilibrium must be maintained and restored if a policy of detente with the East is to become possible."

The chancellor said that military balance and detente are two sides of the same coin. The solidarity and cohesion of the alliance are part of military balance. Detente and balance are indivisible. "If that is not the case, then an atmosphere of growing confrontation can arise quickly out of resignation."

Schmidt referred to his forthcoming talks with U.S. President Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and said: "We attach the greatest importance to these contacts with the United States for the relations between the Federal Republic and the most powerful ally of the West.

Asked by a journalist if he had really referred to Carter's policy as unpredictable within the SDP group in Bonn, Schmidt answered with a clear "no." The Bonn head of government praised Carter's stance on the Tehran hostage issue and hoped that "this policy of quiet steadfastness" would bear fruit.

Schmidt and Martens agreed that the attitude concerning the Olympic games issues should be coordinated between the Europeans. Europe is not under the pressure of time, the chancellor said.

Martens, who "fully" supported Schmidt's statement concerning detente, announced exploratory talks to be conducted by Foreign Minister Henri Simonet with states of the Warsaw Pact. Belgium, which will decide on the deployment of new nuclear arms only in the middle of the year, wishes to find out whether the East is willing to negotiate on arms control in Europe.

The chancellor indicated that the time is not yet ripe for realizing the European monetary fund: "If the objective is success, then we have to proceed cautiously and not treat the matter lightly," he said.

LE SOIR COMMENTS ON 5 FEB EC DEBATE

LD151305 Brussels LE SOIR in French 7 Feb 80 p 3 LD

[Serge de Waersegger report: "European Alliance Race in Face of Russian Pressure"]

[Text] A firm but open approach. This is the kind of sentence which is dear to diplomats but which, ultimately, is a fairly good description of the EC foreign ministers' meeting in Brussels on Tuesday. This Council meeting was characterized mainly by reactions to developments in Soviet policy.

It was firm because the Nine have undoubtedly increased their ties with the countries bordering the Eastern bloc: Yugoslavia and Turkey. It was firm because they discussed the prospects for an economic aid policy with the Gulf states and also because, with regard to the Soviet Union, the Europeans showed their intention to judge Moscow's positions not only with regard to its position in Afghanistan but also with regard to respect for the Helsinki agreements on human rights.

However, the approach was open in that no united position regarding the Soviet Union was adopted Tuesday.

The Nine postponed a stand on the USSR until their meeting in Rome 19 February. This applies particularly to their stand on the Olympic games. Moreover, since the situation is regarded as a "developing" one, it is thought that a great deal could still happen between now and 20 May--the final date for each Olympic committee to answer the invitation to take part in the Moscow games. A joint text will be prepared by the permanent under secretaries for policy in each country between now and 19 February. It will certainly be based on the joint Franco-German declaration signed in Paris last Monday but will be extended to other spheres--human rights, for instance.

Reactions

After the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan the EC, like the United States, felt threatened by a USSR policy which several governments regard as aggressive. First it condemned the move and then studied ways of protecting itself against the possible repercussions of such a policy.

It extended the criteria for assessing Russian behavior by deciding to judge it both on attacks on national sovereignty (Afghanistan) and on respect or violation of the Helsinki agreements on human rights. The Sakharov affairs is obviously extremely important in this respect.

The EC then tried to strengthen its ties with countries which, without being full allies, have no intention of falling into the Eastern bloc. This applies to Yugoslavia in particular.

There had been an agreement uniting Belgrade and the EEC for several years. It was centered first on the Nine's import of a kind of cow meat known as "baby beef" and, second, on the desire for free access to the Common Market for Yugoslav industrial products. The agreement had known cool periods, and the previous agreement had expired in 1978 without being renewed.

The deterioration in Marshal Tito's health in January suddenly speeded things up. Last Friday official talks started in Brussels between a Yugoslav delegation and the EC represented by Commissioner Haferkamp. Ways of reducing Belgrade's "baby beef" trade deficit emerged from these talks and also ways of reducing the exceptions which are impeding access to the Common Market by Yugoslav industrial products.

Things seem to be going well. So much so that the present plan is to initial an agreement 21 or 22 February and to envisage signing formal conventions in Belgrade in March.

Another case is the Arab-Persian Gulf countries. Several months ago French President Giscard d'Estaing had drawn attention to the fact that this is a good time for agreements between Europe and these countries. His call was apparently in vain, until 15 January when the German foreign minister raised the idea again since the Russians were in Afghanistan and hence within striking distance of the Strait of Hormuz. France would not seem to have been very pleased at having this idea suggested to it in this way. Nonetheless, on Tuesday the ministers decided to study the possibilities for economic and even energy agreements through their respective embassies in the countries concerned (Oman, United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Kuwait....) They will do so between now and the next ministers meeting in Rome 19 February. President Giscard d'Estaing for his part is due to make a visit to that part of the world in the next few weeks, probably in March.

Alliance with Turkey

Another main point on the Nine's agenda on Tuesday was Turkey. Relations between that country and the EC had definitely not been good since the Cyprus affair in 1974, expecially under the previous government. There has been a change of policy with the new leaders. They intend to revive the previous agreements which provided for the possibility of Turkey joining the EC after a long agreement procedure.

Turkish Foreign Minister Hayrettin Erkmen came to Brussels on Tuesday and agreed with the Nine on reviving the EEC-Turkey agreements, it being understood, in the spirit of Ankara, that these agreements would eventually lead to the membership procedure itself at a yet unspecified date.

Of course, it remains to be seen whether Greece's forthcoming membership on 1 January will complicate this aspect of the question.

Therefore, the race for alliances with the European Nine was started Tuesday but, being an obstacle race, it demands a great deal of stamina from the partners.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON USSR IN AFGHANISTAN

LD171156 Hamburg DPA in German 1113 GMT 17 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel believes the Soviet Union has improved its strategic position by its invasion of Afghanistan. Speaking on Deutschlandfunk today, Apel said that satellite reconnaissance had shown that the USSR had moved modern combat aircraft to airfields in Afghanistan which they had previously built there. The Soviet radius of action had thereby been strengthened militarily. Apel believes the redeployment of Soviet combat aircraft by night is connected with the problems in Afghanistan.

The minister once again called for a Soviet withdrawal. He said short-term countermeasures against the Soviet action were of no use on their own. "However necessary such measures may be, the really important thing is to develop a long-term perspective and to solve the region's long-term problems." A military presence is part of this.

Apel once again made it clear that there would be no German troops in the Gulf. This was not NATO's job either. "This is a task for the Americans." He also underlined the need for a division of labor in the West and for economic aid to enable the countries of the threatened region to strengthen their own resistance. Regarding the criticism of the German defense contribution, Apel said it was time to stop the pointless list of charges which were being bandied across over the Atlantic.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN DENIES SCHMIDT CRITICIZED U.S. POLICY

LD151420 Hamburg DPA in German 1242 GMT 15 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Chancellor Schmidt once again has emphasized Bonn's solidarity with the United States and stressed that the consultations within the framework of NATO and the EEC, especially with the United States during recent weeks, have become extremely closely knit qualitatively and quantitatively. This is how Government Spokesman Gruenewald commented at a press conference in Bonn today on reports that in the chancellor's speech to the SPD Bundestag group last Tuesday Schmidt had complained about the lack of coordination with the United States regarding the crisis in world affairs.

During a lengthy exchange of questions and answers, Gruenewald added that in a brief remark on the abortive plan for a conference of Western foreign ministers in Bonn on 20 February, the chancellor had merely expressed regret that in this instance it had not been possible to pursue coordination as one might have wished. Even U.S. President Carter believes there should be no repetition of the lack of communication that occurred in this case. Gruenewald described as "misrepresentation" reports that the chancellor had spoken of the unpredictability of U.S. foreign policy. Schmidt had not used this expression either directly or in a general sense. Despite repeated requests, Gruenewald refused to publish the text of the chancellor's speech.

Gruenewald admitted, on the other hand, that the chancellor had also referred to previous stages during which a clearer indication by the United States of its role would have been desirable. This was, however, not the case in the present situation. Moreover, in his speech to the SPD group, Schmidt had attacked erroneous speculations that Bonn could be deflected from its solidarity with the United States. He had also stressed complete agreement with the FDP and especially with Foreign Minister Genscher.

Press Comment

DW191222 Bonn DIE WELT in German 16-17 Feb 80 p 6 DW

[Commentary signed W. H.-E.: "Secret for All"]

[Text] The "secret speech" by the chancellor to the SPD Bundestag group was nothing but a simple situation report, though with the noted request for confidential treatment. This is what we have learned from the government spokesman. Judging by what he said, Schmidt's criticism of Carter was not criticism; at most he mentioned a "lack of communication," but he did not say at all that U.S. foreign policy is veritably unpredictable. A tempest in a teapot?

Let us rather speak of a glass house. If the chancellor, who criticizes Washington for a lack of communication, must let the heads of government of Belgium and Luxembourg tell him that the big ones in the EC--meaning Bonn and Paris--do not adequately inform or consult with the small partners, then critic Schmidt is sitting in a glass house himself.

What remains unanswered concerning the confidential speech, which was no such thing, are three questions: 1. How could Schmidt have proceeded on the assumption that a report he delivered to the Bundestag group would remain confidential? As a rule even the Bonn cabinet is too big for keeping the lid on anything. 2. Who of the groups comrades could have had any interest in chopping the chancellor into mincemeat through intentional indiscretions? 3. If Schmidt told the Bundestag group only what the government spokesman passed on to newsmen yesterday, we cannot help but wonder in amazement what is part of it would deserve the classification "confidential."

Schmidt could have used his appearance before the Bundestag group to give the public at long last a clarifying world from the chancellor regarding this situation. We have been waiting for him to do that a long while, but he prefers to continue playing hide and seek. Granted, he does some talking, but only in confidence, and then he denies what reaches the public as expected. This does not make the best impression.

GENSCHER ADVISES USSR AGAINST TRYING TO SPLIT EUORPE, U.S.

LD161422 Hamburg DPA in German 1239 GMT 16 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Stuttgart--According to FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the Federal Republic's solidarity with the United States is also the basis of cooperation within SPD/FDP government coalition in Bonn.

In an interview today for the Sueddeutscher Rundfunk, Stuttgart, Genscher said: "It would be an illusory for anyone to think he could separate the Federal Republic from the United States. The federal chancellor and I are in full agreement on this, and this is also the basis of our cooperation in the government coalition."

The federal foreign minister said it was necessary to warn the Soviet Union "against a false assessment of our intentions in the interests of predicting European and German policy." He came out against a "recognizable trend" in which Soviet voices were trying to persuade the Europeans that a policy of detente and solidarity between Europe and the United States were incompatible. It would be wrong "for any prominent person in Moscow to assume he could ever succeed in making the Europeans or the FRG draw a distinction between solidarity with the United States and detente." The opposite was correct. "The policy of detente calls for balance," Genscher said.

An edited version of the interview was prereleased to DPA today.

WARSHIP LEAVES TO JOIN FLEET PATROLLING OIL ROUTES

LD151830 Brussels in French to Africa 1600 GMT 15 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The Americans are not the only ones concerned with the protection of oil routes. A French corvette, specially equipped for antisubmarine warfare, left Toulin today for the Indian Ocean. It will reinforce the French fleet there which since Djibouti's independence has been patrolling permanently in the Persian Gulf, the Strait of Hormuz and the Mozambique Channel.

AID FOR CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC ECONOMIC RECOVERY PLAN

LD181251 Paris LE MONDE in French 9 Feb 80 p 5 LD

[Unattributed report: "Mr Raymond Barre Gives His Agreement to the Economic Recovery Plan"]

[Text] It was announced on 7 February in Paris that Mr Raymond Barre has given his assent to the Central African Republic's economic recovery plan, formulated jointly by the Central African and French governments.

The main measures concern adherence to the budget set up in collaboration with the IMF, a reduction in the number of civil servants, removal of fiscal and tax privileges, plans to settle the national debt, control of expenditure already incurred and the reorganization of state companies.

It is indicated at the Ministry for Cooperation that the French Government has decided to support this recovery plan by granting the Central African state extra financial assistance of Fr30 million. French technical assistance will also be strengthened in the economy's key sectors. Central African Prime Minister Bernard Christian Ayandho asked on 20 January for French aid to set this plan in operation.

CONSEQUENCES OF EUROPARLIAMENT'S OLYMPICS DECISION VIEWED

LD161038 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 16 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The European Parliament very clearly hardened its position yesterday in connection with the Afghanistan affair. It came out by a strong majority for an embargo on farm surpluses to the USSR, and above all, the European parliamentarians demanded a refusal to attend the Moscow Olympic games. Bernard Vallette comments:

[Begin Vallette recording] There is no doubt that this recommendation by the European Parliament will carry weight. It comforts the British of course, in what has been from the beginning their decision on an unequivocal alinement with the American position. For the Germans, it means a form of moral backing up, which is likely to cut short certain hesitations and certain states of mind by calming consciences.

There remains France. Simone Veil, president of the European Parliament, spoke personally 2 weeks ago in favor of the boycott. At that time, the official position was clearly in favor of participation in the Moscow games. Meanwhile, matters have evolved. The start of a move away from the official position was made by Minister of Sport Jean-Pierre Soisson when he said that there was no question of attending a spartakiad with only the Eastern countries. It must be admitted that after this European decision it is time for paths to be chosen. Raymond Barre repeated this on Monday: It is up to the International Olympic Committee to make a decision.

There still remains some time for reflection, but it should be said that matters are evolving. [end recording]

SWISS LABOR PARTY'S MAGNIN MEETS WITH PCF

LD151143 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 13 Feb 80 p 7 LD

[Unattributed report: "Meeting Between Swiss Labor Party and PCF"]

[Text] Within the framework of the good relations existing between the two parties, Swiss Labor Party Secretary General Magnin met Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz and foreign policy section member R. Trugnan at the PCF headquarters yesterday.

The discussions provided an opportunity for an exchange of views of the development of the international situation, the economic and political situation in the two countries and the development of relations between the two parties.

MARCHAIS ADDRESSES INTELLECTUALS ON EUROCOMMUNISM

LD181107 [Editorial Report LD] Paris L'HUMANITE in French 12 February 1980 carries on pages 5-6 the 5,400-word apparent text of a speech delivered by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais at the closing session of the PCF national council meeting on intellectuals in Bobigny on 10 February. Marchais discusses the party's fight against imperialism, the PCF strategy defined at the 23d Congress, the democratic path toward socialism and the role of intellectuals in the party. On the issue of Eurocommunism Marchais states:

"Our critics accuse us of abandoning Eurocommunism. This is outrageous. As I said on the eve of my meeting with Enrico Berlinguer in Rome on 5 January and as I repeated during our talks with the CPSU, Eurocommunism exists, is living and will continue to live as one of the major revolutionary facts of our age. Conservatives from all sides who think they can bury it by shedding crocodile tears over it are deceiving themselves. They are trying to reassure themselves by misleading people and themselves.

"Despite all the dreams cherished by Francois Mitterrand and the Socialist Party, Eurocommunism is not and cannot be based on the search for some impossible and unthinkable third path between capitalism and socialism. Eurocommunism is revolutionary. It is the answer which several communist parties, in full independence and in various forms, have given to the question of which is the shortest and safest path to socialism today in their respective countries.

"In fact, it is not the communists who are taking a tough line. Who is waging economic war by organizing redeployment, restructuring and austerity in the face of the workers? Who is aggravating the arms race and creating international tension? Who is waging an unscrupulous ideological war against the heritage of values acquired by mankind and against all new ideas? It is the forces of crisis-ridden capital. It is social democracy.

"It is not the communists who are alining. It is those who show allegiance to Carter and follow him in his aggression and adventurism. It is those who are pushing France into the trap of supranationality. It is those who signed or approved the joint Franco-German communique published last week. "This alinement is encouraging the American leaders in their arrogance. This is why they are continuing to exert pressure for a meeting between five Atlantic alliance countries in Bonn. I must point out that it would be unacceptable for the French Government to give way to this blackmail. It must stand by its opposition to this meeting."

ARMENIAN GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR MORE BOMBINGS

WA191330 Rome REUTER in English 1709 GMT 18 Feb 80 WA

[Text] Rome, Feb 18, REUTER--Two bombs exploded tonight outside the Rome offices of three international airlines--El Al of Israel, West Germany's Lufthansa and Swissair--and an Armenian nationalist group later claimed responsibility. The bombs damaged the airline offices, wrecked several cars parked outside a cinema and shattered shop windows. One man was slightly hurt. It was the third such attack in three months.

An anonymous telephone caller later told the Rome office of the U.S. news agency ASSOCIATED PRESS that the bombs were set off by the "Clandestine Army for the Liberation of Armenia". The same group had claimed responsibility for two bombings at international airline offices in Rome last December. Nine people were injured in those attacks.

"This is the last warning to the Swiss Government that it must not repeat its mistake and jail innocent Armenian citizens," the caller said. "We hit Lufthansa as a punishment for the German Government which helps Turkish fascism and thus helps bury our cause," he said.

"We must also not forget the role of Zionism together with Turkish fascism in the Armenian genocide of 1915. Our next target will be a painful blow in the heart of Turkey," added the caller, who spoke broken English. The Armenian groups say they are taking revenge for what they view as the massacre of up to 800,000 Armenians by Turks during the second decade of this century.

BERLINGUER DEMANDS SOVIET WITHDRAWAL FROM AFGHANISTAN

LD172036 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 17 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Florence--Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer spoke to over 100,000 people during the national PCI peace demonstration. Berlinguer openly condemned the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and demanded the withdrawal of Moscow's troops in the name of the intangible principle of independence and sovereignty of all countries.

Rejecting the American policy of retaliation against the Kremlin, Berlinguer once again said no to the boycott of the Olympic games, asserting that the development of democracy in the socialist countries is intermeshed with detente.

Italy and Europe, according to Berlinguer, must assume the role of mediator between the superpowers and develop peace initiatives together with the nonalined countries and the authorities heading religious movements.

Berlinguer criticized the parties supporting the Cossiga government, who take the view that NATO membership--which not even the Communists would question--involves uncritical acceptance of American views.

Reiterating the validity of the PCI's position on Euromissiles, Berlinguer advocated ratification of SALT II, the resumption of negotiations on missiles in Europe and the reduction of conventional weapons, also in view of the Madrid conference on development and cooperation in Europe. The European ideal, said Berlinguer, must be accepted on its own by the workers' and people's movement.

CHRISTIAN DEMOCRATIC PARTY 14TH CONGRESS OPENS

LD152208 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 15 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] Benigno Zaccagnini has submitted a lengthy report to the 14th Christian Democratic Party [DC] Congress. A report by Angelo Haver:

Zaccagnini opened the 14th DC Congress about an hour ago. The congress is being held during a grave and tense situation, the extent of which can be seen by everyone: by the thousands of people gathered here at the Sports Palace in Rome which is guarded by armed police, mobile patrols and even helicopters. This gravity and tension has been repeatedly emphasized in the speech of the DC secretary general. It was noted that in the history of the Scudo Crociato [Christian Democratic emblem], this is the first congress to be held without Aldo Moro, or as Zaccagnini put it, with this immense vacuum. The picture of Moro stands alongside the pictures of Sturzo and De Gasperi behind the central platform, above which is stretched a banner which states: Christian Democracy, with its tradition and values, is renovating Italian society.

The participants include 1,218 delegates representing about 1+ million voters; 50 party and trade union delegations; 120 foreign delegations; 30 delegations from the diplomatic corps; and 300 accredited journalists, including 250 foreign correspondents--a total of 2,760 participants. Guests of honor include 30 journalists, cultural workers, local administrators and people who have been wounded in terrorist attacks. The first point dealt with by Zaccagnini was indeed the problem of terrorism. The DC secretary general movingly recalled the tormenting phases of Moro's sacrifice and reiterated the validity of the decision not to negotiate with the Red Brigades.

At this point, Zaccagnini's report--comprising some 160 typewritten pages--developed a thorough and detailed analysis of the social and economic problems of the country and of the known problems of governability and relations with other democratic political forces. Bonella, who was elected congress chairman, formally opened the congress and recalled the civil, political and party commitments honored by Moro, Piersanti Mattarella and Bachelet.

Zaccagnini Address

LD152346 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2000 GMT 15 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The 14th Congress of the Christian Democratic Party [DC] opened with a report by Secretary Zaccagnini. Here is a report by Angelo Haver:

Zaccagnini has now been speaking for about 3 hours. His report has explored all crisis points inside and outside our country. The analysis of the phenomenon of terrorism occupied a large part of the report and one can understand how moving and painful it was, not only for Zaccagnini, to recall Moro's death and, at the same time, the firm and difficult defense of the decision which the Christian Democrats made, together with other democratic political forces, to reject negotiations with the Red Brigades. Zaccagnini also asked that there be no yielding to those both known and unknown who are responsible for what he termed an attempt to subvert our institutions. As for the way to defeat terrorism, Zaccagnini said:

[Begin Zaccagnini recording] Let me say right away that no initiative should be spared to remove the consequences of the acts of force of an expansionist policy such as the one in Afghan [prolonged applause], or the violations of the elementary norms of international law, as in Iran [applause], or the repressive measures which contradict the Helsinki Agreements, as in the case of the arrest and deportation without trial of the courageous Soviet Academician Sakharov. [prolonged applause] [end recording]

As you heard, according to Zaccagnini foreign policy is one of the keys which can reopen a constructive dialog between political forces. Here the reference to the responsibility of the Soviet initiatives was extremely clear, as was the reconfirmation of solidarity with the United States and the need for a policy of peace, which has no alternative to detente.

Zaccagnini's report contained an ample, thorough and detailed examination of the social and political problems of the country. Zaccagnini sounded a severe warning about trade union policies. The DC secretary became preoccupied with the renewed intertwining relationship between the party and trade unions within the historic left, and said that the problem of self-regulation of strikes in the public services could no longer be ignored.

At this moment, Zaccagnini is dealing with the crucial point of governability of the country and the relations with other democratic political forces. Let us hear what Zaccagnini is saying:

[Begin Zaccagnini, live] Solidarity among all democrats is necessary for the defense of institutions, especially the parliamentary institutions which are threatened by an obstructionism directed against the system and which may result in legislative paralysis. This must be fought by all available democratic means, including an urgent modification of the parliamentary rules. Also, to deal with the problems of the economic revival crisis, which I talked about extensively earlier, the emergency is of such a nature that it requires maximum covergence based on clear choices and consistent behavior. [end Zaccagnini]

In essence Zaccagnini maintains that it is necessary to evaluate the real possibilites of reconstituting a policy of national solidarity, the extent and intensity of which can only depend on the extent and intensity of the convergence that can be verified on the questions of internal, economic and foreign policy. This is all for now.

'Communist Issue'

AU180903 Rome ANSA in English 0845 GMT 18 Feb 80 AU

[Text] Rome, February 18, (ANSA)--The ongoing Christian Democrat (DC) National Congress, which goes into its fourth day today, has practically brought Italian political activity to a standstill. The lower house and Senate will return to work only Thursday after the congress has wound up, and party leadership meetings have not yet been convened.

Political leaders are anxiously waiting for the congress' decisions on the "Communist issue"--whether or not the DC leaders and 1219 delegates will endorse a Communist Party (PCI) entry in the government. This central theme of the congressional debate has triggered deep contrasts and splits within the ruling party.

Party Secretary Benigno Zaccagnini's keynote address Friday putting an end to the DC's a priori bias against the Communist Party was followed by harsh reactions from followers of Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani, who even reject discussing possible alliances with the PCI. Party veterans Carlo Donat-Cattin, Emilio Colombo and Mariano Rumor are also very criticial of the Zaccagnini stance but appear more flexible and are trying to pool their factions into a "cartel" that would wield 18 percent of the congress' votes. The latter groupings view Communist participation in government as premature although they share Zaccagnini's analysis of the political and social situation.

The "Doroteo" faction, the party's second largest, is in the grips of trying to overcome the contrasts between its two leaders, Flaminio Piccoli (left-leaning) and Toni Bisaglia (rightwing).

On the basis of these first skirmishes, observers here are generally unanimous in seeing three distinctly different possible outcomes: 1) An open struggle for the party leadership between the left (Zaccagnini and Andreotti followers) and the right, with the "Dorotei" as the linchpin for a majority; 2) an alliance between Zaccagnini, Andreotti and Piccoli, with the latter becoming party secretary and the former premier [of the] party organization, with such a solution, incumbent Prime Minister Francesco Cossiga would have good chances to become party secretary, as would former Foreign Minister Arnaldo Forlani. [sentence as received]

But getting down to facts, the congress has still to solve the thorny problem of how the secretary should be elected--whether by the delegates, as Zaccagnini was elected in the last congress, or by the National Council, as has been traditional. A decision was to have been reached Sunday but was postponed to this afternoon.

Meanwhile, the controversy is still raging over the "intimidating" speech delivered by West German Christian Democrat leader Helmut Kohl Saturday. Kohl told his Italian colleagues "it is unthinkable that you can govern with a party which has the same ideological foundation as the brutal invaders of Afghanistan."

Commenting on the speech, Defense Minister Adolfo Sarti said the West German Christian Democrat Party (CDU) chairman's statement "is coherent with the view, at the European Christian democrat level, of the communist problem. "In Italy the problem is more complex because the PCI sometimes gives the impression that it is something different from communism. This is both its strength and its weakness. Actually, it is up to Italian Communists to choose, not the DC" Sarti said.

Deputy Secretary Ciriaco De Mita said that "Kohl understands well the German situation and less well the Italian situation" and that his "rather schematic assessment risks being abstract".

DC MP Giuseppe Pisanu said that "Kohl should go take lessons in politeness from Franz-Joseph Strauss".

Meanwhile, outside of the congress, PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer indirectly replied to Zaccagnini in Florence in a "national demonstration for peace". In his keynote address, Zaccagnini had said that one of the rigid conditions was that the PCI clearly opt for the West. Berlinguer reiterated his party's condemnation of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and said that he shares Italy's pro-Atlantic alliance stance but does not agree with the Italian Government's critical participation in NATO decisions.

With respect to this point, Berlinguer recalled that on the problem of installing new missiles in Europe, the position of the Communist Party was similar to that of the Vatican and other Western European governments.

NATTA URGES PCI PARTICIPATION IN GOVERNMENT

The PCI, said Natta, cannot shirk the task which the electorate has entrusted to it.

SOVIET REPRESENTATIVES EXPELLED; PROTEST REJECTED

Aeroflot Director

LD151538 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1500 GMT 15 Feb 80 LD

[Hector Arenas report from Barajas Airport]

[Excerpt] A few moments ago, the Madrid director of Aeroflot, Oleg Shuranov, was expelled from the country. Shuranov was accused of military espionage.

Shuranov, surrounded by special security measures, was taken directly to the runway. Several journalists had tried in vain to find out which gate he was going to pass through.

A Polish airlines LOT was standing on the runway ready to take him out of the country, stopping in Luxembourg and finally in Warsaw. Shuranov was escorted to the Polish plane by staff from the security forces and the police corps.

Another Soviet Under Suspicion

Ministry Response to USSR Protest

LD190004 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 18 Feb 80 LD

[Text] As far as the Foreign Ministry is concerned, there is no third Soviet man involved in espionage, a reliable Foreign Ministry spokesman has told EFE. He said that his department has not been told anything about this affair.

(Oleg Pityurin), second secretary at the Soviet Embassy, has said that the embassy is waiting for a verbal response from the Foreign Ministry on the case of (Igor Ivanov). But the Spanish Foreign Ministry considers the verbal note of protest sent to the ministry by the Soviet Embassy in Madrid in the wake of the expulsion of Soviet subjects from our country to be unacceptable and has refused to accept the note, particularly because of the terms in which the protest was made. Reliable sources say that it contained defects in form and substance, which are not customary in diplomatic contacts.

Impending Third Expulsion Denied

LD191103 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 19 Feb 80 LD

[Text] In connection with reports about the expulsion of a third person, who could be the political counsellor at the Soviet Embassy, (Igor Ivanov), the Spanish Foreign Ministry has said that these reports are groundless and that it is not true that the diplomat is under strict surveillance on suspicion of links with Spanish extraparliamentary leftwing groups. The Spanish ministry note adds that even if it could be proved that there were any sort of contacts between (Ivanov) and these extraparliamentary groups, these contacts would not be illegal as these leftwing Spanish groups are legal.

Meanwhile, Soviet diplomatic circles have called these recent events a campaign aimed at impeding relations between Spain and the USSR. There seems, however, to be prolonged silence in the USSR over this subject. Francisco Equiegaray reports:

Since the circulation last Friday evening of the protest note from the Soviet Embassy in Madrid over the expulsion of the general representative of Aeroflot in Spain, Shuranov, official Soviet circles--that is, TASS and the press, radio and television--have not made the slightest comment on or the slightest reference to the continuation of the problems over spy charges and expulsions, or orders to leave the country, of diplomats or other Soviet representatives. Observers here attribute this stand to a wish to play down the scandal or scope of these expulsions and these problems over Soviet representatives in Madrid.

SUAREZ DISCUSSES AUTONOMY, TALKS WITH VENEZUELAN PRESIDENT

LD171400 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0900 GMT 17 Feb 80 LD

[Text] At an impromptu press conference given by Prime Minister Suarez in the early hours of this morning after the dinner in honor of Venezuelan President Luis Herrera Campins at the town hall in the capital of Tenerife, Suarez said:

We take the view that it is much better to acquire autonomy by means of article 143 which, in principle, allows for very important measures of autonomy and gradually establishes the legal (?framework) of the new state which is being constructed from a perspective which recognizes the need for greater rationalization.

The prime minister emphasized: What we are trying to do is to achieve a state which embraces everyone, and the final objective is an autonomous state with autonomous governments which will have the maximum powers over the matters provided for in the Constitution. With regard to the resignation from the Union of the Democratic Cetner by former Minister of Culture Clavero Arevalo, Adolfo Suarez said that in any party individual members are free to make up their own mind. I assume that he will have given the decision serious thought.

Regarding his talks with Herrera Campins, Suarez said that they had reviewed the main topics affecting the world at the moment and the existing tensions. On relations between Spain and Venezuela he added that it is necessary to increase the level of cooperation between the two countries to the maximum extent compatible with the needs of the two economies, and, on a political level, it is necessary to strengthen our relations in all fields.

BASQUE NATIONALIST PARTY WALKS OUT OF MEETING

LD191118 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 19 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The Basque Nationalist Party [PNV] has walked out of the meeting to establish a front for peace over differences on two questions they considered basic. A spokesman for the other parties told our editorial office about the main differences.

According to this spokesman, the PNV wanted to insert into every organic law which enacts the articles of the Constitution, and which parliament has to approve, a qualification about the statute of autonomy for Euzkadi. That is, at the end of every organic law, it would (?state) what was laid down in the Guernica statute.

According to the same spokesman the second main cause of disagreement was that the Basque Nationalists wanted to establish the competence of the Junta for Security and Public Order through a series of specific points. This junta is provided for under the statute.

The parties which did not want to ratify this agreement believe that it will be for the future Basque Government and the juntas for security themselves to decide on their functions.

Euskadiko Ezkerra [leftwing Basque Nationalists] did not want to attend any of the meetings of this Front for Peace in Euzkadi as long as the centrists were not invited. The executives of some of the parties who took part in the negotiations rejected this as a reason for not attending the talks.

FRENCH FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS WITH VAYRYNEN, KEKKONEN

LD151415 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Feb 80 p 3 LD

[Amber Bousoglou Dispatch: "Restoring Confidence Vital If Madrid Meeting To Take Place"]

[Text] Helsinki--French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet arrived in Helsinki late in the afternoon of Wednesday, 13 February, and he began his visit by receiving the French community in the French Embassy. He then had his first one-on-one conversation with his Finnish colleague Paavo Vayrynen. The talks, which related to East-West relations, were continued Thursday morning before the French minister's audience with President Kekkonen.

At a dinner given by the Finnish Foreign Minister, Francois-Poncet said in particular: "Despite their different histories and situations our two nations share two characteristics which we regard as fundamental: a desire for independence and concern for cooperation. France admired your desire for independence when you had to defend it with arms. It has admired it just as much since you have succeeded in consolidating and demonstrating it to everybody for a whole generation in difficult conditions by choosing to insure that independence by your neutrality and the only valid foundations: mutual confidence. In this way you still control your affairs and, above all, are still free to be yourselves."

Mentioning the Helsinki agreements, Francois-Poncet added: "It is this spirit which, despite setbacks and new dangers, we must now work together to preserve with all the vigilance and strength required. We have not chosen weakness but lucidity and responsibility. Force has been used in Afghanistan. We say that this situation is unacceptable and must be ended. Confidence must be restored by those who have undermined it. This confidence is vital to detente and necessary if the Madrid meeting is to take place with useful results."

After mentioning President Giscard d'Estaing's forthcoming visit to Helsinki (2-3 June) which will be the first official visit to Finland by a French head of state, Francois-Poncet expressed the hope that it will help to "channel our respective efforts better and perhaps even to find ways of pursuing joint action in certain spheres."

Detente in Europe

Mr Vayrynen then discussed bilateral relations and paid tribute to "all aspects of France's policy" since it "constitutes a factor in reducing tension and strengthening the balance in the international system." He also said that he thinks the Madrid meeting must be "carefully prepared," especially since "the international situation has deteriorated." However, he pointed out, the situation in northern Europe "has remained stable and trouble free." This major concern of Finland's was expressed 5 February by Mr Kekkonen when he opened the parliamentary session. "Events which have occurred outside Europe's borders must not jeopardize the results we have achieved," the president said, adding that "in Finland's interests it is vital for detente to be pursued in Europe."

Jean Francois-Poncet's visit is the first top-level contact for years. President Kekkonen made an official visit to Paris in 1962 and a private visit in 1969. [Former French Foreign Minister] Schumann visited Helsinki in 1970 and Mr Forsa, who was then Finnish foreign minister, visited Paris in 1976.

BRIEFS

DIPLOMATIC DEVELOPMENTS--The president of the republic has appointed Erik Hellqvist, legation counselor at the Finnish Embassy in Washington, ambassador to Zambia, and Pasi Rutanen, head of office at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, legation counselor to the Washington Embassy, both effective 1 June. Also, Finland has decided to establish diplomatic relations with Upper Volta. The relations will be established at ambassadorial level, effective 15 February. WHEAT IMPORTS--The Council of State has authorized the Agricultural Marketing Board to import 100 million kg of wheat in addition to amounts decided on earlier. It was decided earlier to import 225 million kg of wheat this year, but this amount has been bought almost in its entirety. The Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry explains the additional purchase of at most 100 million kg, now decided, because of the uncertain developments in the price of wheat, as well as the uncertainity of obtaining it. The ministry also intends to increase grain stocks, which would not be possible from next fall's harvest, according to the ministry. The grain producers' organizations have opposed the additional imports and demanded an improvement in the conditions for producing domestic grain. Talks With Officials

LD171558 Hamburg DPA in German 1256 GMT 17 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Athens--Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer had discussions with the Greek Government in Athens today on questions of Western aid to Turkey and the situation in the eastern Mediterranean. Matthoefer afterward told journalists that the talks with Prime Minister Konstandions Karamanlis, Foreign Minister Yeoryios Rallis and Economics Minister [as received] Konstandinos Mitsokakis had been very harmonious. The Greek side has assured him that Greece was also interested in seeing stable economic relations restored in Turkey. Matthoefer is expected in Ankara in the evening.

The minister underlined the Federal Government's readiness to continue friendly discussions with the two friendly countries, Greece and Turkey, on "what kind of contribution to stability in this region is feasible." His trip to Athens and Ankara is of an informative character and will not result in any decisions.

Matthoefer said that in his talks in Athens he had expressed the Federal Republic's great interest in a complete reintegration of Greece in NATO, "which would strengthen the alliance (?further)." Asked whether Greece was also interested in this, Matthoefer replied in the affirmative.

Questions of German defense aid to Greece and Turkey were also discussed in Athens, but, according to Matthoefer, no details were mentioned. In this matter the Federal Government, would insure "that the balance and equilibrium are not disturbed."

Greek Foreign Minister Yeoryios Rallis told journalists that Greece, too, was interested in stabilizing the eastern Mediterranean. Greece had an understanding of the economic aid for Turkey, but could not participate in such an aid program itself "because we also have great difficulties and need help ourselves," even though Greece is in a much stronger economic position than Turkey. "We are not against Turkey," Rallis said. "We simply have bilateral differences."

In a private talk with Prime Minister Konstandinos Karamanlis, which preceded the conference in the Foreign Ministry with Rallis and Mitsotakis, Matthoefer passed on greetings from the federal chancellor to the Greek prime minister, "with whom he has particularly friendly ties" and holds in particularly high esteem. Karamanlis depicted the situation in southeast Europe from the Greek point of view, and Matthoefer briefed him on the efforts for a joint aid program for Turkey funded by the Western organizations--the OCED, IMF and EEC.

This afternoon Matthoefer was the guest of Greek Finance Minister Athanasios Kanellopoulos at a luncheon given in his honor.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN REPLIES TO HOLMES STATEMENT ON AID

AT151450 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 14 Feb 80 AT

[Text] In reference to a statement made before the U.S. congressional subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East by U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Holmes on preserving the balance of power in the Aegean region, a government spokesman made the following statement:

The Holmes statement, which expresses the U.S. administration's policy, confirms the obligation undertaken by the United States to preserve the balance of power between Greece and Turkey. This also fulfills Prime Minister Karamanlis' goal for preserving the balance in the area.

The U.S. official, according to an ATHENS NEWS AGENCY report, said the proposal for aid to Greece will be under the criterion of preserving the balance, as in the past, and means the United States will continue to supply military aid in the future in such a way as to preserve the balance between Turkey and Greece at a ratio of ten to seven.

The proposed amounts of aid, Holmes explained, reflect the estimations of the U.S. administration on the state of the economy and the armed forces of countries which receive such aid.

GOVERNMENT, PRODUCERS AGREE ON ANTI-INFLATION MEASURES

AT151552 Athens Domestic Television Service in Greek 1900 GMT 14 Feb 80 AT [Text] Prime Minister Karamanlis today chaired a meeting with representatives of the producing classes, who resolved to cut foreign exchange expenditure as much as possible without affecting production and to increase investments and foreign exchange revenue particularly from exports.

The prime minister also announced the allocation of special assistance of 600 million drachma to TEVE [Greek Craftsmen and Tradesmen Insurance Fund] from the 1980 budget.

A government statement issued after the meeting mentions the following:

Fifteen days ago, Prime Minister Karamanlis invited representatives of the producing classes and presented them with the two current basic problems of the Greek economy, which are also problems facing all countries: one--the problem of the balance of foreign payments and two, the inflation problem.

Dealing with these two weakness of the Greek economy, the prime minister stressed, is not just a job for the government but also a job for the producing classes without whose understanding and cooperation the success of any policy would be impossible.

The prime minister drew the attention of the representatives of the producing classes to the fact that consequences of the international economic crisis, so long as they are not dealt with through a common effort by all, will primarily affect the producing classes and the people and not the government, which is a simple transitory administrator of the country's affairs.

During the meeting with representatives of the producing classes the prime minister stated that the producing classes must agree upon the principle that handling these two problems of the economy is a primary duty for all and that the solution of these problems and the related problems of the various classes must be placed under this principle and must agree with this principle.

Toward this end he recommended: discussion of these basic issues with the appropriate ministers; discovery of solutions which would serve these basic principles and would be implemented with them; and restoration of legal processes for handling special problems which arise from now on.

The prime minister stressed: I have proclaimed that it is the government's wish to have firm cooperation with the representatives of the producing classes. I believe that a common effort will allow us soon to overcome with as little pain as possible the problems created for us by the international crisis.

Following this meeting, further meetings were held between the producing classes and the appropriate ministers based on the basic principles laid down by the prime minister.

A large-scale meeting was held by the prime minister yesterday which was attended by the appropriate ministers and all representatives of the producing classes.

During this meeting it was established that there is a common desire for achieving the defined goals. There was an agreement of views on methods to be implemented and on the nature of essential measures.

On the basis of this national agreement it was resolved:

1--To keep prices as far as possible at current levels, adjusting them only on the basis of changes in the foreign cost factors, to freeze gross profit for the entire year at the levels of November 1979 and to freeze prices for 3 months at levels prevailing prior to the discount sales period now in force.

2--To the degree that attainment of these goals is achieved, the measures in force will be replaced by others of a broader nature until the producing classes assume full responsibility for the strict implementation of the measures under the control of appropriate ministries. Under these conditions it will be possible in time to cancel import restrictions. In the interim the new system will remain in force.

3--Cooperation of the representatives of the various producing classes with appropriate ministers will continue for the purpose of solving potential problems of the various branches.

The detailed measures will be announced by Thursday.

The prime minister made the following statement after the meeting:

In view of the international crisis, a closer cooperation between the government and the producing classes is being inaugurated, based upon understanding, self control and more responsible participation by all in the effort to protect our foreign exchange balance and for combatting inflation.

Despite the existence of these two problems our economy maintains its drive, and the country's foreign exchange situation does not inspire concern. If, however, we do not adopt the necessary measures there could be a deterioration.

It is preferable to have a temporary and painless restriction than to have painful deprivations in the future. I am happy because the agreement reached permits optimism for overcoming the crisis with the least possible repercussions and for preserving our undisputed achievements in the economic sector.

SECURITY FORCES DISCOVER TERRORIST GROUP, ARREST MEMBERS

AT151218 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1100 GMT 15 Feb 80 AT

[Text] An underground extremist organization was disbanded by the Athens general security forces and many of its leading members were arrested. Some members of this organization were trained in the use of automatic weapons and pistols in a Middle East country, as shown by photographs in the possession of those persons arrested. Other members of the organization had in the past maintained contact with extremist organizations overseas. They had also been trained in commando operations and in the use of explosives and light weapons.

A statement issued by the Ministry of Public Order this morning states: Operating within the framework of investigating the recent murders of two police officers, the Athens security force on 5 February started investigating the publishers of the newspaper NOVEMBER, which is owned by a small extremist underground group known as the "Peoples' Front Initiative."

This small group was formed in November 1979 by leading members of the secret organization, Marxist-Leninist-Peoples' Authority, which has been in operation since the political change [1974] and which maintains contacts with other extremist organizations both inside and out of Greece. Among other activities this organization on 25 January 1980 circulated a proclamation under the title "The State of the Right Is the Terrorist" and took a position in support of the Pangrati murders with the two police officers as victims.

The Public Order Ministry statement mentions that preliminary investigation and evidence collected indicate the following: First identified members of the group in Athens are: Konstandinos Zirinis, leader; Isabella Bertrand, leading member; Kiriakos Khristofis, leading member; Khristina Makridhou, leading member; Vasiliki Sokratous, Thomas Kharalambous, Avyi Platsi and Anastasia Boyiatzidhou, members. The following were identified as members of the Thessaloniki cadre: Maria Anna Pasevski, Georguia Khatzakou and Elevtheria Makridhou.

The statement also mentions that searches conducted in private homes led to the discovery of extremely interesting evidence. Calendars and plans for illegal activities, maps of Athens targets and other specialized maps--including the area of the U.S. Embassy and the residence of the U.S. ambassador--were also discovered. Photographs of Zirinis and Bertrand, in which they appear training in the use of light weapons and pistols in a Middle East country were also discovered.

The Thessaloniki cadre was responsible for propaganda, distributing printed material and recruiting new members. Thessaloniki security forces arrested two members of the cadre who were transported to Athens.

DEMIREL SENDS DIRECTIVE TO GOVERNORS, OTHERS ON ANARCHY

TA151528 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The prime minister has sent a directive to public establishments and governors asking them to perform their duties against anarchy, terrorism, divisiveness and destructiveness within the rules of a state of law. The directive, which was signed by Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, states that the republic assigns common duties to the citizens and to the organizations that constitute the state and government in connection with national solidarity and unity. It points out that the institutions will remain republican institutions only if they protect their positions and duties as cited in the law. The statement says: If everyone carries out his or her duties within the law, we can have the peace we yearn for in our homes, in the streets, in the factories and offices.

The directive says that Turkey is faced with great treason and that the tranquility of the nation has been extremely upset. It adds that anarchy and terrorism have become a national issue: The issue of the continuation of the Turkish state and nation. It stresses that the attacks against the holy rights cited in the Constitution aim at destroying the Turkish state, the Turkish democratic system and the indivisible unity of the Turkish country and nation.

The directive says: The prime requisite of our duty is to be on the side and under the command of the state. Impartiality does not mean a lack of involvement in everything and everyone nor a failure to carry out one's duties. Conditions and actions in the state organization that encourage anarchy or that can damage the administration's authority and order must not be tolerated, so that trust in the administration and the administration's authority and effectiveness can be strengthened. To eliminate such conditions, all officials, and mainly our governors, must exercise their authorities and carry out their responsibilities--recognized by the existing law--justly and with determination. They must take preventive measures, begin to act immediately and establish effective control at all levels.

In his directive, the prime minister said that all Turkish citizens must be treated absolutely equally before the law, that the state services must be available to all citizens and that all civil servants must refrain from wastefulness, red tape and misuse of office. The directive also asks the civil servants to refrain from injustices and favoritism. It says that the government attaches priority to eliminating the citizens' problems and meeting their needs. The directive then lists 17 principles to which the public establishments must adhere.

The directive points out that even the smallest mistake by a civil servant in carrying out his duties gives rise to reactions that hold the state and government mechanism responsible. For that reason it calls on civil servants to work effectively and harmoniously in order to provide the best service to the people. It then says that all civil servants must adopt the principle of serving all citizens equally. The directive adds that the security and public order that will protect the citizens' basic rights and freedoms must be established effectively.

The directive states that the government is determined to insure the citizen's security of life and property, tranquility, peace of mind and the supremacy of law and order. It then says: A merciless struggle is being waged against those who want to divide the Turkish nation and destroy it from within.

Our aim is to protect the indivisible unity of that state, country and nation, to protect the republic, national security, general morals, the state's order and interests. Existing law and possible measures must be used most effectively to put an end to anarchy, terrorism, divisiveness and destructiveness. The administration and security forces must work harmoniously to insure that the law is fully applied.

The directive says that no electricity cuts should be made at night in the martial law areas, so that the fight against anarchy can be carried out successfully. It adds that in the martial law provinces, the governor must insure that the administration, the security organization and state establishments work harmoniously with the martial law. The decree says that everything should not be expected of the martial law in preventing anarchy, and the citizens must be urged to carry out their duties in this respect.

The prime minister's directive stresses that in the provinces where there is no martial law, the governors must establish coordination with the commanders in the area and fully exercise the authority granted to them by the law. The directive also urges these governors to check on the publishers that print divisive and subversive material. It recalls the necessity to follow closely the communiques on preventing anarchy, terrorism and subversive activities. It adds: These duties will be carried out for the state, nation and the republic. The state should make itself felt once again.

The prime minister's directive then says that all those who had been receiving salaries from the state, while at the same time taking part in activities against the state, must be removed from office immediately. The directive says that among those who receive their salaries from the state, the municipalities and cooperatives, there should not be even one person who collaborates with those who upset the peace and tranquility of the nation.

The directive also calls for a merciless struggle against bribery, favoritism, corruption, embezzlement, hoarding and black marketeering. It calls for preventing the use of photocopy, mimeograph and similar machines by illegal organizations in public establishments. It also urges the appropriate officials to check throughly the distribution and use of explosives in factories and construction sites.

The last part of the prime minister's directive says: The most important issue is to carry out state services with complete trustworthiness, honesty, frankness and sense of duty. I would like to point out with pleasure that the Turkish administration is a virtuous one. No shadow should be cast over that. Immediate action must be taken against illegal or corrupt activities that might occur from time to time. I ask all concerned officials to review their work in this light. I wish them success in their work which will be to the benefit of our country and nation.

DEMIREL CHAIRS MEETING OF MARTIAL LAW COMMANDERS

TA172017 Ankara ANATOLAI in English 1755 GMT 17 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 17 Feb (AA)--Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel Sunday chaired an 11-hour meeting of martial law commanders in Ankara. The meeting examined the security situation in areas of Turkey under martial law, and heard martial law commanders on measures taken to root out terrorism.

CHIEF OF STAFF INTERVIEW ON COMMANDERS' LETTER, ANARCHY

NC190802 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 17 Feb 80 p 5 NC

[Interview granted by Turkish Chief of the General Staff Gen Kenan Evren to GUNAYDIN correspondent Can Pulak in Erzurum--date not given]

[Text] Question: My honorable general, I cannot help asking you a question on a matter that concerns the public. For heaven's sake, what happened to that letter from the commanders?

Answer: Indeed, what happened to it? Apparently it has been lost in the confusion...

Question: It seems so, since it has not achieved its purpose...

Answer: Yes, it seems so, but that is not true. We are carefully watching the consequences. There are both positive and negative developments connected with the letter. Laws concerning the needs of our armed forces are now being taken up in the parliament. Some of these have been on the agenda for 7 years. However, though we may view this as a positive development, negative developments are far more numerous. What is your opinion?

Question: That is the general picture, but it is not so much what I say as what you have to say that is important. Those who wish to agitate Turkey have become intolerable. They relentlessly open fire on Turkish soldiers as well. I do not know if it is true, but one of the slogans written on the walls runs like this: "Stab the Turkish soldier in the back, but present arms to the Russian soldier." Have you not reacted to this slogan?

Answer: Had I been able to find a photograph of that inscription, you would have seen my reaction. Although we have searched the entire city of Izmir, we have been unable to trace it. No one in Turkey can say such a thing. Moreover, those who fire at our soldiers cannot be Turks. The enemies are now among us. We would have no difficulty in crushing them, but we do not wish to shed blood. We do not wish to punish the innocent in doing so. We are at the moment trying to restrain our impatience in the face of some events in some of our provinces, hoping that the outstanding problems will be resolved within the framework of the parliamentary system. But there is a limit to one's patience.

Question: Do you still believe that your letter will help create the expected conditions?

Answer: We said: The parliament, the political parties, the constitutional institutions, in fact everybody, should do what is incumbent upon them for the peace and security of our homeland. We are expecting the requirements of the letter to be met through normal methods. We need unity and solidarity now more than ever before. However, we observe that there are people who refuse to appreciate this fact.

Question: Do you contemplate making another move if conditions do not change for the better, if agitation continues and if those in responsible positions do not alter their attitude?

Answer: If we attempt another move, it will not be in the form of a letter. That is why we are patiently waiting and carefully watching the situation.

Question: How would you comment on the way the situation has developed in Turkey since the commanders' letter?

Answer: Very critical, naturally. Nevertheless, the authority of the state will be unfailingly restored in the long run. Let no one entertain any doubts about that. Martial law has been proclaimed but its requirements have not been regulated. This is what is being done now. If we are to subdue the enemy, the state mechanism must function in harmony. If harmony is not established, the outcome of our efforts is bound to be delayed.

Question: Where do you think the hitch is?

Answer: Let me cite only one instance: Thousands of fellow countrymen have lost their lives. Youngsters are dying. But none of the criminals has yet been penalized for it. Not a single death sentence has yet been approved by the parliament. If there is a general belief that the crimes committed go unpunished, how then can we prevent more crimes from being committed? Hearing court cases is slow, those in responsible positions are intimidated, while the parliament delays in taking action. That is why I stress the need for harmonious action.

Question: Do you think that the introduction of state security courts would expedite matters?

Answer: What we need is something like the independence courts [istiklal mahkemeleri] [established during the war of independence], so that the verdict is announced on the spot. It is only then that these criminals will realize what it means to revolt against the state. These people have nothing to do with the right or the left flanks or with freedom of thought or democracy. They are plotting against Turkey, they are trying to jeopardize the security of the nation and to disrupt the state. Offenses of thought differ from these.

Question: The public is tired of the malevolence of these people. Our fellow countrymen say "we have had enough." And now it is the turn of the shopkeepers to be intimidated. What do you say about efforts to force the shopkeepers to close their shops?

Answer: They should not close their shops. They should assist the members of the security forces. I do not see how they allow themselves to be intimidated by youngsters. They may indeed be intimidated. So am I. Probably you are intimidated also. But do we give in to intimidation? I wish to stress it again: Everybody must do what is incumbent on him and he must courageously take his place on the side of the state. The youngsters caught by the martial law authorities refuse to give evidence, saying instead: "If the revolution we are trying to make becomes a reality, our administration will put you on trial." Most of them refuse to talk. Some of them have for the past 10 days been refusing to disclose even their names. That shows the extent to which they have been brainwhashed and deceived.

RRP LEADER ASKS FOR MARTIAL LAW IN IZMIR

TA171933 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 17 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Republican Reliance Party [RRP] leader Turhan Feyzioglu has asked that martial law be declared in Izmir as well as other provinces where anarchic incidents are escalating. In an opening speech of his party's council meeting, Feyzioglu said that Turkey's problems cannot be solved through personal accusations or improvisations. Feyzioglu called for partisanship to be stopped in an effort to see the dangers and be vigilant.

Feyzioglu said that the National Savalation Party [NSP] was obstructing rather than supporting the government. He added that the NSP intention was to watch the Justice Party disintegrate as the RPP had done so that its turn could come (?to join a government).

Pointing out that Turkey's problems could be solved through Kemalist and rational measures, Feyzioglu recalled that his party had greatly increased its proportion of votes in the 14 October elections and stated that the RRP was ready for early elections.

ANATOLIA REPORTS CALM RESTORED IN IZMIR

TA171708 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1659 GMT 17 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Izmir, 17 Feb (AA)--(?Calm) has returned to the coastal city of Izmir Saturday after day-long battles between armed terrorists and security forces that left three police officers dead and scores wounded.

Police teams were still engaged in a house-to-house search of the shanty-town area of Gultepe Sunday morning.

The governor of Izmir, Nazmi Cengelci, said the mopping-up operation would continue until all militants were flushed out and detained. He said so far 226 suspects had been taken into custody.

During the mopping-up operation, police have seized 1 sten-gun, 24 pistols, 4 rifles, 2 home-made bombs and hundreds of rounds of ammunition.

In Bursa, one police officer was killed Saturday night by unidentified assailants as he tried to prevent a group of youths from hanging wall posters. Another police officer was wounded in the same incident.

SEZGIN SUBMITS 1980 DRAFT BUDGET TO NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

TA161749 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1635 GMT 16 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Ankara, 16 Feb (AA)--The National Assembly, lower house of parliament, started a two week debate on the budget of the central government Saturday. Under the Constitution the budget bill must be legislated before the end of the month.

The first speaker was Finance Minister Osmet Sezgin, who said that the government's new economic policies were designed to establish the distorted balance of demand and supply, reduce the distorted balance of demand and supply [as received], reduce the high rate of inflation, and give a new push to the investment drive, which almost came to a standstill recently.

He said the government was not thinking of freezing the wages, prices, dividends and profits, and believed in the dynamism of the private sector to help recover the Turkish economy.

He rejected claims that Turkish economy was now under the control and direction of such international institutions as the IMF or the OECD, or domestic and foreign capital sources.

Sezgin said the latest economic measures would be backed with financial credits secured from outside sources. Turkey has already obtained credit pledges totalling $1,395 million, and would obtain more as she gradually inspired more confidence abroad. He said agreement was also reached with the IMF for a $327-million loan and with the World Bank, for a 200-million program credit. Defending the new economic policies, Sezgin said there was no other alternative than introducing what was introduced. The economy was long distorted, and state economic enterprises had become too big a burden on the state treasury. The Central Bank had lost its functions and was turned into a simple bank financing the deficits of debt-ridden state agencies.

The minister gave a detailed explanation of the new economic policies and other supplementary measures like the new tax reform bill.

FOREIGN MINISTERS MEET IN ROME, PROPOSE AFGHAN NEUTRALIZATION

LD192024 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 19 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The nine EEC foreign ministers have held a meeting at the Italian prime minister's office. The nonalinement of Afghanistan was proposed. Here is a report by Maurizio Mengoni:

The mountain has not produced the mouse that everyone expected, but something much bigger. The Europe of the Nine proposes a solution of the Afghan crisis which represents an alternative not only to the obvious Soviet position, so far based on the eloquent language of tanks, but also to the hardline American attitude. Afghanistan, the EEC foreign ministers agreed today, must again become a sovereign, independent, neutral and nonalined country. The latter characteristic--nonalinement--represents the key point of the European initiative. Simplifying and even decoding the diplomatic language used also on this occasion, the Nine are proposing that the Soviet Union withdraw its troops from Afghanistan in exchange for a definite guarantee that no one else will profit by this withdrawal, neither the United States nor China. Furthermore, nonalinement is a term which presupposes a notable variety of possible political regimes, not excluding those of a socialist character such as in Cuba, Angola and many other nonalined countries. It is a further opening for Moscow. The proposal, put forward this morning by British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, and subsequently amended by FRG Foreign Minister Genscher and by the Dutch and Danish foreign ministers, was finally approved unanimously.

The value of the document is at least twofold: It prevented the Europeans from again becoming split on the U.S. request which, as is known, concerns a whole series of measures of economic and diplomatic retaliation against Moscow, including a boycott of the Olympics; and second, it restated the possibility of a dialog, if not yet real and proper negotiations, with the Soviet Union.

Much was said today at the prime minister's office in connection with the sudden trip yesterday by Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs Zamberletti to Bucharest, where he was received by Romanian President Ceausescu. Some people linked this visit with an attempt to involve those East European countries like Romania which are showing willingness to assume autonomous positions in defending detente.

Finally, the meeting of the EEC foreign ministers has opened a new chapter in the international crisis, thus giving some hope. The first response, the first verification of the validity of the European proposal, will come tonight with the arrival of U.S. Secretary of State Vance in Bonn. Tomorrow Vance will be in Rome and on Thursday in Paris and London. However, the most important reply will have to be given, of course, by Moscow.

FRG Foreign Minister Interviewed

DW200719 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1705 GMT 19 Feb 80 DW

[Excerpts from correspondent Kusch interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Rome--recorded]

[Text] [Question] What was the main issue of this conference, and what result was achieved?

[Answer] The main issue was the situation created by the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. On this occasion the foreign ministers of the nine states once again stressed the declaration issued on 15 January this year in connection with this problem. Thereafter we discussed how this goal could be achieved. In this connection, it was considered necessary that all states respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and nonalined character of Afghanistan and abstain from any interference in the internal affairs of that country. The foreign ministers believe that in consideration of this fact and in that spirit it ought to be possible to overcome the crisis in a constructive way through an arrangement that will exclude Afghanistan, which thus will become neutral, from the competition of the powers.

We believe that this political suggestion can open the way to resolve the crisis that has arisen, with the aim of ending the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and making the Soviet Union withdraw its troops from that country.

In connection with developments in Afghanistan, the problem of the Olympics was also discussed. On behalf of the Federal Government, I expressed the expectation that the Soviet Union will create the prerequisites permitting teams from all states to take part in the Olympic games.

Another important issue in today's discussions was the continuation of the European-Arab dialog, an institution we consider especially important, as you known, an institution that has been successful in regard to our talks with ASEAN states. We hope this dialog will get under way again, because it is of great importance for stabilization in that region.

VENEZUELAN DELEGATION CONTINUES TALKS WITH OFFICIALS

AU191515 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 17 Feb 80 p 2 AU

[Unattributed report: "Venezuelan President Ends Visit to Austria"]

[Summary] Venezuelan President Luis Herrera Campins left Austria on Saturday morning, 16 February, after his 2-day official visit. Herrera and his entourage were seen off at Schwechat Airport by President Kirchschlaeger and Chancellor Kreisky. During his stay in Vienna, President Herrera had called on President Kirchschlaeger, Chancellor Kreisky and People's Party Chairman Alois Mock in his capacity as chairman of the European-Democratic Union. Herrera also visited the OPEC Secretariat General.

"His talks in Vienna focused on questions of bilateral economic cooperation, the experiences of the president during his visits to the Arab OPEC countries, as well as problems of the North-South dialog. At a press conference on Friday evening Herrera reported that in the Arab countries his view was widely shared that a fixed oil price would be more reasonable." On Friday evening President and Mrs Kirchschlaeger gave a dinner in honor of President Herrera Campins and his wife.

Staribacher Negotiations on Oil

AU191512 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 16 Feb 80 p 6 AU

[Hans Dibold report: "Staribacher Negotiates on Direct Deliveries: Crude Oil From Venezuela for the Austrian Oil Administration"]

[Excerpts] "The talks are taking a favorable course," Trade Minister Staribacher told ARBEITER-ZEITUNG. Within the framework of Venezuelan President Herrera Campins' official visit Staribacher has been negotiating on direct purchases of crude oil by the Austrian Oil Administration [OEMV]. "The quantities are substancial, though not quite as high as those Kreisky was promised in Saudi Arabia."

The aim of Staribacher's negotiations on behalf of the OEMV is long-term delivery contracts. It is true that the price of Venezuelan oil is higher than that of Saudi Arabian oil, but in the past the OEMV was exclusively dependent on high-price suppliers (Iraq, Soviet Union). Chamber of Labor energy expert Maurer declares in the latest issue of the periodical HEUTE that in the past international companies, especially ESSO and Mobil, supplied only rather small quantities of the relatively inexpensive Saudi Arabian oil to Austria: "Having been compelled to buy from high-price countries, in 1978 and 1979 we had to pay nearly 700 million schillings more for oil than we would have had to pay otherwise."

VANCE IN BONN FOR TALKS WITH SCHMIDT, GENSCHER

LD200930 Hamburg DPA in German 0821 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance today continued his talks in Bonn with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on the West's reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Later this morning Helmut Schmidt will exchange views with him on the same topic.

On his arrival last night, Vance was met by Genscher at the Colongne-Bonn airport. Genscher immediately informed the American guest of the decision taken in Rome a few hours earlier by the EEC foreign ministers to propose to the Soviet Union that Afghanistan's neutrality be guaranteed in order to get Moscow to withdraw its troops.

In a statement at the airport, Vance emphasized the need for a "strong and coordinated response" to the Soviet invasion. It would have to be made clear that the West was firmly opposed to aggression. The U.S. secretary of state went on to stress the joint interests of the United States and the Federal Republic and the close consultations between the two governments.

[Excerpts] Bonn--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today received U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in Bonn for an exchange of views on the West's reaction to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Also present at the meeting was Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who earlier had discussed the same issues with Vance.

It is assumed that the question of an Olympic boycott will also be discussed since the ultimatum set by U.S. President Jimmy Carter for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan runs out today.

GENSCHER RESTATES POSITION ON EAST-WEST RELATIONS

DW191352 Stuttgart Sueddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1145 GMT 16 Feb 80 DW

[Correspondent Reissenberger interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, apparently in Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] When your U.S. colleague Vance visits you in Bonn next Wednesday, Mr Genscher, nearly 2 months will have passed since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The efforts toward a common overall concept for the West as a reaction to the invasion staged by Moscow in violation of international law are still in progress. What are the results so far, and what are the principles by which the alliance is guided in that respect, Mr Genscher?

[Answer] It is the common goal of the alliance to achieve a Soviet withdrawal of its troops from Afghanistan. We can achieve this only jointly. The challenge inherent in the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan is a challenge that concerns Europeans and Americans equally. If, for this reason, people talk about solidarity between Europe and the United States, this must not be understood to mean that this involves an American problem in which the Europeans must help a little. What is really important, is that they pull on one rope if peace is to be preserved and if the preconditions are to be created for a situation where the Third World states, too, are safe from having to behave complaisantly toward the Soviet Union in the face of this superpower's use of its military strength.

Viewed from this angle, what has happened in Afghanistan is also a challenge to the nonalined states, and they see it that way. This explains the result of the Islamic conference; this also explains the vote in the United Nations. The joint strategy of the Western states is becoming more discernible, and the contribution of the Federal Republic of Germany is absolutely clear. Militarily, our tasks lie in central Europe. Balance is required here in order to make security possible. Without balance there is neither security nor any preconditions for a realistic policy of relaxing tensions.

At the same time it is necessary for us to help states united with us in the alliance, states which have to solve economic and social problems. This explains our vast outlay of financial means and our defense aid to our alliance partner Turkey. This country is allied with us in friendship, and it holds a highly important strategic position. By the same token, it is an important political factor.

Obviously public opinion in the Western states has not adequately noted the fact that an allied country has participated in the Islamic conference at Islamabad. We must help Greece, and at the same time we want to help those states of the Third World economically and financially that wish to strengthen their independence. The other aspects of the joint concept will be subject to discussion in the consultations with the U.S. secretary of state here in Bonn, and once again when the chancellor visits Washington.

[Question] Are there any differences between you, Mr Genscher, and the chancellor? I am asking this in view of the fact that you said quite plainly just a week ago that our place is by the side of the United States and not between the two superpowers. I am asking this also in view of the fact that the chancellor yesterday issued a denial of one of his alleged statements concerning relations with the United States, made before the SPD Bundestag group.

[Answer] At the conclusion of his talks with the Belgian prime minister in Brussels, the chancellor quite clearly expounded the position he is advocating, namely our place by the side of the United States. It would be an illusion to assume, or for anyone to believe, that they could separate the Federal Republic of Germany from the United States. This is a fully harmonious view shared by the chancellor and me. This also forms the basis of our cooperation in the government coalition. The chancellor and I are in perfect agreement.

[Question] Soviet media have said lately that the continuation of detente policy and European solidarity with the United States rule each other out. Do you see in this a tendency to return to the slogan: "Ami Go Home?"

[Answer] In any event a trend is discernible, this trend being that Soviet voices try to make the Europeans believe they should define their interests independently from, and in opposition to, the United States. This trend is reflected by the fact, secondly, that they claim that detente policy and solidarity between the Europeans and the United States are incompatible. I must warn against nurturing any hopes in this sense.

It would be an erroneous assessment of Western policy on the part of the Soviet Union if some important person in Moscow were to assume that it might be possible to make the Europeans or the Federal Republic of Germany differentiate between solidarity with the United States and detente. The contrary is correct: Detente policy calls for balance; but balance is possible only, in view of the highly armed Soviet Union, if the Europeans and the United States cooperate. This results in the fact that the alliance with the United States and the solidarity between the Europeans and the Americans do not conflict with detente policy but, quite to the contrary, are its basic prerequisite. That must be realized.

Moreover, nobody should ignore the fact that the Western alliance is a community of democrats standing up for freedom, and that common assessment of values is an additional foundation of our cooperation. On this basis we jointly define the policy that is necessary now. The weight carried by the Europeans in defining that policy will be the greater, the more the Europeans themselves are able to formulate their policy.

I must warn once again, in the interest of the predictability of European and German policy, against a false assessment of our intentions. Our position is by the side of the United States and not between the United States and the Soviet Union. I believe we all have reason enough on our part to eliminate the danger of Soviet miscalculations by clarifying our position.

[Question] Diplomatic contacts with the Soviet Union and other East European states are being continued. You have talked to the Soviet ambassador in Bonn. The chancellor did the same. The German ambassador in Moscow has seen Foreign Minister Gromyko. Mr Foreign Minister, do you have the impression that a course has been set, and if so, in what direction?

[Answer] First it must be said that everyone ought to be interested in avoiding an escalation. To achieve that, all existing channels ought to be exploited. This is urgently necessary, particularly in a difficult situation. We are doing this to express our position very clearly. Firmness and readiness for talks are not in contradiction. Firmness can have a positive effect on the actions of the other side only if one's own approach and aims are pointed out very factually, soberly and unemotionally.

[Question] You have stressed that it would be good and necessary if some sort of joint foreign policy could be achieved. Do you think there is a chance?

[Answer] In December, following the NATO decision, we had a Bundestag debate in which it turned out that agreement existed between the government coalition and the opposition on important security policy problems. I have found in past weeks that opposition spokesmen have made statements similar or identical to those of the Federal Government. There were statements, for example, that realistic detente policy must be continued; there was agreement on the necessity of having a joint Western stand and that Europe and the United States must cooperate closely.

If this is the case, I believe one should not intentionally create contradictions for the sake of an election campaign. Wherever differences of opinion exist, they must be voiced seriously, but they must not be made the means of a confrontation strategy.

It is my intention to point out existing common positions in matters of domestic and foreign policies, but I do not want to create illusions where contradictions exist. I consider it most important that we agree with regard to close European-American cooperation; I believe we ought to see to it together that no sham fights occur, that no cheap, new anti-Americanism is cultivated. The people must not forget why they are concerned now about peace, namely because the Soviet Union has intervened militarily in Afghanistan. There lies the cause. That is where one must begin to reestablish the confidence of the people in safeguarding peace.

L'UNITA REPORTS BERLINGUER TV PRESS CONFERENCE

LD181149 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 8 Feb 80 pp 1, 14 LD

[Unattributed report on 7 February Italian TV press conference with PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer: "Lively Dialog on Afghanistan; Peace; Our Struggle for Socialism; Reply to Christian Democratic Party [DC] Concerning Government"]

[Text] The "political rostrum" televised on Channel One last night permitted Comrade Enrico Berlinguer to explain in detail the PCI's assessment and attitudes regarding the major foreign and domestic policy issues. The PCI secretary general's interlocutors were journalists Livio Caputo (LA NOTTE), Sergio Turone (IL MESSAGGERO), Giselher Sorge (Radio Frankfurt), Giuseppe Giacovazzo (GAZZETTA DEL MEZZOGIORNO), Franco Batacchi (DIARIO DI VENEZIA), Luigi Bianchi (CORRIERE DELLA SERA), Baudouin Bollaert (LE FIGARO) and Lino Rizzi (GIORNALE DI SICILIA). The chairman was Villy De Luca. We report below the salient parts of the press conference, grouped together by topics.

1--International Issues

With regard to events such as the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and NATO's missile rearmament, Berlinguer said, we have set ourselves the task not so much of issuing moral verdicts--though we have done this too--as of trying to understand fully in which direction the situation is moving. From this viewpoint we have issued a negative verdict on NATO's decision to deploy the Euromissiles, partly because in our opinion there was an opportunity (and we put forward some precise proposals in this direction) to begin negotiations with the Soviet bloc countries to seek, on the one hand, to avoid deploying the U.S. Euromissiles and, on the other, to request that the USSR suspend manufacturing and deploying the SS-20's, with the aim of reaching negotiations which could make the deployment of these missiles on either side pointless or at least try to reduce them to the lowest possible level.

As for the events in Afghanistan, we have sharply censured the Soviet intervention and the U.S. reprisals. Our overall verdict is that these factors, together with many others, have contributed and are contributing to the grave deterioration in the international situation. This being the case, the forces working to restore detente must make a move and perform a moderating role with respect to the two major powers, while trying to prevent any act of force, any threat of force or any reprisals which could, by further exacerbating the situation, bring us to the brink of direct threats to peace.

Asked to express a verdict on the recent Franco-German statement on Afghanistan and detente, Berlinguer said:

As PCI secretary general, I would not sign the text of that statement, which on many points does not coincide with the stands which we maintain on the present international situation. Nevertheless, I do believe--at a time when there is an increasing exacerbation of international relations and economic, political and even sports reprisals are being proposed, especially by U.S. leaders--that it is important and positive that the top French and FRG representatives have asserted their desire to pursue a line for detente and to work for a resumption of dialog among all the powers concerned with the future of peace. Of course, it remains to be seen what specific initiatives will follow this declaration.

Berlinguer was asked what verdict the PCI gives on the Socialist International's assertion that the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan is a precondition for European security negotiations. This was his reply:

I have not yet read the Socialist International's communique. As far as our position is concerned, we want--as we have clearly stated in both the Italian and European parliaments--the Soviet troops' withdrawal from Afghanistan. However, in order for this to be more than a mere watchword and therefore, in the final analysis, a propaganda formula, I believe that we must work to create the best conditions for this to take place (which is something we sincerely desire, because we want the Afghan people to be able to decide freely on their own government and their own future). Therefore everybody--and this includes the Western countries--must take measures which will not exacerbate the stances (including the Soviets' stances) but which will move the situation toward a thaw. The situation at present is very cold and is tending to worsen. A thaw must be created, the path of dialog must be reopened and care must be taken not to make moves which would damage it further. This can help to restore calm and can therefore also contribute to the Soviet troops' withdrawal from Afghanistan. Be that as it may, the demand for the withdrawal is inherently correct and must be maintained.

2--Verdict on Relations With Socialist Countries

For the umpteenth time, the question was raised of whether, over and above its individual criticisms of the USSR, the PCI still regards that nation as a socialist country. Berlinguer replied as follows:

We have no myths and we seek none, either old or new. Of course, in very distant times, when the USSR was an encircled country, the only socialist state to have emerged from a major revolution and threatened by practically every other state in the world, the defense of that great revolutionary gain was the duty of the entire world proletariat. A myth was also created around that defense. Now we assess the development of Soviet society more calmly and with a greater historical awareness. We believe that a great proletarian revolution--the first in the world--took place there and that through a very complex and in many respects tragic process, the foundations were laid for a socialist society--that is, a society in which capitalism has been eliminated and specific gains have been achieved on the working classes' behalf. At the same time, however, we regard the USSR's and other countries' form as one of the possible and realized forms of socialism--a form with which we do not agree and which we do not want to repeat in our own country. We are working for another kind of socialism: In particular, we are working for a form of socialism which will fully realize the freedoms and democratic rights which are in many respects still being infringed or violated in the Soviet Union. Because of this essential aspect we believe that the situation in the Soviet Union cannot be accepted and in any case cannot be recreated in a country such as ours or in the other capitalist Western countries.

At this point in the press conference Berlinguer was asked to explain more fully his 1976 assertion concerning the greater security which Eurocommunism derives from the NATO shield.

The PCI secretary general replied as follows:

The idea which I expressed at that time and which I would express in the same way now is this: Since we want to build the kind of socialism in which we believe, which is a socialist road matching Italian society's individual characteristics and based on the full expansion of democracy and the acknowledgement of all freedoms, if the Italian nation were situated among the Warsaw bloc countries, it would be very difficult, and there would be pressures of various kinds to make it difficult and even impossible for us to proceed along that path. This was the meaning of the intervention in Czechoslovakia. At the same time, I repeat: Beware; while perhaps the Eastern bloc does not want us to build socialist as we conceive it, in the West there are many people (the leading forces of capitalism) who do not want us to build any kind of socialism, not even the kind which we believe matches the Italian situation. [paragraph continues]

Therefore, on the one hand we are in the Atlantic pact, but on the other, though we are part of that bloc, we have a struggle to wage and a road to open up in order to overcome the opposition of the capitalist ruling classes.

The next question was as follows: Why does nobody question the Yugoslavs' autonomy, while there are those who doubt the PCI's autonomy?

I note, Berlinguer replied, that nobody questions the League of Communists of Yugoslavia's autonomy, despite the fact that, like ourselves, it acknowledges the socialist character of Soviet society. In fact the PCI's autonomy, its absolute independence in its assessments of the situation in the socialist countries and its action in the internatinal field, and obviously in Italy as well, is broadly (I would say almost, universally) acknowledged abroad. However, it is challenged-- with increasing difficulty--in Italy for the simple reason that the intention in brandishing this banner is to set an obstacle to the PCI's full participation in our country's government.

The subject of Yugoslavia was taken up by another journalist, who asked what the PCI's attitude would be in the event of an intervention in Yugoslavia "after Tito." This was his reply:

I believe that I am sufficiently well acquainted with Yugoslavia and its leaders to be able to state confidently that Yugoslav policy in the so-called post-Tito period (fortunately Comrade Tito is still alive and has even come through his recent most difficult surgical trial) will be the same policy as has been pursued throughout the past years and will therefore be a foreign policy of nonalinement, of initiative for detente and for peaceful coexistence. Everyone must realize that Yugoslavia has no intention of modifying its foreign policy. Of course, if (though this is a hypothesis which I personally cannot foresee) there are initiatives from any quarter against Yugoslavia's independence and sovereignty and against its foreign policy, we will oppose them absolutely steadfastly.

Another question on the same topic was: Why are the countries of real socialism so afraid of dissidents?

It is very difficult, Berlinguer replied, to find explanations for these factors, which in any case we consider unacceptable and contrary to the very principles of socialism as we conceive it. A socialist society must have no fear of permitting the fullest freedom of dissent, even when this dissent concerns the constituent elements of society and of its leaders' policy. I believe that the socialist countries' life would have everything to gain if this freedom were fully guaranteed. Anyway, that is our belief.

3--Goverment Issue

The discussion of the next point proceeded from a question concerning the PCI's willingness to adopt a favorable attitude to a government not including itself but including the Italian Socialist Party [PSI].

Berlinguer said:

First, I would like to point out that the conditions which we have set cannot be described as onerous: I would describe them as the minimum conditions for a communist party of our strength to be able to participate in a government in such a way as to render a service to the country, and therefore not under conditions that would cancel out this innovation or even nullify this very party--which would not help the country, let alone the party. [paragraph continues]

The conditions are as follows: equal status among the parties participating in government; acknowledgement of their respective political and parliamentary weight; and of course a very clear, precise program with guarantees regarding its implementation.

There are forms of resistance, the PCI secretary general added, which stem from the fact that the intention is to preserve the DC's dominance and power system at all costs. These forms of resistance imply a price that the country has to pay, because every day and every month lost in reaching the solution of a democratic unity government is paid for very dearly by the country in economic, political, moral and ideological terms. We see no alternative to fighting for the quickest possible attainment of this solution. As for the Socialist Party's [PSI] participation in the government, it is up to that party to decide. It does seem to me, however, that the PSI Central Committee was clear about this.

Another journalist made the following strange observation: In fact the PCI does not want to enter the government at all, and this explains its "raising of the price" with respect to the DC. Berlinguer gave the following well-documented reply:

We have said and announced that we will not hold back (though aware that we would be shouldering onerous responsibilities) if the possibility of our direct participation presented itself, because we know that this participation is necessary and can make an effective and substantial contribution to extricating the country from the crisis. I do not see what "openings" have come from the DC, especially of late, which we have allegedly thwarted. Here are some recent statements by DC leaders: Galloni says: "If the Communist Party were capable of radically modifying (radically, note) its positions, we would be faced with a new factor which we might even assess positively. Thank you, Deputy Galloni! He adds: "The internal and international conditions do not exist, even in an emergency situation such as the present." DC Minister Darida says: "I am with NATO all the way, even when it is wrong. Can the Communists say the same? If so, I am satisfied." Under Secretary Zamberletti says: "The Communist Party must take back its "no" to NATO missiles in Italy and accept the fact that the Americans hold the keys." And I could go on. Basically, we are being asked to change our positions completely, and at the same time it is claimed that the conditions for PCI government participation do not exist.

Of what, basically, does the "opening" consist? It consists of the fact that, after all these remarks and similar and even more stubborn remarks from the Social Democrats and Liberals, a so-called dialog is being proposed to us: Let us sit round a table and see what kind of program we can draw up. Evidently, if these are the stances we are dealing with, the sole purpose of the dialog is clearly, I feel, to waste time, to perform a kind of interminable round of meetings and declarations. This can only create confusion in the country, and we are not prepared to take part in negotiations without the clearly stated aim of establishing a government of democratic unity.

These remarks by Berlinguer were followed by this objection from a journalist: The formula of grand coalitions is alien to Western democracy and would in any case bring about the government's operational paralysis.

Berlinguer pointed out that it is not true that there has been no recourse to the formula of grand coalitions (as in Italy, for instance, in 1944 and 1947 and in the FRG at the time of the resumption of the ostpolitik). I am pointing this out, he added, by way of saying that there can be times in a country's life when a joint and thorough commitment is needed from all the democratic forces, and these are the times when the emergency becomes an absolute imperative--that is, the need for a great national solidarity and for the parties representing the people's will to cooperate. [paragraph continues]

This is why we cannot envisage a government which reflects the usual interparty disputes, we envisage a government united by a common aim, which will act authoritatively in an attempt to reform and regenerate Italy for as long as necessary. We too are in favor of rotation and we too believe that, once this phase has passed and the gravest dangers have been averted, we will manage to establish a normal rotation between the parties of opposition and of the majority. But now, tell me how we can prevent Italy from declining, sliding further down the slope along which it is unfortunately now moving further every day, if not by means of great solidarity among all the peoples and democratic forces, including the country's government.

Taking up the reference to "rotation," one journalist asked whether it would not have been better for the PCI to opt for the so-called leftwing alternative outlined at the latest Socialist Congress.

Berlinguer replied that our position proceeds from Italy's interests, not partisan interests. Hence the proposal of a unitary government. If the other parties believe they can form another kind of government, we can confidently remain in opposition--where we have been for such a long time and are now--and fulfill the tasks stemming from our strength among the working classes and people's masses. As far as the left-wing alternative is concerned, I believe that the Socialist Party itself has reached the conclusion that this objective is not timely, that the preconditions from the standpoint of the parliamentary balance of forces do not exist and that in the present phase the aim must be to establish positive relations with the DC, naturally while combatting its most narrowminded, stubborn and arrogant tendencies. I believe that unity between Communists and Socialists is an essential factor in defeating these tendencies within the DC, and it is in this direction that all our work has developed, even recently.

Berlinguer was asked next whether the DC's attitude to the PCI is now any different or more open than if Aldo Moro had still been alive.

Berlinguer said:

I am not in the habit of discussing my conversations with other politicians, especially in the case of deceased politicians who cannot confirm or deny what I say. What I can say is that I do not know what Moro's present position would be. Who can say? Of course his demise did leave a serious gap in the DC and Italian political life. I can add that in 1978 Moro went as far as to establish a parliamentary majority with the Communists, but he refused to let the Communists join the government. But--and here I am referring not to remarks made to me in private and which I do not want to cite, but rather to his writings and public thoughts--Moro did speak of a "third phase" in Italian political life, that is, the phase which would follow the center-left phase and which he regarded as a process of developing cooperation with the Communist Party to its ultimate consequences. Moro probably envisaged this process developing somewhat slowly. We polemicized with him on this point, and I would still polemicize with anyone who maintains that this process must proceed slowly, because there is not much time in which to remedy boldly the damage being done to our country's economic, social and civic fabric. Therefore the idea of a long, slow process, which might have had some validity years ago, no longer has any validity because now we are faced with imperative decisions on which our nation's future depends.

But, Berlinguer was asked, do the Communists not believe that even if they do not enter the government they can still make a constructive contribution to establishing a good program? Would the program not be worse if they remained outside the negotiations?

Berlinguer said:

Experience has led us to the conclusion that these interminable series of meetings devoted solely to a government program achieve little and in fact create confusion rather than clarity. We have recognized that there are various kinds of government with respect to which we can adopt an opposition stance, while still acknowledging certain positive aspects despite our criticisms. Of course, this remains a valid position, as shown by past experience and as may be shown by future experiences. However, this is not the case with the present government, of which we give a very negative assessment with regard to all aspects of its policy. As for our possible contribution to negotiations, I say: No, we will not take part in negotiations without the clearly stated aim of achieving the formation of a government of democratic unity. Of course, this does not mean that the negotiations must necessarily conclude in that way. But that must be the negotiations' acknowledged goal. Then it is a matter of verifying whether we agree on the program (and the contrary might prove to be the case). But, unless that aim is clearly stated, we cannot make a positive contribution: On the contrary, our contribution could only be negative, because we would be playing the game of declarations and interpretations which would only create further confusion.

4--Antiterrorist Measures

It was asked whether, following the lower house vote on the [antiterrorist] decree, "into which the leftwing forces were dragged somewhat by force," the PCI will act to modify the decree to secure broader guarantees.

Berlinguer replied:

We were not led by force: We gave our vote of confidence but specified, of course, that this did not constitute an approval of government's activity, with regard to which, indeed, our lack of confidence and criticism have increased in recent months. We voted that way because, on account of the Radicals' absolutely senseless obstructionism, there was a danger that the decree would lapse. The vote of confidence was the only way to surmount the obstructionism and to prevent the decree's lapse, which would have had very serious consequences, especially with regard to the state of mind of the forces which are making daily sacrifices, namely the forces of law and order. Yesterday we witnessed the sad death of a 19-year-old youngster. I believe that every Italian youngster should believe that there is a drop of his own blood in the corpse of that boy, who was killed so barbarically in a Rome street. This is why it was necessary to prevent the decree from lapsing, and this was the purpose of our vote. It is true that we are dissatisfied with some points in the decree. The Radicals' obstructionism and also the government's lack of sensitivity made it impossible to introduce modifications which both we and the Socialist comrades wanted. Now we must move on, especially in agreement with the Socialist comrades, so that we can contribute the modifications which we consider opportune to make the antiterrorist measures both more effective and more clear-cut.

Several other topics were discussed during the press conference: the struggle against tax evasion, the situation in the Italian radio and television company, the granting of the Freedom of Florence to Sakharov, and the work done by leftwing coalition councils. In this latter connection, Berlinguer pointed out that leftwing administrations have achieved many important things, have governed honestly and have guaranteed a stability which was previously lacking.

Another topic discussed was the party's internal debate on the latest international events. Berlinguer pointed out that there is a free, enthusiastic but calm debate centered on the major issues of the struggle for peace.

EANES STRESSES PORTUGAL'S CONTRIBUTION TO WESTERN FREEDOM

LD151235 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 13 Feb 80 p 3 LD

[Unattributed report: "Image of NATO's Incapacity Encouraged Expansionist Designs"--quotation marks as published]

[Text] "Both Europe and its NATO allies could have conveyed an image of incapacity which fostered the expansionist designs and the potential for disruption of those who know how to exploit power vacuums," the president of the republic stated yesterday when speaking at the ceremony at which he decorated [outgoing] NATO military committee chairman Gen Hermann Zeiner Gundersen with the insignia of the Grand Cross of the Order of Prince Henry the Navigator.

"We are experiencing a complex period of crisis in international relations," Ramalho Eanes began, after extolling his guest.

"All crises," he continued, "encourage the emergence of those who, fearing to contemplate the future with resolve, easily take refuge in the championing of aims of a past which cannot be repeated. All crises, because of the anxiety which accompanies them, enable these people to disguise in improvisation and apparent ideological firmness the uncertainty that is characteristic of a lack of experience and understanding due to an inadequate perspective on world issues."

"Because of all this, you will realize that this act of tribute to yourself is an appropriate occasion for reaffirming the principles guiding Portugal's stand within the framework of its membership of Europe and NATO.

"In fact, these guiding principles, repeatedly affirmed by Portugal through its legitimate institutional representatives, are based on clear stands expressed by the electorate.

"That is, they are not under debate, are not unknown to anybody and should not serve as pretexts for any operations in domestic politics which could encourage doubts among our allies with respect to the reasons and interests justifying Portugal's stand."

"In the first place," Ramalho Eanes specified, "it must be emphasized that the principles guiding Portugal's stand, which are fully in keeping with West Europe's defense strategy, are defined on the basis of an understanding of the political, economic and military forces involved and are aimed at insuring the defense of Portuguese and European interests within the framework of the new realities taking shape in the course of the crisis which we are now experiencing."

"In this connection we cannot fail to consider our direct experience, in which the oil crisis was combined with the political crisis of the destruction of the dictatorship and with the decolonization crisis stemming from a colonial war waged without political vision and beyond Portuguese society's capacity for human and economic sacrifice.

"The political crisis demonstrated that the European nations are internally vulnerable when authoritarianism and the lack of democratic alternatives leave the political system at the mercy of violent movements, dominated by the forces with the greatest capacity for organization and the best position in vital sectors. The decolonization crisis demonstrated that geopolitical vacuums are certainly filled by those who have the means and determination, proving that Europe can be isolated from areas essential to its economic activity and thus to its defense and independence. These are two important lessons for Portugal and certainly for Europe.

"In my case, they explain why the first priority confronting Portugal after the internal political crisis was its complete democratic clarification with respect to its allies and, more specifically, with respect to NATO."

Portugal's African Policy

The geostrategic conditions for NATO's defense "have changed," President Eanes continued, "necessitating a judicious but clearsighted and firm reappraisal of the original coordinates laid down in the postwar period--the traditional predominance of East-West relations, the pivotal role played by the arms limitation negotiations, the search for a balance of military power in Europe and the possible stability found in nuclear parity, the strategy of deterrence and the policy of detente."

"We must now add the new and crucial significance of North-South relations, the emergence of new forms of contempt for the African peoples' right to real self-determination, the strategic importance of economic relations and the situations of widespread political instability, which are associated with periods of crisis and transformation but assume a different significance when forming part of a worldwide system of threats."

In view of this new orientation "the defense of Europe and of its inherent principles can no longer be contemplated solely in strictly terms. It is also necessary to consider, as equally important but with greater priority, the conditions for its economic and political defense and the means for clearly asserting the values which define the essence of its culture."

To this end, Portugal has stated its position on disarmament negotiations. It was stated that "we believe that the disarmament debate must set specific collateral conditions to guarantee the permanence of the principles of the sides involved, without which these negotiations will produce no profitable results for the peoples' progress and freedom." Next there followed a list of the conditions embodied in these general principles, ranging from maintaining the balance of military forces to guaranteeing noninterference and nonintervention in any other country or region and full observance of human rights. Therefore, it was also stated that disarmament is the natural result of detente and the essential precondition for real cooperation among the peoples.

It is within observance of these principles that Portugal is playing its part in what should be a collective task carried out with a real unity of effort and with observance of each nation's respective special characteristics.

This is where Portugal's African policy comes in. Bearing in mind the original problems, it has in a very short space of time made it possible to achieve significant results, especially in the economic and cultural fields and also in terms of better mutual understanding.

Demonstrating the validity of Portugal's approach, this real and rapid rapprochement was achieved without the slightest recourse to any concealment of Portuguese foreign policy's guiding principles.

Thus at the Bissau meeting with president of the People's Republic of Angola, Dr Agostinho Neto, it was possible to state: "It is obvious that the Portuguese people's interests are manifested externally in many different ways and this is why Portugal does not conceal its specific commitments to NATO and to other international organizations. But these commitments have never caused and will never cause Portugal to lose its freedom outside the strictly circumscribed limits of its commitments, which are publicly known, in connection with treaties."

Quest for Roads to Detente

Portugal does not aspire to play any moderating or balancing role, partly because its size precludes this. What Portugal can and must do, what it must do, what it can do and has done, given its thorough acquaintance with the new states and their leaders, is to tell the countries with which it has relations by virtue of these commitments who these leaders are, what they represent to their respective countries and what support they should be given.

Conformity with and integration into the main lines of West European policy are to be found in the quest for specific paths to detente by means of improved relations with the East European countries.

Indeed, the unconcealed defense of the democratic organization of political power and of the institutions' popular foundation and geostrategic, geopolitical and cultural integration into Europe are important means for breaking down the rigid barriers erected by imperial attitudes and preconditions for consolidating detente.

It was within this framework that it was possible to state the following: "After 1975 Portugal could not be considered an element of unease and insecurity for the international community. The guarantee of its internal stability, the vigor and complete observance of democratic norms, the popular foundation of its institutions and the confirmation of its geopolitical links are positive factors for the sure development of diversified and multifaceted foreign relations; relations which will at all times and in all circumstances preserve Portugal's autonomy and capacity for free expression within the context of international relations."

This is why we claim that "the specific problems of cooperation and security in the modern world provide a new role for the medium powers, enabling them to guarantee for themselves a degree of autonomy and flexibility which will free them from all forms of passive dependence on the major centers of geopolitical influence."

Portugal's NATO Commitments

Next the president of the republic discussed Portugal's NATO commitments, which are "indisputable obligations since they correspond to the nation's interests and are democratically justified in forms which prompt no doubts.

"But these obligations must be matched by Portugal's rights with respect to NATO, which are a precondition for my country's being able to contribute fully with its existing capabilities to the task of collective defense, in the various fields in which this must manifest itself.

"At a time when predicted threats are becoming realities and when other threats, perhaps even more worrisome, are appearing on the horizon, the need to pool efforts must make processes of mutual help natural.

"Only thus can we hope to achieve the coordination of political initiaties and to guarantee the calm essential for acting rationally and determinedly. Only thus can we hope to achieve, in the short term, the coordinated and global response which will guarantee the defense of the West European peoples' freedom and cultural identity. It is in the defense of these objectives, which I believe we share and to which you, General, have devoted all your efforts and skills, that European unity will be achieved."

Before finishing, Ramalho Eanes said in this conrection that the "unity of European foreign policy must be sought by strengthening that which has been our speciality--the democratic legitimacy of the institutions and of the rules of political conduct, which demands observance of human rights, of liberty and freedoms--and by guaranteeing effective coordination of Europe's overall defense within the NATO framework."

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS SCORE EANES REMARKS

LD191655 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Feb 80 p 3 LD

[Unattributed report: "Eanes' Criticism of NATO Surprises PSD"]

[Text] Referring to Eanes' recent speech when decorating [outgoing NATO military committee chairman] General Gundersen, the Social Democratic Party [PSD] states in a communique issued yesterday that "Portugal's political and military institutions have always been represented in NATO and have always expressed solidarity with its defense strategy," expressing surprise that "the armed forces chief of general staff should now publicly criticize that strategy."

Also referring to the passage in the speech in which General Ramalho Eanes speaks of the invasion of Afghanistan, the communique stresses that "he does so, but blaming it in the final analysis on NATO's own shortcoming," without mentioning at all "the Soviet Union's totalitarian zeal," or even a hint of "a condemnation of the military stance of this big power which has subjugated several peoples in order to protect what it terms its 'vital interests'."

The communique continues: "Of course, in this way, if the USSR begins to shift its expansionist designs in the direction of Europe--as everything indicates--General Ramalho Eanes will continue to criticize NATO."

Finally, the Social Democrats state: "Referring to Portuguese foreign policy in his speech, General Eanes states that some Portuguese stands in this area suffer from clear government inexperience. However, it is unclear whether these allusions apply to the Democratic Alliance government or, on the contrary, to his own past conduct. Perhaps the armed forces chief of staff would be so kind as to set aside political insinuations and doubletalk and explain this to the Portuguese people."

SUCCESSFUL NEGOTIATIONS TO GUARANTEE CRUDE OIL SUPPLY

LD191532 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1500 GMT 19 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Nearly all of Spain's supplies of crude oil for 1980 have been guaranteed, according to calculations made following the recent government initiatives to conclude state-to-state contracts with producing countries. The 40 percent increase in deliveries of crude negotiated by Prime Minister Suarez in Iraq and the recent agreement signed by Saudi Arabia, negotiated in the name of King Juan Carlos, for an increase in deliveries from Saudi Arabia of 50,000 extra barrels a day, have produced a favorable outlook for the purchases of crude this year. Moreover, the talks between Prime Minister Suarez and Venezuelan President Luis Herrera Campins have led to assurances that the agreement signed with Venezuela, Cuba and the USSR will continue for this year.

BASQUE SOCIALIST PARTY CHIEF COMMENTS ON TALKS BREAKDOWN

LD191306 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 19 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The idea put forward by the Basque Socialist Party to create a joint front of all democratic parties in the Basque political arena to fight against violence and terrorism has for the moment failed--the Basque Nationalist Party [PNV] walked out of the meeting to establish the front at 0500. The PNV walked out because they did not agree with some of the points included in the joint statement.

We asked Txiki Benegas, secretary general of the Basque Socialist Party, what happened during the negotiations:

[Begin recording] [Benegas] We reached agreement on how to fight violence and terrorism in Euzkadi. The other parties made their contributions to this agreement but after signing--or at least after agreeing with the fundamentals in the document--they brought up such subjects as Navarre; [words indistinct] they brought up such subjects as the attitude of parliament [words indistinct] and in the end the document was not signed for reasons which we Socialists find quite inexplicable. They claimed that greater powers should be established for the junta for security provided for under the statute of autonomy and also claimed that we Socialists should promise to introduce into each organic law passed by parliament a clause safeguarding Guernica statute at a time when the PNV is not represented in parliament [words indistinct].

[Reporter] What is going to happen in the near future?

[Benegas] It is going to be difficult. The problems of this people are difficult. I think that peace will come because this people wants peace. The problem is whether the parties which are dutybound to achieve peace in Euzkadi are going to be up to it, are going to meet their responsibilities and are going to be up to the historic challenge facing them. [end recording]

The other parties that attended these talks were the Communist Party, the Unification of Basque Socialists, and the Basque Carlist Party.

A press conference has been arranged for early this afternoon in Bilbao to explain the reason for the breakdown in the negotiations.

BATASUNA COALITION NOT TO TAKE PART IN BASQUE PARLIAMENT

LD191302 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 19 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The Basque patriotic coalition Herri Batasuna will not take part in the Basque parliament or any of the institutions to which its members have been elected, according to a decision made last night in Vizcaya by the Herri Batasuna National Committee. The paper EGIN today reports that the Herri Batasuna National Committee decided to withdraw all its elected representatives from the institutions to which they had been elected in response to the imprisonment of Joxin Gorostidi and the repression suffered by the Basque people in both the north and south [France and Spain].

Workers Party Split

LD191720 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 19 Feb 80 LD

[Text] LAIA, the Basque Workers Revolutionary Party, has decided to leave Herri Batasuna [Basque patriotic coalition] and keep its representatives in place in the institutions to which they have been elected. The decision to withdraw from Herri Batasuna was taken because the parties in the coalition are (?being over-ruled). The LAIA representatives also deplore the criteria used for (?decisionmaking) in the coalition, which is being made more [word indistinct] and more authoritarian all the time by the separatists. Herri Batasuna now consists of the ANV [Basque Nationalist Action], the ESB [Basque Socialist Convergence], the HASI [Revolutionary Socialist People's Party], supporting committees and independents.

LA VANGUARDIA SUMMARIZES CARRILLO REPORT TO PCE CC

LD191423 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 3 Feb 80 p 9 LD

[EFE report: "Tough Criticism of Russian Intervention in Afghanistan"]

[Text] Tough criticism of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and an appeal to the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] to strengthen parliamentary leftwing unity were the most important aspects of the report submitted by Santiago Carrillo yesterday to the PCE Central Committee plenum, meeting in Madrid. Carrillo accused the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] of a rightwing shift and of involving the PSOE in a policy which, in the event of an emergency, would benefit only a government controlled by the rightwing.

Madrid, 2 February--After outlining the country's recent history, Carrillo asserted with respect to Afghanistan that there has never been a popular revolution there and that what happens in those countries where revolutionary regimes are genuinely popular--that they find within themselves and in the support of other peoples the strength necessary for surmounting imperialist intrigues without intervention by foreign troops--is not taking place in Afghanistan. This is not the case in Afghanistan, the PCE secretary general added.

The Soviets, he continued, have justified their intervention by saying that it was a response to the Kabul government. According to other explanations, it was a matter of "saving" the "socialist regime in that country."

"Unfortunately," Mr Carrillo said, "none of these explanations is credible, except to those who because of emotional reflexes accept any explanation as good."

"However the intervention in Afghanistan is explained," he added, "it has called into question the great step forward in the peoples' joint struggle constituted by forcing U.S. imperialism to refrain from intervening militarily in Africa or Latin America."

Preventing a Return to the Cold War

Next, Mr Carrillo asserted that the PCE's great task is to prevent a return to the cold war, insure detente and combat the policy of imperialism--U.S. imperialism, in the first place, and also European imperialism. This also applies to Spain, in view of the attempts to make it join NATO and in connection with the denunciation of Suarez' visit to Washington. Mr Carrillo announced that he will submit a question in parliament to make the prime minister explain what commitments he undertook in the United States.

After stating that, as a result of the intervention in Afghanistan, a bloc comprising the United States, Japan and Europe is taking shape and that the United States is beginning to recover the leadership which it had lost, Carrillo emphasized that the PCE will intensify its activity against the attempts by U.S. imperialism and all the reactionary forces in Europe to recreate a cold war atmosphere and also to make the Soviet troops withdraw from Afghanistan.

"We Are Excluded From Policy Which We Do Not Accept"

In the second part of his report, which was devoted to the domestic situation, Carrillo denounced "a clear righward shift in the UCD's policy," denying that the Communists had become radicalized. "The change," he asserted, "began with the failure to implement the political commitments in the Moncloa Pact, which constituted a real deception on the part of the government." "The rightwing is winning the round," Carrillo added, "since the UCD has yielded to its demands in the energy plan, the economic program and the workers law. So nobody can be surprised that we Communists are excluded from a policy which is not ours and which we do not and will not accept." "In order to implement it, the UCD must place the PCE in a ghetto while leaning toward cooperation with the Popular Alliance."

"If the Socialists have not been excluded initially," Mr Carrillo continued, "this was not only because of their electoral influence but because the UCD was not strong enough to exclude the entire left at a stroke. But let nobody believe that the UCD intends to strengthen the PSOE as a possible alternative government. The UCD's sole concern is to remain in power and to weaken the left--the PCE by excluding it, and the PSOE by involving it in a policy favorable to the rightwing."

He cited as consequences of the UCD's activity the confrontation between the General Workers Union [UGT] and the Workers Commissions, the split among the workers and the imposition of a social policy harmful to the workers, who are being made to bear most of the burden of the crisis, causing friction between Communists and Socialists. "The most deplorable thing," he stated, "is that Nicolas Redondo should fall so easily into the trap and revive gut anticommunism, believing that in this way he will secure trade union hegemony for the UGT."

"PSOE Has Made a Grave Mistake"

He stated that the Socialists have accepted agreements with the Spanish Confederation of Employers Organizations and the government despite a heavy cost in loss of prestige, believing that in this way they will secure preferential treatment from the employers and the government and trade union hegemony: "In taking these steps, they have compromised themselves and made a grave mistake, which, moreover, gravely harms the working class."

"The conclusion," he added, "which we reached in the Executive Committee on the problem of the PSOE and which we submit to the Central Committee is that, if we Communists and Socialists confront each other and if we do not maintain relations of cooperation in all possible fields in Spain, it is not a Giscard who will govern--that is, not the French liberal bourgeois rightwing. If the Socialists and we ourselves wage war against each other, with the deterioration of the international situation, the development of the crisis and the autonomy problems in Spain, the UCD's policy at this time would probably lead to an emergency government controlled by the rightwing--that is, to a restoration of dictatorship."

"I Do Not Believe That There Is Fear of the PCE in Spain"

Santiago Carrillo held a press conference this afternoon at which he summarized his report to the Central Committee.

"I do not believe," he said, "that there is fear of the Communist Party in Spain. There are people who are attempting to create that fear and to turn the Communist Party into a kind of bogeyman. This was successful 40 years ago, and they are attempting to repeat it, but I do not believe that there is fear of the Communist Party. We intend to enter the government someday, and we intend not to enter it alone. We intend to enter it with the Socialists and with other democratic forces which wish to change society, and in this system the state will remain the same. That is, we will not make a party state apparatus; it will be the constitutional state apparatus which already exists, but what would have to be guarded against would be not so much the possibility of the Communists going too far as the state apparatus, being what it is, attempting to cancel out the democratic results. This has already been seen in Chile in the case of the Popular Unity government."

"But it seems to me that the fear that if we Communists become stronger in Spain, we will head toward a regime like those in the Eastern bloc, is totally unjustified, because here, among other things, the path will not be the same; it will be the path of democracy, and the government will be shared, with democratic freedoms and elections in which the government can be defeated and ousted. That is, there will always be the possibility of turning back, if anybody wishes to turn back."

DENMARK

SOGAARD REJECTS PERMANENT DEPLOYMENT OF FOREIGN TROOPS

LD191047 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 11 Feb 80 p 1 LD

["J.B." report: "No Foreign Troops in Peacetime"]

[Text] Defense Minister Poul Sogaard has completely rejected the permanent deployment of foreign troops in Denmark in peacetime to compensate for weakness caused by a so-called "no change" in the defense plan.

The idea was put forward by Maj Gen P. Thorsen, head of the Karup tactical air command. Evaluating the points made preparatory to the defense plan, he spoke to JYLLANDSPOSTEN, saying in part:

"If Denmark weakens its defense with a 'no change' in the defense plan, clearly we must have foreign troops on Danish territory in peacetime. We simply could not hold back an enemy invader with our own defense long enough for foreign allied forces to arrive."

"Naturally it is always possible for us to request reinforcements in special circumstances," the defense minister commented. "But we will not have foreign troops here otherwise."

The minister is surprised that the defense budget is the object of criticism. In his opinion there is no question of a "no change." Defense must save 100 million kroner in 1980, but this does not apply to subsequent years. Moreover, expenditure will be regulated to take into account salary and price increases.

The defense minister believes that generals are entitled to express their opinions freely. But he thinks that they should avoid "polemicizing" the government's outlined ideas. The minister also stated that he does not believe that his advisers in the defense headquarters and the ministry would wish to comment publicly on the defense plan.

STOLTENBERG REFUTES PRAVDA CHARGES OF POLICY CHANGE

LD191611 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1530 GMT 19 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Norwegian Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg has categorically refuted the accusations of the Soviet party newspaper PRAVDA, according to which Norway is about to alter its policy. An article in today's PRAVDA says that Norway has given up the principle according to which the country will not position in peacetime foreign troops and nuclear weapons on its territory.

According to the Norwegian defense minister, there have been preliminary talks on the storage of American arms in Norway over the last few years, but the storage of tactical nuclear weapons has not been discussed at all. According to Stoltenberg, advance storage of military equipment does not mean the establishment of foreign bases in Norway.

The Norwegian defense minister also refuted the Soviet criticism of NATO's winter exercises, which are to begin in Norway at the end of the current month. According to Stoltenberg, military exercises of this kind have been held regularly for years.

CONSULTATIONS WITH U.S. ON 'BASE POLICY' OPEN

LD190151 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 13 Feb 80 p 9 LD

[Olav Trygge Storvik report: "Base Policy Strengthened"]

[Text] "We have opened consultations with the United States on earmarking forces and contingency stockpiling of equipment in Norway so as to make our base policy more credible. We can then avoid summoning assistance too soon and so ease tension if a crisis should develop," Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg told AFTENPOSTEN.

Stoltenberg strongly emphasized that the bilateral consultations now underway with the United States on contingency stockpiling of equipment for U.S. forces which might be assigned to Norway are nothing new. This work was initiated a couple of years ago, and the Storting has been briefed on the matter in a number of documents since 1977 and has had occasion to discuss it. Moreover, consultations on contingency stockpiling are not only being conducted with the Americans. Such consultations are also being held with Canada and Britain, which have earmarked forces for Norway. They also hold occasional exercises in Norway.

Defense Minister Stoltenberg stated that the study drafted in the U.S. Defense Department, in collaboration with the Norwegian authorities, on U.S. reinforcements for Norway represents part of the preparations for the consultations now underway. It is still too early to say what the final outcome of this work will be, but any decisions are unlikely in the near future. Consultations have been taking place for a couple of years, and it is still unclear what the cost will be and what materials will be stockpiled. The talks are still concerned with outlining needs and possibilities.

HAMRE CITES NEED TO BOOST NATO CAPABILITIES IN NORTH

LD151523 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 8 Feb 80 p 8 LD

[Unattributed report: "Defense Chief: Nato's Effort in North Must Be Improved"]

[Text] "The Norwegian policy on bases and nuclear weapons still stands, but the condition that this is to be maintained is that NATO's capability for an effort on the northern flank is maintained and improved," defense chief Gen Sverre Hamre said at a conference arranged by the Norwegian Atlantic Committee Thursday [7 February].

The defense chief's speech was entitled "Norway's Strategic Position and Norway's Defenses," and he stressed that it is especially important that the frequency of maneuvers for allied detachments in Norway be kept at a high level and that extensive preparations for receiving allied detachments in a tense situation be implemented in peacetime.

In his speech the defense chief also mentioned the Soviet incursion into Afghanistan and the latest developments in the Near East.

"The Soviet Union has registered both its will and capability for the direct use of military force to promote its interests. The Soviet Union did not deem of such great account the danger of escalation or direct military confrontation with the other superpower, the United States, that it refrained from invasion," he said.

Our area's strategic position is dominated by relations between the superpowers. Thus conflicts in other parts of the world in which the superpowers are involved also affect our situation. He stressed the difference between the situation of Afghanistan and that of Norway by saying that our security depends on the reliable military strength which is attained through our alliance membership.

If the Soviet Union's need for depth in defense and for distribution of fighting forces in the north were to tempt it to a limited attack, it is important that our defense threshold is set so high that the price an aggressor would have to pay bears no relation to the risk and prospects of victory.

The defense chief also mentioned trends in Soviet arms development for the eighties which will be important for Norway's defense planning. He asserted that even if SALT II were ratified, it is still anticipated that the strategic importance of the northern areas will increase, and that our defense planning will have to be adjusted in accordance with developments. The Soviet naval programs now under development indicate a new Soviet dimension at sea. Aircraft carriers for both helicopters and VTOL aircraft are being built. In Leningrad a nuclear-powered 30,000-ton vessel is now being built which may almost be described as a battle cruiser. In addition to other types of Soviet ships, this indicates that the Soviet Union is in the process of procuring classes of ships which can operate together, have a longer range, and are less vulnerable. In the eighties the Soviet Union will also presumably improve its amphibious potential, and that will be of immediate significance for Norway, the defense chief said.

SWEDEN

ULLSTEN URGES SALT II RATIFICATION, TALKS ON TNF CUTS

LD151609 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 6 Feb 80 p 7 LD

[Sven Svensson report: "Stopping Rearmament Is Question of War or Peace"]

[Text] Stopping the current nuclear rearmament in Europe is a question of war or peace.

That is what Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten said when the UN Disarmament Committee resumed its work in Geneva Tuesday [5 February]. Ullsten demanded that the superpowers immediately begin negotiations on limiting tactical nuclear weapons in Europe.

Ullsten said that detente policy is in a crisis and no one dares predict which direction events will take in the decade which has just begun.

The year 1979 was one of rearmament, not disarmament, and it ended with the blatant military intervention in the small neutral country of Afghanistan. This step in a strategically sensitive area of the world has undermined the prospects of peaceful cooperation between the United States and the Soviet Union, Ullsten said.

If distrust and suspicion are allowed to prevail in U.S.-Soviet relations the risk of minor episodes developing into war increases. In the nuclear age any local conflict might result in a world conflagration.

We have no reason to conceal the fact that the situation is serious, Ullsten continued, but it is important to avoid exaggeration. The prophets of doom can fulfill their own prophecies. We must not return to the tones of the cold war days. The dialog between East and West must continue and must not be replaced by propaganda.

No nation can avoid the consequences of a nuclear war between the two military blocs. In the nuclear age there is no alternative to peaceful cooperation.

Sweden has always wholeheartedly supported the policy of detente. This has never meant that we accept attacks on freedom and justice in the name of peace and friendship.

The Swedish Government urges the U.S. and Soviet governments to ratify SALT II. As members of the UN Security Council they ought to bear in mind their responsibility for peace and security, Ullsten continued.

We also urge the United States and the Soviet Union to take the initiative immediately for negotiations on tactical nuclear weapons in Europe. Both NATO and the Warsaw Pact have declared their readiness to begin such negotiations. The Soviet Union has recently raised objections to such talks. We hope, Ullsten said, that the Soviet Union will not persist in this view. The nuclear arms race in Europe must be stopped.

To Sweden, which lies between East and West and which is outside military alliances, the superpowers' nuclear rearmament has always appeared irrational. Rearmament has continued as if detente does not exist.

The decision to increase the number of nuclear weapons in Europe was taken while there was talk in statements of friendship and peaceful coexistence. Even though I know that it is not true, it is tempting to say that some detente measures have been intended to create a false sense of security.

The negotiations on tactical nuclear weapons in Europe must aim to create a Europe free from nuclear weapons, Ullsten continued. This aim cannot be achieved overnight. Yet the aim must be borne in mind.

Only thus is it possible for those taking part in the negotiations gradually to reduce the number of nuclear weapons without diminishing security.

The situation in Europe has to be accorded greater importance than hitherto. Two world wars have started in Europe; and Europe today is a center for the arms race between the superpowers has intensified in Europe. [sentence as published]

If this arms race continues, one day we will reach a point when we are conceivably forced to admit that a nuclear war can be fought in Europe. Negotiations on nuclear disarmament in Europe is thus a question of war or peace, Ullsten asserted.

Sweden is part of Europe. Our security can be affected by the military measures decided on by NATO and the Warsaw Pact. We reserve the right to raise our voice and make our views known.

The arms race between the two largest military blocs in the world concerns not only East and West. It constitutes an inconceivable waste of resources while the gap between rich and poor merely continues to grow.

ARMS SUPPLIES TO IRAN TO RESUME ON RELEASE OF HOSTAGES

LD192148 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1543 GMT 19 Feb 80 LD

[By Robert Hutchinson, PA defence correspondent]

[Text] Britain is ready and willing to resume a multimillion pound deal to supply Chieftain tanks spares and ammunition to the Iranian Army--once the U.S. Embassy hostages are released, authoritative Whitehall sources disclosed today. Discussions on a new deal were suspended by the British when the hostages were taken before Christmas, it is understood. The original, long-running contract was placed in suspension when the shah was deposed. A projected industrial complex near Esfanan, being built by the British Government's defense salesmen, international military services, to make Chieftain parts and ammunition, was cancelled. British ministers agreed that spares and ammunition could be sold to the Iranians in the days following the shah's departure, as a means of introducing stability in the region, but the embassy hostages changed that.

There are apparently signs of wear and tear on the Iranian fleet of 900 British-built Chieftains, some of which have been abandoned, crippled, in isolated locations since the revolution more than a year ago. The Iranians are also interested in reviving an order for tank transporters and armoured recovery-vehicles, as well as four logistic supply ships originally ordered from Yarrow Shipbuilders. Two of these ships are in various stages of completion.

THATCHER REITERATES PLEA FOR BOYCOTT OF OLYMPICS

LD201109 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 20 Feb 80 p 19 LD

[Tony Conyers report: "Thatcher in New Plea to Athletes"]

[Text] Athletes would seem to condone an international crime if they took part in the Moscow Olympics while the Russians remain in Afghanistan, Mrs Thatcher said yesterday. In a letter to Sir Denis Follows, chairman of the British Olympic Association the prime minister said that the Russians were already heralding the 1980 Olympic games as convincing proof of the general acknowledgement of the historical importance and correct foreign policy of the USSR, and of the huge services of the Soviet Union to peace.

"This is a foretaste of the way in which the Soviet Union will exploit to its advantage every aspect of the propaganda value of the Olympic Games." The government recognised the practical and constitutional difficulties involved in changing the present arrangements and was deeply conscious of the disappointment felt by British athletes. But they had "the same rights and the same responsibilities towards freedom and its maintenance as every citizen of the United Kingdom." The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan on a flimsy pretext and its military occupation of a sovereign country violated all principles governing relations between states and peoples. Until the murders withdrew, "for British athletes to take part in the games in Moscow this summer would be for them to seem to condone an international crime."

TURKISH SENATE PRESIDENT, OTHERS DEPART AFTER CELEBRATIONS

TA161844 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 16 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Turkish Senate President Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil returned to Turkey aboard a military plane this afternoon after attending the fifth anniversary celebrations of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The ground forces commander and the commander of the 1974 peace operation, Gen Nurettin Ersin, and the commander with Caglayangil on 12 February left together with him this afternoon.

In a statement at Tercan State Airport before their departure, Caglayangil said that they would never forget the hospitality shown to them in Cyprus. He said that during their stay they held contacts with state and government officials. He added that he listened to the views of all the political parties at the legislative assembly and that he had the opportunity to discuss his own views as well. Caglayangil expressed the hope that the Turkish Cypriots would spend thier future anniversaries in tranquility and full freedom. He congratulated the Turkish Cypriots for having achieved these happy days.

General Ersin expressed his great pleasure over attending the fifth anniversary of the Turkish Federated State. He said that they had been received with great interest and that he hoped to meet again in future anniversary celebrations.

In his turn, President Denktas pointed out that the visitors had brought a special meaning to the fifth anniversary celebrations. He said that seeing the visitors among them gave strength to the Turkish Cypriots, who needed that in overcoming the difficulties before them. President Denktas said: The motherland and the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus are two units which cannot be seperated. The freedom of the latter can continue only with the support of the former. This is obvious. The independence of the entire island is dependent on Turkey's guarantee. We live knowing this fact. Knowing this fact, we seriously look for peace. I believe that our visitors have seen this as well.

Our visitors also had the opportunity to see our social problems at first hand. We are confident that they will help us to solve these problems.

Caglayangil and his delegation were seen off from Ercan State Airport with a military ceremony. Present at the ceremony were President Denktas; the Turkish ambassador to Lefkosa [Nicosia], Inal Batu; the commander of the Turkish peace forces in Cyprus; Lt Gen Keaml Yamak; the president of the legislative assembly, Oguz Korhan; Prime Minister Cagatay; several ministers; the commander of the Turkish Cypriot security forces, Brig Gen Attila Erdoganv; several deputies; and military and civilian officials. RPP National Assembly whip Altan Oymen who had attended the celebration ceremonies also left aboard the same plane.

Minister of State Departure

TA151454 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1430 GMT 15 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Lefkosa [Nicosia], 15 Feb (AA)--Minister of State and Chairman of the Coordination Committee for Cyprus Ekrem Ceyhun returned to Turkey today after attending the ceremonies for the 5th anniversary of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

Before this departure, he attended a meeting at Salamis Bay Hotel on the Federated State's economic problems. He later told reporters: "It is our natural right to look for an order which will make the reliable and peaceful circumstances provided to the Turkish Cypriots by our peace operations permament."

Ceyhun continued to say, "There is no change in the basic principles of our Cyprus policy. Turkey is doing its best for a system where the two communities could co-exist under the shelter of a bizonal federation in security."

CYPRIOT, TURKISH TRADE UNIONS ISSUE JOINT STATEMENT

NC200918 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 20 Feb 80 p 1 NC

[Text of 14 February joint statement on the Cyprus question issued by PEO and Turkish labor unions]

[Text] The trade union organizations DISK [Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions--Turkey], PEO [Pan Cyprian Labor Federation] and DEV-IS [Federation of Revolutionary Workers' Unions--Turkish Cypriot] have held a meeting in Istanbul on the occasion of celebrations to mark the 13th anniversary of DISK and discussed the Cyprus problem. Guided by the principles of sincere comradely cooperation governing the relations among DISK, PEO and DEV-IS and by their decision to hold constant consultations on questions of common interest, the three organizations state the following:

1. They warmly and decisively support resumption of the intercommunal dialog on the Cyprus problem as the sole path to a peaceful settlement.

2. They believe that the intercommunal talks should aim at finding a lasting and mutually acceptable Cyprus solution that would safeguard the legal and fundamental rights of all citizens of the country.

3. They reject any solution that would lead to any form of enosis or annexation, any form of partition or separation, and support a solution which would lead to the establishment of an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, nonalined, democratic and bicommunal federal republic of Cyprus. They also reiterate their demands for the demilitariztion of the whole of Cyprus.

4. They call on all parties concerned to show restraint, persistence, prudence and flexibility so that the intercommunal talks may result in a solution that would put an end to the difficulties of the two communities and constitute the basis for a harmonious and peaceful coexistence between the Greeks and Turks of Cyprus.

5. They welcome the move being promoted with the initiative of the democratic forces of the two communities toward reconciliation and cooperation between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots; they also declare their intention and determination to continue their efforts in accomplishing this objective.

6. They decide to continue their contacts and consultations on the issue and take all the necessary measures to promote and realize this joint statement.

On behalf of DISK: (Mukbil Zirtiloglu), vice president

On behalf of DEV-IS: (Sefik Rifat), secretary general

TFSC GOVERNMENT IMPLEMENTS TAX RELIEF MEASURES

TA191923 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1730 GMT 19 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The government measures to relieve people with fixed or limited incomes were announced by the minister of finance, Mr Hakki Atun, at noon today. Mr Atun told a news conference that the cost of living allowance paid to civil servants on their basic salaries would be increased from 40 to 80 percent as of this month. He said that additional exemptions from income tax and reduced rates in lower brackets would bring considerable relief to people with fixed or limited incomes. He added that a married man with two children earning 135,000 Turkish lira a year would be exempted from this tax altogether.

The new measures would bring about a reduction of 45-50 percent in income tax for people who earned monthly salaries between 10,521 and 33,715 lira. Mr Atun said that measures would also be taken to increase the government's revenue and that a more liberal policy would be pursued on foreign trade.

Replying to a question, he said that the new salary increases would cost the government 1,000 million lira [words indistinct]. The government measures have been rejected as inadequate by the Turkish Cypriot labor federation, Turk-Sen.

TA NEA: WALDHEIM INSISTS ON HIS FORMULA FOR TALKS

NC160647 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 16 Feb 80 p 1 NC

[Text] At the end of next week--probably on Friday--UN Under Secretary General for Special Political Affairs Perez de Cuellar will undertake an urgent visit to Ankara, Athens and Nicosia within the framework of a new decisive effort by Waldheim to secure the resumption of the intercommunal talks by the first week of March at the latest.

It has been learned from UN circles that Waldheim has already sent work to the two interested parties in Cyprus and to Athens and Ankara that he is not prepared to accept conditions either from the Greek Cypriot or the Turkish Cypriots in connection with the formula he has conveyed, so that it will serve as a basis for the exploratory dialog that he has clearly defined as a necessary prerequisite for opening the way for a final Cyprus settlement at some later stage. Waldheim's positions have reportedly been favorably received by the Western quarters, which are already actively working for the adoption of the Waldheim formula.

According to the provisions of the Waldheim formula, if the exploratory talks are resumed they will basically deal with the following four questions:

1. the territorial,
2. the constitutional,
3. the return of the Famagusta inhabitants,
4. practical measures for the creation of a climate of trust.

In connection with point three, Waldheim has reportedly suggested that if the Famagusta inhabitants return, the city must be placed under the control of UN civilian and political authorities until a final solution of the Cyprus problems is reached.

In any case, circles of the Foreign Ministry have stated that the Greek Cypriot side has already made it clear that it accepts the Waldheim formula while the Turkish Cypriot side is inserting serious obstacles through a series of new conditions that make the effectiveness of the Waldheim initiative doubtful.

TO VIMA CALLS NEW ROGERS PLAN PRO-TURKISH

AT181325 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 17 Feb 80 p 1 AT

[Text] Rogers' proposals for Greece's return to the NATO military wing contain traps favoring the Turks. It seems the government has reached this conclusion after a careful study of the technical and other details that are included in the proposals.

Specifically, it has been learned that many of the arrangements General Rogers has proposed for the operational control of the Aegean are "point advantages" for the Turks because they allow them to "create mortgages" on the future by which they will be able to promote their demands in the air and sea areas.

Despite this, the government does not seem prepared to reject completely the new NATO proposals, but will continue contacts in absolute secrecy in hope of substantive improvement of the proposals by the alliance. The "optimism" that the NATO command might review its extremely pro-Turkish position is based both on Turkey's aggravated internal crisis and in the substantial increase in Greece's importance for NATO after Tito.

A veil of absolute secrecy covers the exact content of the recent Rogers' proposals, but according to existing reports these proposals do not constitute the alliance's "final plan" for Greece's return. This is one more reason why the Greek side hopes that there are margins for the "improvement" in the proposals.

Meanwhile, our correspondent in Bonn, V. Mathiopoulos, reports that last week it was learned in the alliance's seat in Brussels that Washington has informed General Rogers that Greece's return to NATO is an urgent matter.

The development in Tito's health was the cause for a demarche--it has not been ascertained whether it emanated from the U.S. secretary of state himself or senior State Department officials--asking for the finding of a suitable formula that will be acceptable to Greece.

At the same time, as our correspondent in New York, St. Evstathiadhis reveals, the United States and NATO already are using a new "channel"--in addition to the well-known U.S. aid program--to send arms and new weapons systems to Turkey, with the result that the balance between Greece and Turkey is being upset.

Specifically, they are using the NATO special center for military supplies in Luxembourg through which Turkey will receive by autumn 1980 military materiel worth $150 million, independent of the U.S. military aid for 1980 which has been set at $252 million.

REPORTAGE CONTINUES ON DISCOVERED TERRORIST GROUP

AT151320 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 15 Feb 80 AT

[Text] The Athens General Security has just announced further details on the underground organization discovered and on its program. Specifically it was revealed that:

Zirinis who is 37 years old, used the alias "Pappous" and was in charge of the extremist leftist organization known as the Marxist-Leninist-Peoples Authority since 1975. According to confiscated letters, as of 1975 the organization had at least two firearms in its possession. In the summer of 1978 Zirinis together with his friend, Tsabella Bertrand, who is 23 years old, and used the alias "Daphne," went to Lebanon, where they met with representatives of various organizations. They were then trained in the use of weapons and explosives.

In the summer of 1979 Zirinis conscripted various persons, members of the organization known as the Peoples Authority, whom he sent to Lebanon and elsewhere for training in the use of explosive weapons, for the purpose of forming a group to commit various crimes.

As revealed, they planned to blow up the U.S. Embassy in Athens and the residence of the American ambassador. They also planned attacks on police officers for the purpose of disturbing public order.

In November 1979 Zirinis held conferences in Athens with members of the group. They decided to publish a newspaper under the title NOVEMBER. In articles in the first two editions of the newspaper, Zirinis supported the murders of police officers Petrou and Stamoulis in Pangrati.

According to evidence collected during the preliminary investigation, the Zirinis group maintained contacts with one Palestinian and one Cypriot organization with which it cooperated on matters of military training and generally in the organization of sabotage, explosions, abductions and so forth.

Apart from Zirinis and Bertrand, the following were also trained overseas: Khristofis, Khatzakou and Pasevski.

All those arrested will be arraigned tomorrow on charges of violating Law 1,092 of 1938 on the press in conuunction with Article 4 of Law 774 of 1978 on suppression of terrorism and protection of the democratic regime. They are also charged with violation of articles 183, 184 and 185 of the criminal code.

Further Details

AT171513 Athens NEWS in English 17-18 Feb 80 p 4 AT [Excerpts] Greek security police have uncovered and disbanded a Marxist-Leninist subversive organization, some of whose members were trained at Middle East commando bases.

The group, called "Front of Popular Initiative," was discovered while security police were investigating the murder of two police officers by unknown gunmen in Athens a month ago, the announcement said.

The announcement further said that the group was linked with other extremist groups in Greece and abroad, and that "certain of its members who in the past had belonged to the Marxist-Leninist organization Popular Power, had received military training in light weapons, explosives, and commando operations in a Middle East country and exchanged information with similar foreign organizations.

The search of the premises used by the terrorists as their headquarters brought to light documentary evidence of their intention to blow up the embassies of the United States, Israel, Turkey, Cyprus and West Germany, to ambush and assassinate these countries' ambassadors and to sabotage the U.S. military bases in Greece. The captured documents also revealed that there were plans for a series of political assassinations of, among others, the ministers of national defense, justice, and public order, and for the bombing of ERT, the Greek radio and television network. The Front of Popular Initiative had established links with the extremist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, and with the Cypriot Marxist-Leninist Organization of Cyprus, another terrorist group.

FRG FINANCE MINISTER CONCLUDES TALKS ON AID, DEPARTS

TA191236 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 19 Feb 80 TA

[Text] FRG Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer left Turkey after concluding his official talks in Ankara. The federal finance minister said that the recent economic measures taken by Turkey were constructive and added that efforts would be made to insure the necessary support for the success of these measures. Matthoefer, who is in charge of coordinating the economic aid to be extended to Turkey, held a news conference at the Foreign Ministry today at 1030. Finance Minister Ismet Sezgin and Turgut Ozal, the under secretary of the Prime Minister's Office and the deputy under secretary of the State Planning Organization, as well as other officials were also present at the news conference.

In his statement Matthoefer said that during his visit to Ankara he had exchanged views regarding Turkey's need for economic aid. Pointing out that the amount of aid to be extended to Turkey would be finalized at a meeting of the OECD countries to be held in Paris on 25 March, Matthoefer said: I believe that the amount of economic aid to be extended by the OECD to Turkey this year will be larger than last year. I also believe that the World Bank, IMF, the EEC as well as international banks will extend Turkey more economic aid under better conditions than last year.

Noting that a new standby agreement would be signed between Turkey and the EEC, the federal finance minister said that the amount of the loan to be extended to Turkey by this agreement would also be increased. Matthoefer expressed his satisfaction with developments that provided for increased program and project loans to be made available by the World Bank.

Referring to efforts to postpone Turkey's foreign debts, Matthoefer said that this issue would be reconsidered by the OECD countries in March. He added that efforts would be made to postpone Turkey's debts to certain FRG banks under suitable conditions.

The visting minister said the new regulations on foreign investments represented a positive development because it did away with much red tape.

Replying to a question by a journalist, Matthoefer said that the amount of aid to be extended to Turkey would only be finalized at the OECD meeting on 25 March and added that he hoped that this amount would be enough to provide a great boost to the Turkish economy. He added that during his visit to Ankara he was briefed on the needs of the Turkish Armed Forces and that the urgency of these needs were reviewed in the meetings.

Replying to another question, Matthoefer said that no political strings were attached to aid being extended to Turkey. Matthoefer left Turkey at 1215 after he concluded his news conference.

SECURITY COUNCIL RECOMMENDS EXTENSION OF MARTIAL LAW

TA191440 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 19 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The National Security Council has decided to recommend to the government that it lift martial law from Sivas and impose it in Izmir and Hatay. The Council of Ministers is now meeting to discuss this recommendation.

The National Security Council held its monthly meeting under the chairmanship of President Fahri Koruturk at Cankaya Mansion. The meeting began at 0930 and lasted about 5 hours. It was attended by Prime Minister Demirel, Chief of the General Staff Gen Kenan Evren, ministers who are members of the council, the commanders of the armed forces and the National Security Council secretary general.

A statement issued by the council's Secretariat General following the meeting says: At this meeting, the National Security Council made a general assessment of domestic developments, of the public order situation throughout the country, of the implementation of martial law and of the security measures. This assessment has shown that effective results have been achieved during the past few days in preventing acts of anarchy, terrorism, divisionism, and robbery which are aimed at the Turkish Republic's unity and indivisibility, at national unity and solidarity and at the country's peace and security. However, it has been established that, despite the legal measures and the planned operations against the illegal organizations, the illegal incidents and activities are spreading from the martial law areas to certain other provinces. The National Security Council believes this situation constitutes a state of emergency and considers it necessary to have a state of emergency law passed as soon as possible.

The National Security Council has decided to recommend to the government that it extend by 2 months, except in the Province of Sivas, the martial law now in effect in 19 provinces in accordance with Article 124 of the Constitution, and that it declare martial law in Izmir and Hatay--all this to insure complete peace and security throughout the country by enabling the continuation of the effective measures taken and to be taken against all kinds of illegal activities aimed against the free democratic system--envisaged by our Constitution--and against the unity of the country and of the nation.

The National Security Council has confirmed once again the necessity for all constitutional and professional organizations, including the labor unions, to rally around the principles of the republic and of Ataturk, to place themselves on the side of the state and within the framework of the existing law, and to assume their responsibilities in the fight--a national issue--against all kinds of illegal activities.

Government Approves Extension

TA191832 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 19 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The Council of Ministers has adopted the National Security Council recommendation to extend the existing martial law by 2 months, except in Sivas, and to impose it in Izmir and Hatay as well. The Council of Ministers convened at 1700 today. A statement issued at the end of the two hour meeting said:

At this meeting, the Council of Ministers reviewed the martial law recommendation of the National Security Council, which met on 19 February 1980. It decided to submit to the Turkish Grand National Assembly its decision to extend by 2 months, except in Sivas, the martial law now in effect in 19 provinces.

This decision will take effect on 26 February 1980. It will also submit its decison to declare martial law for 2 months in Izmir and Hatay as of 0800 on 20 February 1980. The purpose is to counter all kinds of situations or acts of negligence as envisaged by Article 124 of the Constitution.

The statement says that the Council of Ministers also reviewed the issues discussed at the meeting with the martial law commanders on Sunday, 17 February. The statement then says: It has been decided to execute all the measures raised [presumably at the meeting with the martial law commanders] as soon as possible with a view to achieving results in the struggle against terrorism, anarchy, divisiveness and destructiveness and to insure that the efforts prove effective.

The Council of Ministers decision to extend martial law by 2 months is 18 provinces and to declare martial law in Izmir and Hatay will be discussed at the joint session of the Senate and National Assembly at 1400 tomorrow.

EVREN CALLS FOR MORE POWER TO MARTIAL LAW COMMANDERS

TA151611 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1600 GMT 15 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Erzurum, 15 Feb (AA)--Chief of Staff General Evren called for more legal powers to martial law commanders and increases in sentences if martial law was to deal effectively with terrorism. The army had not asked for martial law, but had been obliged to administer it he said.

Speaking at the close of winter exercises by the army near Erzurum, Evren deplored the labeling of such exercises as "fascist" by some of the press. "The armed forces do not discriminate among citizens," he declared.

The chief of General Staff also noted state radio and television had given the wrong impression about the new regulations concerning school courses on national security. Instruction on national security had been going on in the schools since 1947, he pointed out.

It was unfair to charge the armed forces on account of these courses, Evren said, asking "is it fascism to instill the love of flag and country? Should we be expected to play discotheque music instead of marching songs?"

It was no good to try to discredit the military, he said and called for "constructive criticism" instead.

Further Statement

TA151517 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1505 GMT 15 Feb 80 TA

[Text] Erzurum, 15 Feb (AA)--Chief of Staff Gen Kenan Evren said in Erzurum the armed forces could deal conclusively with terrorism at home within a short time, if they so desired.

Speaking after returning to Eruzurum from observing winter exercises by the army, Evren said it was possible to root out terrorism, on the right and left, within a month, but added the armed forces refrained from bloodshed.

He called on all political parties and the press to join hands [words indistinct] martial law authorities to deal with the enemy."

ISTANBUL MARTIAL LAW COMMAND BANS EKONOMI POLITIKA

TA191815 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 19 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The First Army and the Istanbul Martial Law Command have announced that the newspaper EKONOMI POLITIKA has been banned. The First Army and Istanbul Martial Law Command's communique No 36 reads as follows:

1. Since the beginning of martial law, the Istanbul public prosecutor has opened 21 investigations and the Istanbul martial law prosecutor has opened ten investigations regarding officials of the newspaper EKONOMI POLITIKA. They have done this on the grounds that, in its various issues, the newspaper has indulged in communist and Kurdish propaganda, that it has openly provoked and encouraged crime, that it has praised actions considered crimes by the law, and that it has openly insulted and derided the state's military forces. It has been observed that, despite the verbal and written warnings of the command--which places great value on the freedom of the press and which is acting very carefully and patiently to protect it--the concerned officials of this newspaper have insisted, especially during the past few days, on continuing their provocations, which disrupt public order and general security. Consequently, the publication of this newspaper has been banned indefinitely in accordence with Article 3C of the Martial Law Act No 1,402.

2. All security forces are responsible for the implementation of this ban.

[Signed] Gen Necdet Urug, First Army and Istanbul martial law commander.

SCHMIDT LEAVES DECISION ON OLYMPIC BOYCOTT OPEN

LD210958 Hamburg DPA in German 0806 GMT 21 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Even after the final decision by the United States on a boycott of the Moscow Olympics, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has left Bonn's decision on this question open. The chancellor said last night to the Bonn Foreign Press Association that the Soviet Union should still be given the opportunity to create the conditions which would make it possible for all states to participate in the games, alluding to the demand for a withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

Schmidt said that yesterday's decision by Washington to boycott the games was not surprising. He pointed out that individual states had until May to decide on this question.

Pointing to the question of the Olympics, the chancellor again warned the Soviet Union against any attempt to split the Federal Republic from its allies. He has several times had the occasion--including during his latest meeting with Soviet Ambassador in Bonn Vladimir Semenov--to say to Moscow clearly and plainly that there is no possibility of such a split, and that this should also not be attempted. Schmidt was convinced that this stand also applied to the other European allies.

The chancellor announced that the Federal Government will increase the current defense budget, but it is not yet clear by how much. The government will decide in the coming months on a supplementary budget which, in addition to higher defense expenditures, will contain Bonn's assistance for NATO partner Turkey.

On the recently renewed request by the U.S. Government that Bonn increase its defense expenditures by 3 percent in accordance with the NATO decision, Schmidt said that the Federal Republic has in recent years always made this contribution. He left it open whether the other allies had done so too. In comparison with its population the Federal Republic has more trained and available reserves than other states of the alliance. It is a mistake to imagine that one could replace soldiers with money.

The chancellor expressed his concern that the Soviet Union, with the deployment of two airborne divisions and fighter aircraft in Afghanistan, had "considerably extended" its radius of action in Central Asia. This represented a shift in the strategic balance. At the same time, Schmidt expressed the view that out of its own interest the Soviet leadership is not interested in an escalation of the Afghanistan conflict and that like the U.S. Government it wants to continue the arms control talks at various levels.

Schmidt assessed as a signal for Eastern readiness for a continuation of the disarmament talks the proposal submitted by Polish party leader Edward Gierek for a European disarmament conference. Schmidt proceeded from the premise that this proposal had not been made without Moscow's approval. The Soviet Union has also signaled its interests in such a conference.

Schmidt also gained the impression from Gierek's statement that the East could imagine further talks on arms control without a ratification of Salt II. He appealed to Moscow, as did President Carter, to state "publicly to the world" that the Soviet Union also wants to adhere to the stipulations of Salt II without ratification.

The Soviet stand recently confirmed by Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko that East-West talks on European medium-range missiles are impossible without canceling or suspending the NATO decision on the manufacture and deployment of new missiles in Europe is not seen by Schmidt as final, but as an "intermediate stage" of Soviet policy in this sphere. At the present time, feelers are being put out as to where, how and under what conditions talks on this could start. The chancellor expressed the view that through its (?"outstanding advanced arming") with SS-20 rockets and backfire bombers, the Soviet Union has a considerable supremacy in this sphere in Europe which would last for a few years. It is Schmidt's view that this period is especially suitable for talks.

VANCE, GENSCHER HOLD BONN PRESS CONFERENCE

LD201923 Hamburg Domestic Service in German 1800 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] The United States and the Federal Republic are agreed on the essential elements of Western policy designed as a long-term response to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Statements to this effect were made by Secretary of State Vance and Foreign Minister Genscher at a press conference in Bonn this afternoon.

Foreign Minister Genscher stressed at the press conference that the Federal Republic continues to consider it its task within the Western alliance to safeguard equilibrium in Europe. He added that all possibilities for talks with the USSR must be explored in order to avoid an escalation and to enable the continuation of detente policy.

HONECKER, GAUS DISCUSS RELATIONS IN EAST BERLIN

LD201554 Hamburg DPA in German 1348 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Text] East Berlin--Guenter Gaus, head of the FRG's permanent mission in East Berlin and state secretary, was received today by Erich Honecker, chairman of the GDR State Council and SED chief. This was confirmed by the permanent mission's spokesman. The meeting took place at Honecker's request.

The conversation took place in a friendly and constructive atmosphere and lasted 1 hour. Among the subjects under discussion was the state of present negotiations between the two German states. The date for the talks was agreed on at Honecker's request. No details were given on the content of the talks. The last meeting between Gaus and Honecker took place on 3 December last year.

Bonn government circles have taken the talks, held at Honecker's request, to be a "signal" showing how the SED chief has reacted to the latest Federal Government statement on relations between the two German states. There have been reports that Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has postponed two large GDR projects worth more than DM3 billion, saying they require further study.

Government spokesman Klaus Boelling reaffirmed on Sunday Bonn's strong determination to step up the policy of detente between the two German states and the dialog between the two governments in spite of the difficulties in the international situation.

Boelling added that the government would continue to discuss all projects with the GDR that might ease the lives of people in the two German states. There could be no question of the chancellor having halted the two large projects, as they were not ready for decision. There could be no question of a new ice age in intra-German relations, Boelling added. He stressed that the Federal Government was "determined to carry on."

It was assumed in Bonn today that besides the two future projects, Gaus and Honecker had also discussed the two governments' planned, but smaller, agreements on traffic improvements. The signing of these projects--the expansion of the motorway at the Wartha-Herleshausen border crossing, a two-track extension of a railway track near Berlin and the expansion of the Mittelland Canal on GDR territory for Europe-class ships--is slated for March. By all accounts, Gaus did not convey a message from the chancellor to the SED chief.

ADN, which confirmed the meeting, described the atmosphere as "businesslike and openminded."

Schmidt-Honecker Conversation

LD201736 Hamburg DPA in German 1604 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpt] Bonn/Berlin--In a telephone conversation yesterday Chancellor Schmidt and SED Secretary General Honecker noted that despite public speculation there was no question of "misunderstanding, let alone irritation, in relations between the German states." This was stated in Bonn today by State Secretary Boelling. Schmidt and Honecker discussed by telephone last night--Honecker's meeting with Bonn's permanent representative in the GDR, State Secretary Gaus--the present state of negotiations and soundings currently taking place between the two states.

FINANCE MINISTER MATTHOEFER COMMENTS ON VISIT TO TURKEY

DW201325 Baden Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1815 GMT 19 Feb 80 DW

[Excerpts from reporter Piller interview with Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The cabinet has asked you to help Turkey. You called the 2-day visit to Ankara a fact-finding visit. Who informed whom?

[Answer] Most of all the Turks informed us about their situation, their plans to fight inflation, develop their economy and to establish export capacities. We jointly discussed procedures for organizing a new aid program within the OECD framework, for trying through the IMF to mobilize foreign currency for Turkey within the framework of a new assistance credit and Turkish quotas. The problem of conversion still must be resolved. There were also some detailed problems, such as mutual cooperation in combating heroin smuggling.

[Question] What hopes do you have for helping Turkey?

[Answer] Turkey is rich in natural resources; the Turks are diligent people having natural resources; the Turks are diligent people who like to work. In the past 20 years they have achieved a real growth rate of 7 percent. Chances are not bad that the efforts of the Turkish Government will be successful with some foreign aid.

[Question] I was under the impression that you had many reservations with regard to the Turkish request for military aid. Was that impression wrong?

[Answer] We have not yet decided. Certainly Turkey, owing to its geographic location, is a main pillar of NATO, as people say. It would be desirable if its fine army were appropriately equipped to fulfill NATO's goal: to maintain deterrance with the help of a division of labor and use this time to pursue a reasonable peace policy.

[Question] This is just what very much worries Greece, Turkey's neighbor. You also had talks in Greece. Did you convince the Greek side that aid for Turkey is in the interest of NATO and the Western world?

[Answer] Greece is really interested in an economically successful Turkey; it wants to have a politically, economically and socially stable neighbor. As regards future military aid, we will, as before, involve both NATO partners in a balanced way.

[Question] Why was this task given to the finance minister, of all persons, since it would equally pertain to the minister for economic cooperation or the defense minister, for example?

[Answer] It must be considered in this connection that the finance minister can better assess the limits of a German contribution than others. We are working simultaneously in the IMF, and we have discussed these problems in the financial council of the European Community. After assessing the facts, he who is handling all these matters at present, namely the finance minister, had to take over this task also.

Further Comment

LD201800 Hamburg DPA in German 1450 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Bonn--Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer believes that Turkey "is facing an economic disaster," which could place the country and NATO in an extremely difficult situation. Matthoefer, who talked over the weekend with representatives of the Greek Government and opposition about renewed Western economic aid for this NATO partner [Turkey], states this today in an article for the SPD press service. Matthoefer, who is in charge of this latest aid program of the OECD, today informed the government of his talks to date.

In his opinion, the new aid program should do "more, both qualitatively and quantitatively" than the special action last year totaling around 1.5-1.6 billion marks, of which the German share is just 380-400 million marks. Matthoefer believes that an economic readjustment in Turkey and a recovery program are necessary. The Western OECD countries, other donor countries and international organizations, the IMF and the World Bank should draft a 5-year program of credits and debt rescheduling as well as contributions to Turkey's military security.

Matthoefer, who provides no details on the extent of this aid, writes that economic health is a prerequisite of Turkey's remaining a stable NATO outpost; but this cannot be achieved by arms deliveries alone. Turkey's significance for the Western alliance from a foreign policy and security viewpoint is undisputed and quite clear to everyone in the aftermath of the Afghanistan events. He emphasized that because of its traditional close friendship ties with Turkey, the Federal Republic particularly is called upon to participate in this aid.

USSR ORDERS ADDITIONAL NATURAL GAS PIPES

LD201102 Hamburg DPA in German 0922 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Text] Duesseldorf--Mannesmann has received an order from the Soviet Union for delivery this year of 700,000 tons of large-diameter pipes. Thanks to this and existing orders, the Muelheim/Ruhr large-diameter pipe plant of the Mannesmann pipe complex should be working at full capacity throughout 1980, Mannesmann reported in Duesseldorf today. The pipes will mainly be 56 inches in diameter and 15.7 and 18.7 millimeters thick. The new Soviet order continues a series of similar deals begun in 1970. The pipes will be used for carrying natural gas. According to Mannesmann, the complex delivered 700,000 tons of pipes to the Soviet Union in 1979 within the framework of these deals.

SYRIAN MINISTER IN PARIS EN ROUTE TO AFRICAN TOUR

JN211044 Damascus Domestic Service in Arabic 0915 GMT 21 Feb 80 JN

[Text] Paris--Faruq ash-Shar', [Syrian] minister of state for foreign affairs, stated that the purpose of his tour of seven African states is to bolster Arab-African cooperation and to explain the developments in the situation in the Arab region, particularly following the normalization of relations between the As-Sadat regime and the racist Zionist entity, and the negative effects of such a process on Arab and African security. It is to be recalled that Faruq ash-Shar' arrived in Paris as a member of the Arab League delegation on its way to Niger, the beginning of an African tour commissioned by the 10th Arab summit, which was recently held in Tunis.

STIRN REPORTS ON CARIBBEAN TOUR, REGIONAL POLICY

LD201041 Paris LE FIGARO in French 15 Feb 80 p 5 LD

[Irene Jarry report: "Stirn: Increased Cooperation in the Caribbean"]

[Text] "France wants a policy in the Caribbean spearheaded by the French West Indies as a stabilizing element in this area, which otherwise will remain very fragile," Secretary of State to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Olivier Stirn declared yesterday at a press conference, after returning from a tour of the Caribbean which included Barbados, Grenada and Trinidad and Tobago.

The minister continued: "All these states want increased cooperation with France which shows that the image of our country given in this part of the world by Guadeloupe and Martinique is a good one." Moreover, Mr Stirn was keen to stress that, during the cordial discussions which he had during this trip, the French presence in this zone was never questioned.

According to Mr Stirn, France must not cooperate "solely with political regimes identical to our own. To preseve stability and cooperation, France must speak to everyone." This means both to Trinidad and Tobago which, like Barbados, faces the West, and to Grenada, whose Marxist-inspired regime is close to Cuba.

In concrete measures he declared that Foreign Ministry loans for cultural and technical cooperation to the Caribbean in 1980 will increase from Fr2 million to Fr6 million. In the contruction field, France is reported to have won several contracts, in particular in Tobago: natural gas development, the construction of a methanol factory, and land development.

On security in the region, Mr Stirn remarked that "the instability developing in neighboring Central America" is a real danger for the Caribbean. On Cuba, the minister stated that there was no denying that Havana "is seeking to extend its influence. I do not believe that it can honestly be called indirect interference, but it is a fact that Cuba has influence in this region," Mr Stirn added.

Whatever else might be involved, the minister affirmed, there is no question of France's ratifying a defense agreement with other states. There will be no concerted action with the two countries very much in evidence in the Caribbean, namely the United States and Britain, to guarantee the area's security. "On the contrary," the minister explained, "France believes that this would cut the Caribbean into two zones and would be an added factor would for instability."

ADMIRAL VIEWS SOCIAL CONSTRAINTS ON DEFENSE SPENDING

LD210749 Paris LE MONDE in French 17-18 Feb 80 p 6 LD

[Unattributed report: "We Certainly Do Not Have the Means To Protect France Completely"]

[Text] According to fleet Vice Admiral Jean Accary, who is Toulon Port admiral and commander in chief for the Mediterranean, "We certainly do not have the means to protect France completely in the dangerous world in which we live." He added: "We could find ourselves deafeated, losing a war without really having fought, with our country plunged into disaster."

Fleet Vice Admiral Accary, who was deputy chief of staff responsible for Navy General Staff operations before taking his post in Toulon in January 1979, was answering questions asked by the monthly OBJECTIF SUD (note: OBJECTIF SUD, February 1980) on France's role in the world and the role of the navy in the Mediterranean which he commands.

"If France were to extract 60 million tons of oil from French soil, in other words, half its consumption, it would he infinitely less vulnerable than it is now. Imagine," Admiral Accary said, "that in 1980, following events which we do not foresee but which are not impossible, France's oil supplies were to be reduced, not to nothing but to half its needs. I do not know what effects that would have on our entire economic life. It is not out of the question that France would suddenly have several million unemployed--who could not be paid benefits as they are now--with all the spiraling effects you can imagine which would certainly be catastrophic.

"When people talk about war, they think mainly about military operations with reference to the past. However, we could find ourselves defeated, having lost the war and with the country plunged into disaster, without really having fouhgt. Therefore when people talk about French national defense they should first look at the state of the world. It is increasingly dangerous. Since there has never been a war which has been as people had imagined, I do not know what would happen if, by misfortune, we were to be involved in a military conflict. On the other hand, we can make a fairly accurate evaluation of the armed forces we would have to face. The technical level of these weapons is formidable. France is positioned well in some respects but less well placed in others. Our country cannot emulate the technical level of the superpowers in all spheres.

The commander in chief of the Mediterranean went on to explain: "The superpowers devote a relatively much larger proportion of their resources to defense than France. Should we follow their example and, for instance, double our defense spending? That would certainly place our defense system in a more comfortable position in this excessively armed world in which we live. But is this possible? Just imagine the position of a French Government which decided to double military spending. It is impossible in our economic and social system. You ask me if we have the means? We have what we can afford within the French economic system. We do not have the means to protect France completely in the dangerous world in which we live. To have such means all French people would have to take stock and say: 'We must now pay the insurance premium and accept harsh sacrifices.' However, even if they did, I do not see how it could be achieved in a short time without really turning our economy upside down. Let us put ourselves in the government's shoes. It cannot really do anything different. Changing direction, gradually increasing the share devoted to defense spending--this can only be done slowly," Admiral Accary concluded.

MARCHAIS WARNS FRG AGAINST OLYMPICS BOYCOTT

NC202006 Paris AFP in English 1958 GMT 20 Feb 80 NC

[Text] Paris, Feb 20 (AFP)--French Communist Party leader Georges Marchais today warned West Germany against spearheading any U.S. move to boycott the Olympic games in Moscow. Mr. Marchais told a press conference: "Every possible effort should be made to see that the Olympics are held in Moscow."

U.S. President Jimmy Carter was "speculating heavily" on the attitude of European countries in the affair," Mr Marchais said. "I am not threatening anyone," he said. "But people abroad should realize that France cannot remain indifferent if West Germany becomes the spearhead in Europe for a boycott of the Olympics."

French Communists, he continued, could not allow West Germany, with its responsibility from the Second World War, to "assume the responsibility for prejudicing the peace and the youth of the entire world." West Germany and Japan had disqualified themselves from the issue of the Olympic games, he asserted, adding: "Imperialism was (?against) holding the Olympics in Moscow. It fears that 5 to 600,000 people may realize on the spot the realities of socialism in the Soviet Union."

GREMETZ ON CPSU-PCF COMMUNIQUE, DIVERSITY OF EUROCOMMUNISM

LD181433 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 9 Feb 80 pp 1, 6 LD

[Article by PCF Politburo member Maxime Gremetz: "Toward New Relations Among Communist Parties"]

[Text] The entire press concealed the real content of the communique which concluded the meeting between the PCF and CPSU. Of course, a great fuss was made about this meeting but, paradoxically, nothing was written about the joint statement, which is an original and important document.

It is easy to understand why this communique is not to the commentators' liking. They had predicted alinement with Moscow and a communique which merely mentioned points of agreement. However, that was not the case.

Moreover, this type of operation is now common. For instance, during the meeting between E. Berlinguer and L. Brezhnev a few months ago, the major segments of the media used the joint text published at the end of that meeting, which did not mention the existence of differences, to conclude likewise that the PCI was alined with Moscow.

It is therefore easy to understand their confusion on reading the PCF-CPSU communique which, while noting many areas of agreement on several international questions, clearly mentions the existance of different opinions between the two parties. Yet that is an unprecedented fact. Indeed, this is the first time that the CPSU has signed a joint text in which it clearly recognizes the existence of differences with another party while advocating increased cooperation.

Moreover, L'HUMANITE published the full text of G. Marchais' speech to the CPSU delegation, in which the party secretary general clearly discussed the question of the fundamental differences of opinion between us and the CPSU on the role and nature of democracy in building and developing socialism.

Therefore the new and important nature of the joint communique creates important prospects for the future development of PCF-CPSU relations.

This is the result of constant efforts by the PCF to assert a new concept of relations among communist parties. It is also a consistent application of the 22d and 23d Congress decisions on this subject. Indeed, the 23d Congress stated:

"These new relations (among communist parties) can only by established with clarity. They presupposed that account is taken of both the many important common objectives and the existance of differences, which there would be no point in concealing."

This need for new relations among communist parties is based on our analysis of the international communist movement and on our own experience of cooperation among communist parties.

In this connection it is important to remember the lecture given by Jean Kanapa at the Central School, which constituted a fundamental contribution to the party's thought.

Indeed, in the last decade the communist movement has seen the rise of a great diversity of situations and political options within it. While the communist parties were long regarded as "detachments" of this movement, times have now changed, and it is these parties whole which constitute the international communist movement. In addition to this great diversity there are differences--some relating to fundamental questions--which imply that the communist parties must make an effort to make the necessary changes in their relations in order to adapt them to the realities of our time.

The Berlin conference of European communist parties in 1976 in our view clearly showed, by its long and difficult preparation, that this type of meeting, working on an excessively general agenda and concluding with the adoption of a fairly exhaustive joint document, is outdated.

In other words, the changes which had appeared within the communist movement were out of joint with a certain inadequate theory and practice of relations among parties.

Although we advocated establishing new relations among communist parties, we did not merely expound on the question but worked resolutely to establish these new relations.

The communiques which we signed with the GDR's Socialist Unity Party of Germany in November 1978 and then with the Bulgarian Communist Party in July 1979 bore the stamp of a new spirit openly recognizing the existence of differences. That was a noticeable change, and the Marchais-Tito communique published last July noted "the growth of positive and democratic trends" within the world communist movement.

Therefore the Moscow meeting and the adopted text constitute an important step. The latter highlights the great diversity of forms in which socialism is being built and stresses that "the paths toward socialism are just as diverse, and new countries are progressing toward socialism by original and unprecedented paths." That in itself is recognition that it is through each country's particular circumstances that each communist party must, in full independence, seek the specific answer to the questions raised by its struggle to defend the workers' interests and to bring about a socialist transformation of society. The diversity which characterizes the international communist movement is a sign that the communist parties are rooted in their country's national situations. That is why the joint communique states that "the process of building socialism rules out any preestablished model and any copy of another country's experience."

This recognized diversity among independent and mature parties having different positions on certain questions is, therefore, enriching for the whole communist movement. It must not oppose class solidarity in the struggle against imperialism, on pain of seriously damaging the revolutionary movement. On the contrary, our era requires increased solidarity among communist parties on the basis of a new view of the communist movement's unity. This means that solidarity and joint action on great objectives of struggle must not be seen as the cement binding a monolithic and uniform communist movement.

On these bases cooperation among communist parties become more fruitful and more effective, frank debate can take place calmly and responsibly, rejecting ostracism, and this leads to better and deeper mutual understanding.

Of course, we must not think, now that this important joint communique has been signed, that these new relations among communist parties are established once and for all, for at least two reasons.

First, because a text signed by two communist parties cannot bind the whole communist movement, and second, because cooperation among fraternal parties requires not only sound texts but also the development of a new practice which we are determined to urge even more strongly.

Having said that, it is nonetheless true that the content of the OPSU-PCF communique represents an undoubtedly new basis for developing fruitful cooperation between the two parties.

Current events have recently provided an illustration of these relations.

For instance, on several major international questions such as the deployment of new American missiles in Europe, we think, like the CPSU, that resolute action must be taken to urge NATO to suspend the implementation of its dangerous decision, and we also have the same viewpoint on many problems relating to peace, disarmament and international cooperation. At the same time we clearly condemned the measures just taken against A. Sakharov.

The coexistence of many shared views and differences characterizes not only our relations with certain parties in socialist countries but also our relations with other communist parties, including the so-called Eurocommunist parties. For instance, at the same time we agree with the PCI on the fundamental point of democracy, which we both regard as a means to, and objective of socialism, we note the existence of differences, such as our difference of opinion on events in Afghanistan.

This is nothing new or surprising or even particularly dangerous to Eurocommunism. One of the characteristics of Eurocommunism is to regard the diversity of situations and party stances as an enrichment and differences of opinion as facts which should be openly recognized--not seen as obstacles to the development of cooperation among communist parties. [paragraph continues]

In this connection it is always surprising to hear talk of the "principles," "rules" and even "doctrine" of Eurocommunism.

That is an aberration which reflects an inability to reason without using an outmoded centralist and dogmatic view of relations among communist parties. Or perhaps this desire to turn Eurocommunism into a fixed dogma is only aimed at preparing "a first-class burial" for it. In any case, those who regularly announce the death of Eurocommunism are wasting their time, and the future will show Eurocommunism's vitality.

Backed by the positive developments which we observe in relations among communist parties, as illustrated by the Moscow meeting, we intend to pursue our efforts and our action to develop our cooperation and joint action with all communist parties on these gradually emerging new bases.

VANCE ARRIVES IN ROME, TO MEET WITH LEADERS

LD202340 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance arrived in Rome this afternoon. (Empedocle Maffia) reports:

The U.S. secretary of state has just left the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and is now going to the presidential palace where he will be received by President Pertini. Then he will have a working dinner with Foreign Minister Ruffini, whom I have just seen here in the Foreign Ministry in the prime minister's office this evening. Afterward he will have coffee with Prime Minister Cossiga, who will be freed in the meantime from his commitments at the Christian Democratic Congress.

In a brief statement before leaving the Foreign Ministry, the secretary of state said: We have discussed the position taken up by the nine countries in Rome yesterday and noted a general agreement. I am not in Europe to arrange short-term tactics but to coordinate our policies to reach long-term agreements which concern the future and all the years of the eighties. These are very important consultations in which the different viewpoints can find a common synthesis.

Earlier, Italian Foreign Minister Ruffini recounted to his U.S. counterpart the results of yesterday's meeting, which expressed deep concern over detente, the invasion of Afghanistan and the subsequent interruption in the process of detente. At this point, referring to the proposal made by Great Britain and endorsed by all the nine European countries, he called for a positive solution through the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan and a neutral status for Afghanistan, which would protect that country from involvement in the struggles between the great powers.

Vance's visit to Rome is certainly not easy, both for him and the whole U.S. administration. In the afternoon already hints of disagreement arrived from Paris, Vance's next stop. In Bonn, from the text of the press conference given by Vance and his German counterpart, there was an agreement but not, it was underlined, an identity of views. So much for generalities, perhaps there will be something more concrete later this evening.

ZACCAGNINI, COSSIGA SPEAK ON FINAL DAY OF DC CONGRESS

LD202338 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The 14th Congress of the Christian Democratic Party [DC] will conclude tonight. After a speech by Cossiga and a reply by Zaccagnini the delegates will vote to elect the new National Council. Angelo Haver reports from the Palace:

We have reached the closing stage of this difficult and important 6-day congress of the DC in the Sports Palace. After a debate which, as we have reported, had moments of great tension and hard clashes, the closing will come in a sincerely united mood.

Warm cheers have been given to the secretary, who is giving up his post by free choice. At this moment Zaccagnini is delivering his reply, which is a precise and strict confirmation of the line presented at the opening of the congress but, above all, a message of farewell. Zaccagnini is leaving his responsible post but is not relinquishing his role as a militant member of the DC, inside and outside the party, stressing the positions which he regards as corresponding to the interests of the country.

[Begin Zaccagnini recording] I recall the historic solidarity which has been established with these forces, the fundamental choice of representative democracy and Italy's place in international life. I certainly do not imagine that the union with the forces of revival, established by De Gasperi, which then met with opposition in some circles tempted toward an alliance with the rightwing, should now have an outlet which would reduce the role of this party. [passage indistinct] [end recording]

Before Zaccagnini's address, Premier Cossiga spoke. He has been mentioned as a probable candidate for the party Secretariat together with Piccoli and Forlani. Cossiga, therefore, did not (?touch upon) any of the burning issues at the center of the debate. Let us hear the first important passage in his speech concerning his present government.

[Begin Cossiga recording] This government, as you know, has been called a government of truce. I must tell you, however, with great sincerity that if there has been a truce I wish to tell you today clearly and frankly, I never noticed it. [end recording]

Cossiga then dealt with the subject of terrorism and the country's great economic difficulties. As to the first point, he inserted a fond rememberance of Aldo Moro. On the question of the Communist Party he said he has favored the policy of confrontation but also, in view of greater and wider cooperation, without the DC dropping its ties with the other democratic forces.

Now the delegates are going to vote on the political documents and elect members of the National Council, which will in turn elect the new secretary within 20 days as required by the statutes. This is a phase which may cause commotion, disputes and divisions in the congress. The Presidium will shortly (word indistinct) political motions. It is known that the Zaccagnini and Andreotti factions have their own document which will command 42 percent of the votes. The substance of this political line is that it calls for negotiations with all parties of the constitutional alinement to ascertain whether conditions exist at present for joint participation in the government. Andreotti described them as exploratory negotiations.

The other DC components, the Dorotei, Donat-Cattin, Fanfani and other factions, have presented individual lists and political documents. However, they endorsed a joint preamble which, as regards relations with the Communist Party, registers the existence of differing positions on foreign and economic policy which do not make cooperation in government possible. This morning Fanfani, president of the Senate, made a speech along lines corresponding substantially to the above-mentioned preamble and which are accepted by the Dorotei faction.

NATTA STRESSES PCI DESIRE FOR GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

LD201345 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 18 Feb 80 pp 1, 4 LD

[Unattributed report on PCI Secretariat member Alessandro Natta 17 February closing speech at PCI National Schools Conference in Rome: "Natta: Do Not Seek any More Excuses"]

[Text] Rome--Closing the third PCI Schools Conference, Comrade Alessandro Natta stressed that the plan proposed by the Communists for this sector stems from the need to resolve a major national problem involving the needs and orientations of the younger generations. It demonstrates the Communists' desire to take part in the country's leadership. The definition of such a plan is another answer to those who, in order to conceal the conservative opposition, maintain that in fact the PCI does not want to become involved in a government experience. This is an extraordinary stunt. We are sure, he added, that the participation of the PCI and of the entire workers movement in the government is now a national demand. A force such as ours cannot and does not intend to shirk this task if the preconditions for it exist.

But some people consider it extraordinary for the PCI to set conditions with the presumptuous aim of transforming Italian society. There must be no misunderstandings on this point, Natta stressed. What point would there be in our participating in the government unless we set ourselves the objectives of thorough change which are essential if the country is to emerge from the crisis?

We do not underestimate the step which Deputy Zaccagnini took when he asserted at his party congress that the Christian Democratic Party [DC] cannot "shoulder the responsibility of accepting the proposal of a government with Communist participation" but that neither can it shoulder the responsibility of "rejecting it a priori, without prior verification of the political conditions which we consider inalienable." This is undoubtedly a new and important factor. It is an approach which might appear correct, because obviously nobody--least of all ourselves--could accept the composition of a government unquestioningly, without verifying the mutual positions. But the striking point about Zaccagnini's speech--and we do not know whether the DC Congress will accept his line as we are already witnessing harsh clashes--is the absence of any self-critical reflection on the responsibility for the present state of affairs. As if the DC had not been for the past 30 years the central leading political force, with a role which it misses no opportunity in vindicating. The speech shows no awareness of the underlying reasons for the termination of the majority of democratic solidarity. It continues to ignore the fact that that termination took place when it became clear that there was no intention of realizing the objectives of regeneration ratified in the agreements. Now the conditions termed "inalienable" suggest that the unprejudiced negotiations are being considered with a view to a further rejection of a national unity government.

It seems that Zaccagnini became frightened because we are talking about elements of socialism, as if we were proposing a collectivized society, the abolition of the market system and so forth. We, Comrade Natta added, are not now proposing the transition to socialism, but we cannot ignore the gravity of the crisis which the country is experiencing or evade the need for a thorough regeneration which demands broad outlooks and great courage because, it is true, it is a matter of challenging old balances and privileges.

LISBON COMMENTS ON PRAVDA'S CRITICISM OF POLICY CHANGE

LD210035 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1930 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Text] The Soviet newspaper PRAVDA said today that one can smell mothballs in Lisbon. The newspaper committed to writing its impression that in Lisbon old political trunks of the past are being opened and that antidemocratic, anticommunist and anti-Soviet doctrines and precepts are being spread.

These remarks, contained in an editorial, are the Kremlin's reaction to recent deflections in Portugal's foreign policy. While on the political front we might expect to witness more than a (?freezing) in the development of bilateral relations, this reply from Moscow might entail consequences of another nature, as RDP [Portuguese broadcasting administration] Moscow correspondent Carlos Fino reports:

It is now clear that the USSR without wanting to pursue a policy intent on rupture, will choose to wait and see the outcome of the coming fall parliamentary elections in Portugal before making long-term and far-reaching decisions in the sphere of bilateral relations. Such a stance might be gaged from the decisions which the USSR already appears to have reached regarding trade with Portugal. It would continue with the trade agreements signed with the various individual Portuguese firms, but there is much reticence on a meeting which the USSR-Portugal joint commission on cooperation is soon due to hold.

PCP LISTS OBJECTIONS TO SA CARNEIRO GOVERNMENT POLICY

LD191435 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 14 Feb 80 p 2 LD

[Apparent text of Portuguese Communist Party (PCP) "Political Commission Note on Government Activity"]

[Text] 1--The Sa Carneiro government's activity fully confirms the PCP Central Committee's warnings on 25 January.

In little more than a month since its inauguration, the Sa Carneiro government has caused a massive deterioration in the living conditions of the workers and middle classes and sectors, has stepped up the offensive against the April [1974] gains, has launched an assault on the state media and has created a climate of conflict and confrontation with other state bodies.

The Popular Democratic Party [PPD, former name of Social Democratic Party]-Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] government is thus proving itself, through its attitude and activity, a great danger profoundly threatening the population's vital interests, the realities of the Portugal of April, the citizens' freedoms and rights, national dignity and independence and the democratic and constitutional system.

To combat this antipeople, antidemocratic and antinational policy of the Sa Carneiro government is an inalienable democratic, popular and patriotic imperative.

2--The Sa Carneiro government is attacking the agrarian reform with particular fury and savagery, unleashing a shocking wave of illegal, arbitrary and despotic acts, violating the judgements of the supreme administrative tribunal itself, implementing decisions revoked by the previous secretary of state and distributing to the farmers livestock and machinery and, in its short period in office, over 10,000 hectares of land belonging to the collective production units and cooperatives.

The PPD-CDS government is systematically pursuing a plan to bankrupt and rapidly destroy the collective production units and cooperatives, is threatening the Alentejo and Ribatejo farm workers with the specter of hunger and unemployment and is acting criminally against the interests of agriculture and the national economy.

To halt the Sa Carneiro government's attack on the agrarian reform is a central imperative in the defense of the Alentejo and Ribatejo farm workers' heroic and unselfish work and of the interests of the nation and democracy.

3--The Sa Carneiro government is profoundly affecting the population's living conditions through its disastrous economic and social policy. With the large fuel and energy price increases (gasoline, diesel, fuel oil, town gas, butane, propane and electricity) and the major food price increases (bread, milk, cereal products, edible oil, margarine, and so forth), the PPD-CDS government is heaping difficulties onto Portuguese families' lives and facilitating a general price increase.

In an attempt to conceal and disguise the unpopularity and disastrous consequences of this policy, the Sa Carneiro government is stepping up its propaganda and demagogic pronouncements. The combination of measures which the government pompously announced last Saturday as a "battle against price increases," far from reducing the difficulties caused by the recent price increases, demonstrates, on the contrary, the PPD-CDS government's intention to exacerbate them by provoking pay limits, increased dismissals, the boycotting and stifling of the public sector of the economy and increasing difficulties for small and medium traders and by protecting the big capitalists' profits.

To halt the PPD-CDS government's attack on the working people's living conditions is an imperative to spare the Portuguese people greater and unjustified forms of suffering and deprivation and to defend their profound and legitimate aspirations to a better life.

4--The Sa Carneiro government is pursuing a policy aimed at submitting the workers to fierce exploitation so as to diminish their real incomes in violation of their rights--a policy dictated exclusively by the employers' interests. By stopping publication of about 40 collective labor agreements affecting the interests of some 500,000 workers, the PPD-CDS government proves that it is trying to sponsor and encourage the employers' boycott of collective bargaining so as to nullify prerogatives and rights gained and to prevent the workers from even minimally restoring their purchasing power, which has been affected by the cost of living increase.

To halt the Sa Carneiro government's attack on the workers' interests and aspirations is a prime imperative to insure the satisfaction of their demands and to immediately thwart the plan to step up the savage exploitation and destruction of their rights and gains.

5--The Sa Carneiro government has set in motion a global operation to impose a stifling control on the state media. This constitutes an affront to the country's democratic conscience and a very grave threat to freedom of expression and information in Portugal.

By means of a series of appointments based on political favoritism, the PPD-CDS is trying to guarantee its sectarian and totalitarian domination of the state media, so as to insure the manipulation and distortion of public opinion, to silence the democratic forces' criticisms, to stifle the expression of popular dissatisfaction and to transform powerful news media financed by public funds into a propaganda machine at the service of the government and the parties that support it. [paragraph continues]

The reactionary attack on the state media is also a prominent part of the PPD-CDS government's plan for remaining in power by illegal, fraudulent and antidemocratic means.

To halt the Sa Carneiro government's attack on the state media's pluralism and independence is an immediate imperative in the struggle to defend freedom of expression and to insure that the next elections take place under truly democratic conditions.

6--The Sa Carneiro government is pursuing a foreign policy of humiliating alinement with imperialism's most aggressive circles, maliciously violating constitutional principles, limiting the diversification of economic relations, profoundly damaging national interests and gravely jeopardizing the respect, heed and attention which Portugal managed to gain following the 25 April liberating process.

The PPD-CDS government, against the aspirations and feelings of the majority of the Portuguese people, is effectively participating in activities aimed at restoring a cold war climate and involving Portugal in an escalating aggravation of international tensions and threat to peace and the detente policy, thus subjecting the country to increasing interference and pressures from imperialism in the nation's life and decisions.

To halt the Sa Carneiro government's offensive to accelerate EEC membership and subject the country to the forces of war is an urgent patriotic imperative in defense of national interests and the cause of detente, peace, cooperation and friendship among the peoples.

7--There is at present a profound need for a vigorous, combative and determined policy on the part of the working class, the workers, all antimonopolist classes and sectors and all Portuguese democrats against the Sa Carneiro government's antipeople and antidemocratic policy.

An intensification of the popular protest and the mass struggle is a precondition for halting the development of this latter policy and for containing, dismantling and finally defeating the subversive PPD and CDS plan.

To this end, the PCP appeals to the workers, to all men and women of democratic feelings to lend combative and mass support to the days of protest and struggle announced by the unitary trade union movement and other unitary workers organizations for 14 February. Thus publicly asserting their unswerving desire to tackle the Sa Carneiro government's dangerous, antipeople and antidemocratic policy and to defend their living conditions and the freedoms, national independence and democratic system enshrined in the Constitution.

The Portuguese people are not bound to see their aspirations, rights and gains obliterated by the PPD-CDS government. The government's reactionary offensive is not inexorable.

The forces on the side of freedom and democracy are stronger, more powerful and more active. They have on their side the cause of the people's and the nation's interests, the authority of the 25 April ideals and the strength of democratic and constitutional legality.

With unity, enthusiasm, determination and confidence, onward in the great days of protest and struggle, in defense of 25 April and against the Sa Carneiro government's activity.

Lisbon, 11 February 1980.

LA VANGUARDIA: ECONOMIC ISSUES PRIMARY IN SUAREZ-HERRERA TALKS

LD211113 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 19 Feb 80 p 12 LD

[Unattributed report: "Suarez: 'Intensify Relations With Venezuela'"]

[Excerpt] Venezuelan President Herrera Campins and Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez conversed for 10 minutes Saturday before the dinner which the Spanish authorities held for their guest in Tenerife. According to the Spanish prime minister, the two leaders exchanged information on the current situation in the Arab world. Mr Suarez left Tenerife to return to Madrid at 1100 Sunday, while President Herrera Campins left for Caracas at about 1400.

Madrid, 18 February--Investments in Venezuela and the supplying of crude were the most important issues broached during the brief meeting between the Venezuelan president and the Spanish prime minister Saturday evening in Tenerife.

The two leaders extensively reviewed the state of bilateral relations, particularly with respect to the unresolved economic agreements. According to statements made by Herrera Campins before leaving Spanish territory, no alteration of the quadripartite agreement signed by Spain, Cuba, Venezuela and the USSR, whereby the USSR supplies Spain with 2 million tons of crude per year in return for Venezuela's supplying Cuba with the same amount, is envisaged.

As far as Spanish investments in Venezuela are concerned, the latter country continues to maintain its usual caution, although--according to President Herrera--relations between the two countries are currently very cordial.

Mr Suarez was not particularly explicit when talking about his meeting with the Venezuelan president. "We reviewed the principal problems affecting today's world and international tensions," he stated in the early hours of Sunday morning, after the dinner in honor of the distinguished guest. "He told me a little about the results of the contacts which he has held with all the OPEC member countries, and I in turn told him about the impressions which I received during my recent tour of several Middle East countries. We also reviewed bilateral relations, on which the relevant ministers also held talks." In particular, it seems that specific technical problems in bilateral economic relations were discussed by Minister of Industry Carlos Bustelo and Venezuelan Investment Fund Chairman Diaz Bruzual.

Before returning to Madrid, Mr Suarez added: "It is necessary to intensify relations and cooperation between Spain and Venezuela to the utmost, in the complementary relationship between the two economies and also in all other fields." He also stated that he has recently held regular telephone conversations with the Venezuelan president.

INA INTERVIEWS COMMUNIST PARTY SECRETARY GENERAL

JN191330 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1225 GMT 19 Feb 80 JN

[Text] Madrid, 19 February--Santiago Carrillo Solares, secretary general of the Spanish Communist Party [PCE], has expressed his admiration for Iraq's nonalined policy.

In an interview with the INA Madrid correspondent, Solares said that Iraq's policy is positively contributing to establishing the bases for peace in the world and consolidating the nonalined movement role.

He reiterated his admiration of Iraq's development policy in placing the oil resources at the people's service. He praised the relations between the Arab Socialist Ba'th Party and the PCE, adding that the Ba'th Party is expressing the Arabs' needs, interests, culture and distinguished characteristics.

The PCE secretary general described the Camp David accords as a betrayal of the Palestinian people and world public opinion. He asserted that his party condemns these accords because they ignore the Palestinian people's rights. He reiterated the PCE support for the Palestinian people's rights and struggle to determine their future. He added that world peace will remain threatened so long as the issue of Palestine remains unsolved.

The PCE secretary general called upon Europe to pursue an independent policy toward the Arab cause, asserting that Europe could play a positive and effective role in bringing about a just solution to the Arab and Palestinian cause.

He positively appraised the Spanish foreign policy toward the Arabs. He said that this policy stems from Spanish traditions and realities. He added that there are strong historical ties between Spain and the Arabs and also huge possibilities of cooperation between the two sides.

The PCE secretary general strongly criticized the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, adding that the Soviet Union has harmed its reputation and created various problems for itself. He described the intervention as a complete failure. He said that the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan has greatly affected the European security and cooperation conference scheduled to be held in Spain. However, he called for holding the conference on schedule.

The PCE secretary general stressed the importance of nonintervention in the domestic affairs of the Third World countries. He said that many of these countries are passing through difficult circumstances and are suffering from oppression and tyranny.

The PCE secretary general called for neutralizing Spain and keeping it away from any bloc or camp. He opposed Spain's accession to NATO and supported its membership in the EEC. He criticized any negotiations harming Spain.

He stressed the need to develop Spain's relations with the Third World on all cultural, trade, economic and political levels. He warned against the great pressures which are being brought to bear on his country by the United States with the aim of dragging it onto the U.S. side. He called for the liquidation of all the military bases that belong to the two camps in Europe.

The PCE secretary general called for setting up a new world economic order and for equitable relations with [as received] the oil-producing countries and the Third World countries.

He asserted that the prices of oil and crude materials should be compatible with the prices of exported and technological commodities. This measure, he added, would conflict with the interests of the multinational companies. He pointed out that these companies are the only ones benefiting from the unjust economic order.

He supported Iraq's views with regard to the oil marketing and trade exchange, adding that this should take place among governments.

He called for forming a joint economic commission between the EEC and the oil-producing countries to define the prices of exchanged commodities, including raw materials and technological commodities.

FINNISH, FRENCH AIDES DISCUSS DISARMAMENT, TRADE TIES

LD201113 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 Feb 80 p 5 LD

[Amber Bousoglou dispatch: "Committee of Experts To Examine Various Proposals for a European Disarmament Conference"]

[Text] Helsinki--"My talks with the Finnish foreign minister [Vayrynen] have been frank, cordial and productive," [Foreign Minister] Francois-Poncet said Thursday, 14 February, during a press conference a few hours before his return to Paris.

Mr Vayrynen and the French foreign minister have decided to pursue consultations on the disarmament question through a committee of experts, before Mr Giscard d'Estaing's visit to Helsinki 2 and 3 June.

"Even if it does not fully support it," Finland has shown some interest in the French plan for a conventional disarmament conference in Europe which would be open to the 35 countries which signed the 1975 Helsinki agreements. Giscard d'Estaing suggested such a conference at the United Nations in June 1978. The Finns, who want nuclear disarmament to be examined too, have sent a "plan" on this subject to the 35 signatories of the Helsinki agreements so that the question of holding such a conference might be examined before the meeting of the followup conference on the Helsinki agreements in Madrid next fall.

This document is based on Finland's proposal to the United Nations in the fall. This proposal is in keeping with the theory held by the USSR and its allies on this question and takes into account the wish expressed many times by the Finnish president for north Europe to be denuclearized. At present the Finns want all proposals to be examined to see whether it would be possible to hold such a conference.

It is clear therefore that "French and Finnish views are for the most part parallel but not identical," as Francois-Poncet said, recalling Finland's policy of active neutrality and France's membership of the Atlantic alliance. However, for the Finns, the importance of the French minister's visit also lies in what they call "this French year, which will be culminated by President Giscard d'Estaing's visit to Helsinki."

The interlocutors also agreed on the need to raise economic and cultural exchanges to the level of political relations, even though neither side is too worried about France's foreign trade deficit due to its purchase of paper and paper pulp from Finland. Mr Deniau's visit in April should enable the foreign trade minister to seek possible opportunities for further cooperation. The telecommunications, computer and electronics sphere interests Finland, as does French expertise in the nuclear energy sphere. France, which hopes to develop its forestry industry, is interested in Finnish methods of exploitation and pollution prevention.

Cultural exchanges will be discussed during Finnish National Education Minister Par Stenback's visit to Paris at the beginning of April. Francois-Poncet welcomed the efforts being made by the Finns to improve the still modest place which the French language has in education. Finally, the minister paid a glowing tribute to President Kekkonen, saying: "We greatly value the president's moral and political authority in the world today."

SWEDEN

DEFENSE AIDE URGES BUDGET INCREASE, VIEWS OVERFLIGHTS

LD151551 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 5 Feb 80 p 5 LD

[Henric Borgstrom report: "Swedish Defense Costs Must Be Allowed To Grow"]

[Text] Storlien, 4 February--"Swedish defense expenditure ought to increase in real terms," Defense Under Secretary Sven Hirdman said at the Nation and Defense Conference in Storlien Monday [4 February], and he pointed out that most NATO countries in West Europe, including Norway, are increasing their defense expenditure by 3 percent annually.

The great powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, are increasing their arms expenditure by 4-5 percent annually, and this year Finland is increasing its expenditure by as much as 10-12 percent because of a large accumulation of arms orders. (After accounting for inflation in all instances.)

"Sweden has not become poorer but richer throughout the postwar period. At the same time the proportion spent on defense has fallen from 5 to 3.5 percent of GNP (our total resources)," Hirdman said.

"In our own long-term interest we ought to strive for a return to a higher level of defense expenditure," he said.

The reduction in defense expenditure has affected mainly the refresher exercises, which have been reduced 50 percent, and important orders for materiel have had to be canceled or postponed. The longstanding political insecurity on the aircraft issue has also contributed to the doubt both abroad and at home concerning our desire and ability to maintain a skilled defense industry, Hirdman said.

His chief, Defense Minister Eric Kronmark, has for several years, right up to last week, stressed the need to buy new light attack aircraft. Following Supreme Commander Lennart Lung's proposal last Friday to leapfrog the light attack aircraft generation, Under Secretary Hirdman was now stressing instead the great importance of the fighters.

"In order to be able to withstand the threat of the great powers' aircraft and defend our neutrality we must have an effective fighter with the capability for rapid deployment over our whole territory. Perhaps it is this aspect of our defenses to which our Nordic neighbors attach most importance. It is vital for them that we allow no one to overfly Sweden," he said.

Hirdman also commented on the recent debate on low-flying cruise missiles.

"In international law the matter is simple: We are dutybound to intervene against any violations of our airspace from both aircraft and low-level cruise missiles. Intercontinental missiles which travel high up in space and above the real airspace are thus considered not to imply a violation.

"What is important in international law is, however, not always technically feasible. If there is one cruise missile we might probably shoot it down with the aid of an effective air force. Yet if there are hundreds of them, which is conceivable in a nuclear war when the missiles are intended to be used, we could hardly prevent them if, contrary to all expectation, they were to pass over Sweden.

"But then total nuclear war would also have rendered Swedish neutrality rather theoretical," Under Secretary Hirdman said.

PARLIAMENT CONSIDERS ISSUE OF TELEVISING OLYMPICS

LD201813 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1434 GMT 20 Feb 80 LD

[Excerpts] The government is to consider whether or not to give advice to the BBC over the televising of this summer's Moscow Olympics. Foreign Office minister of state, Mr Douglas Hurd, told a foreign affairs select committee today this would have to be a consequence of the prime minister's advice to British athletes to boycott the games.

There is some confusion about who will control pictures from Moscow, and Mr Hurd said the prospect of a marchpast of athletes giving an "eyes right" to President Brezhnev would be an "intolerable signal sent across the world." He told the committee: "The business of control is very important." British athletes would be "involuntary actors" in a play staged for the benefit of Soviet authorities.

Concern about the nature of Olympic broadcasts arose after Tory MP for Meriden Mr Iain Mills, a member of the BBC Advisory Committee, said he understood that all the "primary shots would be controlled by the Soviet authorities." If there was any unpleasantness or any incidents, they would not be shown, he said, "and if the BBC is not there this is a very serious matter."

Mr Hurd said Mr Mills' worry was "absolutely correct." Mr Hurd added: "Now that the government has decided on its advice to the Olympic organisation there will be a number of consequential matters we shall have to go into with care." The government could not give orders to the BBC or ITV, he said. "But it is one of the matters we shall have to consider."

Mr Hurd reassured MPs that the government had no intention of taking away athletes' passports or "bulldozing" athletes or sporting organisations into boycotting the games. "We are merely giving our advice as to where we think the British interest lies."

The government hoped that if the boycott received sufficient support it would "humiliate the Russian authorities in the eyes of its own people," Mr Hurd said.

BNOC RAISES NORTH SEA OIL PRICES

WA201230 London REUTER in English 1652 GMT 18 Feb 80 WA

[Text] London, Feb 18, REUTER--The state-owned British National Oil Corporation (BNOC) said today it had raised its North Sea oil price by four dollars a barrel to 33.75 dollars.

The increase had been expected. It forms part of a move to bring the price of North Sea oil into line with that of similar North African crude. British Petroleum last week announced it was increasing its North Sea oil price, also to 33.75 dollars a barrel.

At least 51 per cent of oil from the British sector of the North Sea goes to BNOC under agreements on drilling rights. BNOC had waited to announce a price rise until another company had done so because the British Government did not wish it to be a price leader, industry sources said.

HOUSE PRESIDENT: UN ENVOY LIKELY TO VISIT REGION

NC201950 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1830 GMT 20 Feb 80 NC

[Excerpts] House President Mikhailidhis stated today that it is likely that a representative of the UN secretary general will visit our region in order to exert more intensive efforts for the resumption of the intercommunal dialog. Speaking at Kato Amiandos, Mr Mikhailidhis reiterated that the Greek Cypriot side has furnished proof of its willingness to cooperate. Mr Mikhailidhis went to Kato Amiandos to study the problems of the area resulting from the operation of the Amiandos mine. Mr Mikhailidhis chaired a conference that was attended by House members and leading figures of the area.

Referring to the political issue, the House president expressed concern over the recent provocative statement by Turkish Senate President Caglayangil. He added: Despite the negative climate created by such statements we will remain firm in our position and we will work within the framework of reason for a lasting and fair Cyprus solution. He stressed: We denounce every effort aimed at preventing, delaying or even undermining the secretary general's efforts for holding a constructive dialog.

DENKTAS RECEIVES UN REPRESENTATIVE GALINDO-POHL

TA210923 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 21 Feb 80 TA

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, met with the special UN representative in Cyprus, Mr Galindo-Pohl, this morning and conferred with him for some time. Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Kenan Atakol, the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Umit Onan and the special adviser of the UN representative, Remy Gorge, also attended the meeting.

Replying to reporters' questions after the meeting, Denktas said that the UN secretary general was exerting efforts in order not to allow the recent UN resolution, which the Turkish Cypriot side cannot accept under any condition, which is contrary to the sovereignty and rights of the Turkish Cypriots and which is nothing more than a tool of Greek Cypriot propaganda, to cast a shadow over the intercommunal talks. Describing these efforts as a positive development for the Turkish Cypriot side, Denktas added that if these efforts are successful, then one of the greatest obstacles to the resumption of the talks will be eliminated. Denktas said that the Greek Cypriot side should put an end to its attacks against the Turkish Cypriot side while posing as the government of Cyprus, and that securing equality at the talks is one of Waldheim's duties. Denktas added: An uninterrupted attack is continuing in Italy, Brussels, in the tourism sector and in other economic spheres. Why? Because they claim to be the government of Cyprus. They should renounce this false claim. Otherwise, they cannot show good will by returning one percent of the monetary rights they have been stealing from the Turkish Cypriot community for 16 years.

I KATHIMERINI VIEWS NATO'S PRO-TURKISH POLICY

[Editorial: "Everyone Ought To Know"]

[Text] Secrecy, which is understandable at least for this moment, continunes to shroud both the text of proposals submitted by NATO senior officials to the Greek government via the chief of the National Defense General Staff, General Gratsios, on our country's return to NATO's military wing, as well as the position and reaction of the Greek Government toward these proposals. Yet reports indicate that the Greek side dies not accept the conditions of the new Rogers plan for reasons related both to our country's sovereign rights over its national territory as well as to our national security, which is related to the above.

We do not want to proceed further on this issue since we do not know in detail or officially, anything about the content of the proposals or the reaction of the Greek Government. We do, however, have the impression that what has been reported on the matter does not fundamentally differ from the truth. No matter what the outcome of the issue might be, we feel the obligation to reiterate for the umpteenth time certain fundamental views, thoughts, principles and conclusions on the entire issue.

First, Turkish claims upon Greek territory, both Hellenic and Cypriot, are not something coincidental or of the moment. They are a complete and permanent policy, which is part and parcel of the entire complex of Turkish "national" goals and aspirations. It would, therefore, be rather improbable that Turkey would suddenly withdraw these goals and aspirations. It even becomes more improbable since now Turkey is accustomed to a scandalous favoritism and tolerance on the part of NATO officials toward these Turkish goals and aspirations--we might even say toward their approximate adoption--as can be deduced, among other things, from the two "Haig plans" which have already been rejected by Greece.

Before Turkey cancels its claims it would be necessary to have the determined and "direct" demand of the alliance as a whole--particularly of those stronger elements of the international arena upon which Turkey totally relies and who are in a position to make themselves heard--since these goals and aspirations have absolutely nothing to do with the interests and requirements of the alliance.

We wonder, if such a position could ever be adopted by the alliance and its leading partners. We do not know.

What we do know--and which everyone ought to know--is that Greece will not accept any, not even a possible, "imposition" even if this is attempted by "force," on its legal and accepted rights over its security and sovereignty, over the very existence of Hellenism at large. It will not deviate--and we repeat this for the umpteenth time--from its present position or from the criterion which inspires it. Consequently, Greece will not accept any "deviations" from the essence of the matter; in other words, it will not accept any "gilding" of artfully submitted proposals that do not respond to the essence of legal and established Greek rights.

We do not overlook the fact that, among other things, it may also be attempted to annul, by sleight of hand, assurances and promises (made from both sides of the Atlantic) about preserving the Greek-Turkish balance of power through the method of "dividing" military and economic aid. [paragraph continues]

It is both acceptable and understandable that the West should consider--and this is its own right to do so--that helping Turkey establish itself economically serves Western interests in the entire area. At the same time, however, it is clear that Greece does not desire the economic weakening and suffering of the Turkish people or of any other people. State budgets, however, are integral and no one can prevent the channeling of certain funds, granted as economic aid, to military expenditures. There must be specific guarantees on this which must remain under control. On the other hand, if the West is truly interested in Turkey's economic recuperation and in closing the rift in NATO's southeast wing, then the first thing it must demand from Ankara is to withdraw its military presence in Cyprus and to curb its costly military preparations which are directed exclusively against Greece and not against any "defined" or accepted enemies of the alliance.

The question of economic aid to Turkey is, on the one hand, related to the balance of power between Greece and Turkey; on the other hand, however, it gives the West a unique opportunity and ability to solve the Greek-Turkish dispute and the entire crisis in the area.

The well-known "financial supporters" of Turkey, however, are wrong if they imagine that Greece is a "sure thing" under any circumstances which allows them to adopt or support Turkish demands and positions by stressing the importance of the Turkish factor to the West. Greece has value as well as importance (geopolitical, strategic, etc) at least equal to that of Turkey, and any possible loss of Greece would be catalytic for the power infrastructure of the Atlantic alliance (if not to say of the entire West) in this delicate area of the world.

The scandalous and unjustified tolerance toward the unacceptable and unfounded hegemonic views of Turkey over Greek territory, both Hellenic and Cypriot, understandably cultivated anti-Western feelings among the Greek people, which could also lead to the creation of a similar political situation during forthcoming elections, or even before them.

The leaders of the Atlantic alliance should take notice of an Athens dispatch in the New York TIMES because they may find themselves facing surprises which may be painful to them.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA WARNS NATO OF GREEK WITHDRAWAL

AT201736 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 19 Feb 80 pp 1, 15 AT [Text] Prime Minister Karamanlis indirectly warned Washington of Greece's full withdrawal from NATO and, with elections in 1980, of the possibility of an "anti-NATO" PASOK coming into power, through statements made by his close aides to the New York TIMES, which obviously echo the views of the Greek prime minister.

Specifically a "close aide" of Karamanlis told the New York TIMES correspondent in Athens:

"It may be decided within the next few months whether Greece will remain in or withdraw from NATO for good."

The possibility that "general elections will be held in Greece this year" was also stressed in the same report, which attributes the relevant statement to government officials.

Mention is also made of the possibility that this election may be won by the "anti-NATO socialists" under A. Papandreou, and of the efforts made for Greek reconfinement within NATO after the third attempt--as it is described--by General Rogers, which reached a critical point last week, according to the New York TIMES correspondent.

Reply to Rogers

According to ELEVTHEORTIPIA reports from circles close to the government, a possible negative reply to General Rogers proposals will in all probability be given by next Wednesday. This new rejection of NATO's proposals will in all probability contain views for "improving" certain points which the Greek side does not accept. The content of the Greek proposals was not known.

It is, in any case, characteristic that the report of the American newspaper stresses the statement by a close Karamanlis aide, that:

"President Carter ought to know that the loss of Afghanistan and Iran are 'peanuts' by comparison to a possible loss of Greece."

The ELEVTHEROTIPIA correspondent in New York, P.S. Makrias, filed the following report in connection with the New York TIMES dispatch.

"General elections will possibly be held in Greece this year or, at the latest, by next year. The anti-NATOists of Andreas Papandreou could possibly win these elections, according to statements by Athens government officials to the New York TIMES correspondent, Paul Anastasi."

According to this correspondent the uncertainty over Yugoslavia's future after Tito as well as internal Greek political affairs have helped strengthen the position of Athens in Washington.

He then adds the statement of a close Karamanlis aide that, "NATO and the Americans are obviously too busy with Iran, Afghanistan and the strengthening of Turkey, as their new bastion in the Middle East, to understand the even graver dangers in our country. They fail to take into consideration the Greek mentality and Greek political trends as well as the fact that within the next few months it will be decided whether Greece will remain in or withdraw from NATO for good. President Carter must know that the loss of Afghanistan and Iran will be peanuts by comparison to a possible loss of Greece."

It is in any case characteristic that a dispatch of the official ATHENS NEW AGENCY from New York mentions that the New York TIMES carried a dispatch by Paul Anastasi from Athens which stresses that the importance of Greece is far greater for President Carter than the loss of Afghanistan and Iran and that he must understand this very well.

[Text] The Turkish Grand National Assembly has approved the extension by 2 months, except in Sivas, of the martial law now in effect in 19 provinces, and the declaration of martial law in Izmir and Hatay. The prime minister's petition on the declaration of martial law in Izmir and Hatay was adopted by 309 votes to 218. The petition on the extension by 2 months, except in Sivas, of the martial law now in effect in 19 provinces was passed unanimously.

Gulcugil said that, despite the martial law which has been in effect for 14 months, widespread violence directed against free democratic rule and fundamental rights and liberties could not be totally prevented.
